With all possible desire to retain a belief in his innocence, we are confounded by such contradictions. Of one thing only are we sure: that, unless Mr. Beecher shall now make good his denial before a court of law, and satisfactorily explain what seems to be a third element in his already published words,—namely, a manifest self-accusation in the court of his own conscience,—his influence for good is turned to infection, and his great fame to greater infamy. The day for candid confession is past; he must now make good his denial. He cannot appeal now, like David, to the world's generous forgiveness of a guilty passion bitterly repented of; he must clear his skirts beyond all cavil, or stand before all eyes as the vilest clerical hypocrite that ever preyed on an unsuspecting community. May he indeed pass safely through this ordeal by fire, and live to do a nobler work than ever before! But his innocence can never be satisfactorily established now except through the open court, where testimony can be sifted and witnesses compelled to attend. "Dignified silence" has proved a most disastrous policy thus far; cunning evasion will prove a still worse one in the future. If Henry Ward Beecher is indeed an innocent man, and has any friends who would wisely defend him, this farce of an "Investigating Committee" will be dropped at once. Closed doors, secret sessions, garbled and doctored reports, manifest special pleading, refusal of offered testimony and ostensible inability to obtain testimony which is known to be most vitally important—all these things have destroyed in advance, for all but the credulous and pre-convinced, the whole value of this whitewashing committee's verdict. Let Mr. Beecher submit to the common lot, and no longer affect to stand above the level of common men; let him put no trust now in his general reputation, but go at once where alone his purity can be thoroughly vindicated in all eyes—to the public courts of his native land. Time was when a single frank word would have killed this hateful scandal; to-day nothing will kill it but the verdict of an impartial jury of twelve men, rendered according to due forms of law.

THE CHURCH TAXATION QUESTION.

The Boston Liberal League, as the readers of THE INDEX know, determined early in 1873 to devote their efforts to the repeal of the laws in this State which exempt church property from taxation. In the autumn it circulated a free tract on the subject to the extent of twelve or fifteen thousand copies, obtained many thousands of signatures to a petition to the Legislature, and through its Executive Committee (consisting at that time of Messrs. R. H. Ranney, H. B. Storer, and F. E. Abbot), with the efficient cooperation of the Hon. Moses Kimball, secured the appointment of a Joint Special Committee on the subject from the two Houses. This Legislative Committee held a series of seven public hearings, which were fully reported in THE INDEX; and, on the strength of their report, the Legislature passed a resolve authorizing the Governor and Council to appoint a commission of three persons, "to inquire into the expediency of revising and amending the laws of the State relating to taxation and the exemptions therefrom." Under this resolve the following gentlemen have recently been appointed Commissioners: Mr. Thomas Hills, Chairman of the Assessors of the city of Boston, Professor Julius H. Seelye, of Amherst College, and Mr. James M. Barker, of Pittsfield. These Commissioners sit during the recess of the Legislature, have authority to call witnesses, and are to report during the first week of the next session. A sum not exceeding $5,000 is provided to meet expenses in taking evidence; and proper compensation of the Commissioners is fixed by the Governor and Council. The last Legislature also directed that new and authentic returns should be made of the ratable value of all property in the State now exempted from taxation, on or before the first of October; and that these returns should be incorporated in his next annual report by the State Tax Commissioner. The reports of the Commissioner and of the special Commission above named will be awaited with great interest.

THOUGHTS BY THE SEA-SIDE.

YORK, Me., July 21, 1874.

DEAR MR. EDITOR:—

I have been very neglectful of THE INDEX of late, amid a pressure of other cares; and now, in the relaxed indolence of the sea-shore, will you accept a gossipping letter which will not tax your readers' brains during the dog-days? We radicals keep on the stretch a little too much, and it does not hurt us to lie down on the rocks, and let the tides of Nature flow in and around us at their own sweet will.

It is easy to feel a trust in our precious doctrine of the immanent God, as we look out over these soft, green hills, or on the broad expanse of the blue waters; and the rest and strength we thus gain will help us to keep our faith, when we renew our struggle with the squalor of cities, and the dark problems of our social life.

What a happy time the children have on the beach! That infinity of sand is priceless wealth to them, out of which everything can be made. It is like the unknown life before them; every good is possible, and, though each hoped-for joy may be swept away as relentlessly as the tide destroys the forts and wells so carefully built or dug, yet, like them, each has helped to build us up in health and strength, and we have the real value and power of many a purpose and hope which seemed to come to naught.

Roaming over the hills and in the barren fields, we find the raspberries reddening and the blueberries ripening for our refreshment. Emerson says: "Thinkest thou no wisdom to our berries went?" It may be a childish feeling; but I never pluck a berry by the way-side but I taste in it the motherly goodness of God, scattering these precious globules of healthful pleasure so broadcast, that there is not a country child in all New England who cannot partake of this dainty feast. "Not corn and meat alone for my hard-working children," says bountiful Nature, "but beauty and sweetness." God bless the wise philanthropists who are taking the poor children of the city out into grove and field, for at least one draught of the waters of life which Nature pours out so lavishly. It seems to me no one can honestly enjoy his vacation by mountain or sea who has not contributed his share to this thoughtful, loving charity.

Yet it is but "short vacation" that each of us needs to come back to work with fresh hope and energy. Too long a period of lounging and dissipation enervates the mind and relaxes the nerves. A new impulse, a fresh reception of knowledge, is often a better tonic than even mountain air, or sea-bathing. We believe that many a weary teacher is getting more from her summer at Penikese, or her studies in the botanical garden at Cambridge, than aimless rambling among the fairest scenes of Nature could ever give her. There is a snare in the love of beauty, unless it is combined either with adaptation to use or the expression of great truths; either human good or artistic meaning must keep enjoyment sound and bracing, or it becomes, like all pleasure, relaxing to the will. The love of exciting scenery may become a craving for mental stimulus, which grows more and more exacting, like the gourmand's demand for wine and spices. But if we climb the mountain to search out the hidden truths of Nature, or fathom the spiritual secret which it symbolizes, or even make it the highway to errands of humanity, we shall get the beauty and the sublimity in fuller measure, because we have made it, as God does, the resulting harmony, not the primary aim of our efforts. "The moonlight is not so fair," says Emerson, "when we go to seek it, as when it shines on a necessary journey." The worker, the lover, the naturalist, the artist, will get from Nature both the secret and the joy of communion with her; but the mere dilettante will find her fairest scenes pall upon him, and her richest fruits turn to ashes.

Vacation schools are proposed for the poor who cannot leave the city for a summer rest. We wish all the young people who can have the great privilege of a summer amid the beautiful scenes of Nature could learn how to make these golden months truly a vacation school which would fit them for nobler and higher life throughout the year. E. D. C.

LONDON LETTER.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Sir,—I think your readers will greet with satisfaction what one may call the first fruits of the recent efforts made to resist the spirit of dogmatism and exclusiveness in the Unitarian body.

Three independent and typical cases have aroused the attention of all parties, and elicited some able and temperate discussion. I allude to the Belfast disputes, to the case of the Rev. Peter Dean, in this country, and to the omission of the Rev. W. J. Potter's name from the Year Book of the Unitarian ministers in America. These cases are so well known that it is needless to recapitulate the details. They have tended to separate more widely the conservative from the liberal party; but only, it is to be hoped, for a time.

Already there are signs of a coming reconciliation; and a flag of truce has already been held out by that most conservative of papers, the Inquirer.

I have the privilege of knowing personally the editor of that paper and his family; and a more lovable man it would be hard to find. In private intercourse his own predilections are always swept out of sight by the flow of genial and charitable feeling, which I do not think he could possibly withhold from his bitterest antagonist. Were it not for this beautiful amiability and largeness of heart, his "Orthodoxy" would be provoking. For to one standing in my position he seems quite as Orthodox as many clergymen of the Church of England.

I do not think he has wavered in his own religious opinions for a moment, or that he ceases to regard Christ as superhuman, and the name of Christian as the proudest title men can wear.

But this fact only adds weight and value to the eirenicon which he issues in the Inquirer of the 11th July. He inscribes over his article, "A Plea for Union among Liberal Thinkers," and I, for one, own that it is a very strong "plea," not to be rejected by the Unitarians but at their peril as a church. Herein the editor of the Inquirer, without abandoning his own right to think as he pleases, and to call himself by any name he may select, frankly concedes that every one else within the Unitarian body has an equal right to do the same. He repudiates all mutual dictation on these points as suicidal, as subversive of the great principles on which Unitarianism was founded, and which alone justify its continuance.

I hope you will find room in your columns to print the article in extenso; I will, therefore, trouble you only with one quotation: "The interests of truth, humanity, and progress are of more importance than the retention of any name that is given among men. When any name is erected into a barrier between men animated by a common purpose; when it is made the badge of a party; when exclusive resolutions claim its sanction, it becomes an evil, a hindrance, however sacred the associations historically connected with that name. And the sacred name of Christ is no exception to this general principle."

You will agree with me, sir, in regarding this utterance as charmingly significant of what may be fairly expected from the whole of that body, when this is spoken by the most conservative of its organs. It would not surprise us if it were to elicit some protests more or less feverish from the older school; but they will be more than counterbalanced by the hearty assent of a more liberal majority.

It has come to me in more ways than one, that Unitarians were surprised and vexed that I did not at once join them on my leaving my benefice. I can well believe this,—not from any idea of my personal value, but from the publicity of my ecclesiastical trial. Yet I would ask those who shared this feeling of disappointment, how in the name of peace and liberty was it possible for me—just after my escape from bondage—to plunge myself into new fetters, and expose myself to the taunt of compromising their sect! At every turn of the wheel, with every fresh announcement of my alienation from Christian traditions, I should have brought on my head a second, and not any milder, edition of theological abuse, and have been possibly requested to withdraw from the community whose liberal principles I had so greatly miscalculated.

Now, if the tone set by the Inquirer, in the article alluded to, be taken up and adopted practically by the whole body of Unitarians, there is no reason yet apparent why any of us should be excluded, or should exclude ourselves, from corporate action and sympathy with them.

If union is strength—and this cannot be denied,—while uniformity is decay and death, and that union be based on "the acknowledged supremacy of individual reason and individual conscience," surely all who aim at the discovery of truth and real human progress would become far more powerful in an acknowledged combination than they would be if they remained isolated or detached.

Here, then, is a chance for those who call themselves Unitarians to live or to perish. On the old terms of a pseudo-Orthodoxy, of a tacit recognition of the authority of the New Testament or of Christ, Unitarianism is doomed to perish. In so far as it is "Christian," in the ordinary sense of that term, it is moribund. In so far as it contains within its borders the living thoughts of living men, determined to exchange withered leaves for mellow fruit, it is alive and ready for a new spring.

Some may part with their old, revered name in deep regretfulness; but time will teach them to feel the greater nobility of the name which Nature has bestowed, and to live worthily of which is man's highest honor. As Lessing teaches us in Nathan the Wise: "Come, we must be friends! Despise my people as thou wilt—we have not either of us chosen our people! What is a people? Are Christians and are Jews more Christians, Jews, than men? Oh that I may have found in thee one more who is contented with the name of man!"

Most truly yours,
CHARLES VOYSEY.

CAMDEN HOUSE, Dulwich, July 18, 1874.

Communications.

"WOODHULLISM:" WHAT IT IS AND WHAT IT IS NOT.

CHARLTON DEPOT, Mass., June 29, 1874.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

Rev. Mr. Voysey's article in condemnation of the social theories of Mrs. Woodhull has provoked a good deal of discussion among liberal religionists, and I have read with close attention the critical letter of Mr. Newman.

I freely admit that its method is fair, and its tone kindly; but, in common with most critics, Mr. Newman attempts the dissection of a subject too great for him. Had Mr. Voysey been able to lay aside prejudice, he might have found the prototypes of Mrs. Woodhull's ideas in the writings of many of the greatest thinkers of this and all preceding ages. He writes as though her clear-cut and emphatic sentences embodied a social code abhorrent to all natural instincts of humanity. But he thus greatly errs. Mrs. Woodhull has already a thousand times explicitly stated that she simply reaffirms freedom—that she recognizes the justice and the wisdom of exercising and applying simple, natural, human freedom in sexual and social, as in political and religious life; nothing more, nothing less. And I think that even Mr. Voysey will not deny that this assertion of right, with its resultant rebellion against tyranny, at least in the two first-mentioned relations, comes with a good grace from a woman who has confessedly "been through the mill." In her letter, written from Ludlow Street Jail to the New York Herald, Mrs. Woodhull strongly says: "I desire woman to be emancipated from the sexual slavery maintained over her by man." This is the total substance of her "theories" and the essence of her demand. It is not in order for Mr. Voysey or Mr. Newman to declare what will, or must be, when that freedom shall be instituted. The sole question at issue, and business in hand, is the "evil right" and its removal. Mr. Newman admits the present marriage law gives control of the wife's person, and says he "heartily agrees" with Mrs. Woodhull in her attack on this point. Doesn't he see that this "control" is the chief corner-stone, and, when that is removed, "legal marriage," to which he so tenderly clings, is simply abolished? Thus, unlike Mr. Newman, I shall pretend to judicial decision, and, without hesitation, pronounce Mr. Newman's points, in most of his paragraphs, not well taken. At some future time I may go over them, but at this time I will only say that "Woodhullism" is no more than a demand for entire and absolute freedom in the domain of the affections for both sexes. In this sense, no more than has long been demanded by the great philanthropists, such as Mary Wolstoncraft, Frances Wright, Mrs. Dr. Nichols, Robert Dale Owen, Carrie Lewis, Francis Barry, and Austin Kent. Let Mr. Voysey and Mr. Newman obtain and read these authors' works, particularly Austin Kent's, and I will hazard the opinion that they will "modify" somewhat their condemnation of even the boldest utterances of Victoria Woodhull.

As Mr. Voysey and Mr. Newman are both transatlantic contributors, I would mention that Mr. Kent's best known work, Free Love, a small but unanswerable treatise, and his Mrs. Woodhull and her Social Freedom can be obtained by application to the author, who is a confirmed invalid, at Stockholm, N. Y. (St. Lawrence County), U. S. A. Price of the two, $1.00. A. BRIGGS DAVIS.

[The essence of the "free love" theory is its demand for the abolition of "legal marriage." Marriage is a religious sacrament in the Catholic Church; but "legal marriage" is simply a civil contract. As things are to-day, nobody is obliged to enter into this contract with anybody; Professor Newman truly argues that women are entirely free to avoid it, and that, if they do avoid it, they are as free as Mrs. Woodhull would have them. But society (and we think with great reason) holds that sexual unions outside of the marriage contract are injurious to its own best interests; and therefore it defends the marriage institution as the corner-stone of social welfare. That the mutual rights and duties of husbands and wives need to be better understood and more faithfully respected, is true enough; but so long as the advocates of "free love" are perfectly free to remain unmarried, the abolition of marriage would be an interference with the liberty of those who prefer to marry. A contract is a contract, and to preach that it is of no obligation is ridiculous. Society has a perfect right to protect jealously the marriage contract, without which the permanence of the home would be greatly endangered, if not destroyed; and every reasonable demand of the "free love" believers would be fully met by the universal recognition of marriage itself as the freely formed union of equals, with all the mutual obligations of a contract between equals. It is a mistake to suppose that ownership of the wife by the husband is the "chief corner-stone" of legal marriage: the fact of a mutual contract is its corner-stone, and the notion of a contract without mutual obligations is the great hallucination of some social philosophers. Elevate and purify marriage as much as you please; this will be the best possible result of the "free love" agitation.—ED.]

FREE LOVE: WHAT WE MEAN BY IT.

MR. ABBOT:—

Perhaps it is not strange that our English friends do not exactly understand our position on the subject of love and marriage.

The only essential meaning of free love is, with us, the sexual emancipation of woman. It is to give woman the absolute and entire control of her sexual relations, and to protect her in that control as well in as out of marriage. We insist that, if there be such a thing as natural rights for men or women, the right of each woman to choose the father of her children is clear, and should never be violated. We believe that in a perfect state of society each woman will retain and take that right during her adult life. Woman alone should decide whether and when she will bear children. While the order of society remains nearly as it now is, we insist that the rake shall bear the same disgrace as the prostitute. Free love gives the human female more freedom, and the male, I think, on the whole, less.

We agree further; that, if our race were designed, in their highest and best estate, for exclusively dual or monogamic conjugal relations, such freedom and protection for women must ultimate in that. If they were not so designed or so organized, it ought not to; and it would be insane to attempt always to hold the race by law to it. The nature of woman in freedom must finally settle this point.

WHERE WE DIFFER.

Mrs. Woodhull and a large class of free lovers believe that monogamy will be the final and perfect order. The writer, with many others, believes that more or less of a variety is natural to man and woman in their highest and most perfect growth and development. Hence these believe that women's freedom will so ultimate. We have never seen a free lover who believed in promiscuity, socially or sexually.

Many superior minds insist that coition is never proper except for the pro-creation of children. But all agree that woman in freedom shall settle all such questions.

All free lovers agree that the order of love relations is less important than the pure and elevating spirit that should control them. On a low or lustful plane, the amative instinct and selfish sentiments control too much the higher man—in any and every order of action. On a high or pure love plane, the amative will be under the control of the top brain—benevolence and justice—as these are enlightened by the intellect. AUSTIN KENT.

STOCKHOLM, N.Y., June 22, 1874.

[The best way to refute a repulsive theory is sometimes to let its advocates state it in all its repulsiveness. On this principle we publish the above article, which is decorous enough in language and more than disgusting enough in idea. It means that woman, when she chooses her husband, has not necessarily chosen the "father of her children," but should be free to disregard all marriage obligations in favor of any one whom she comes to prefer; and that, when she attains "her highest and most perfect growth and development," she will prefer a "variety" (which is to all intents and purposes "promiscuity," Mr. Kent to the contrary notwithstanding). This is the coveted "sexual emancipation of woman," which means her emancipation from the self-imposed restraints of a faithful, undying love for a freely chosen husband. In fact, the word husband has no significance on this theory but that of a temporary partner incapable of retaining permanently the woman's affection. Verily, Mr. Kent is ahead of Mrs. Woodhull herself; for the latter advocates the faithful and permanent union of one with one on the basis of mutual love, if not of mutual obligation recognized by law. The strong language of Mr. Voysey is quite inadequate to characterize fitly Mr. Kent's philosophy; let it stand in uncharacterized hideousness.

It need not be added that every true husband reverences his wife, and accords her unquestioned control of her own person. He will not go to the champions of "free love" to learn respect for woman. That alone is a real marriage in which the legal obligations of the marriage contract, though acknowledged, are quite forgotten in the proud and happy fidelity of a union that never grows old.—ED.]

"PROHIBITION."

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Dear Sir,—Claiming to be a philanthropist, I am deeply interested in whatever effects for weal or woe the human family. And now that slavery no longer rears its hydra head in our midst, I regard the liquor traffic as "the sum of all villanies" (excuse the liberty of application, but facts and figures justify it). Consequently, I have anxiously watched to see the direction taken by the current of free-thought on the subject of temperance, or prohibition. I have read with solicitude the articles of Messrs. Einstein, Frothingham, and Underwood, as well as your own remarks entitled "The Prohibitory Principle;" and, while I admire and respect you each and all, my fealty to the cause of temperance compels me to say that the tendency of your articles is to "damn with faint praise" rather than encourage and assist the few friends of the cause who are struggling, against fearful odds, to stem the tide of intemperance that annually sweeps thousands of this generation into untimely graves, and entails untold misery on innocent thousands of the next.

You undoubtedly, equally with myself, deplore the evils named; we only differ as to the remedy. You all favor temperance, but disapprove of prohibition. Let me inquire, Can the former be secured without the latter? If it can be, I am silent. (On this point permit me to suggest a reperusal of Prof. Newman's article on "Abstinence vs. Moderation," in THE INDEX of June 25, 1874.) But if it cannot, what then? I take the liberty to make a few quotations. "Enforced temperance is a very untrustworthy and slippery virtue" (Abbot). "One thing is demonstrated; it is this: the attempt to suppress Nature under any of its forms, so it be Nature that is suppressed, is futile" (Frothingham). "These sumptuary laws are a flat contradiction of the primary principles of freedom in citizenship" (Banner of Light, as quoted by Friend Underwood). Is this all true? If it is, then is our penal code a relic of Puritanism, or worse, the age of the Inquisition, and ought to give place to the new gospel of moral suasion. The "prohibitory" laws against piracy, robbery, seduction, and murder, "involve a principle that is fatal to personal liberty and dangerous to free institutions," and ought to be forthwith consigned to the limbo of the past. Am I to be told that intemperance is "only a vice," and is, therefore, "to be dealt with only by moral suasion," while the liquor traffic is a legitimate business in which a man may "make a living for himself and little ones"? I reply—

Drinking liquor may be a vice, but selling it for gain is a crime, and one against which society has a right to discriminate.

I do not desire to be misunderstood. I am a radical of the ultra type. I believe in freeing ourselves as fast as possible from the superstitions and tyrannies of the past. But I do not think it wise to ignore the facts of the present. One of these facts is the partial depravity of human nature. I would restrain the criminal, until he can be taught that liberty is not license, and that to secure his own rights he must respect the rights of others.

Moral suasion is a powerful lever in the regeneration of mankind, but it is not of universal application. The millennium is not yet inaugurated, and, until it is, penal laws in some form will have an office to perform.

I yield to none in devotion to personal liberty. I believe in "the largest liberty of the individual compatible with the good of society;" but I believe that in some things the rights of society are superior to those of the individual. I would not be deemed captious, if I regard it as a curious fact that all of the above-named gentlemen, who are ordinarily so jealous of personal rights, are, I believe, ardent advocates of the free-school system, which compels a man without children to educate other people's children. Some of them (and I honor them for it) are even now advocating "compulsory education." But how they manage to ride both horses at once is not so apparent. Will some of you gentlemen "rise and explain"? Yours for prohibition,

HARRY HOOVER.

CURWENSVILLE, Clearfield Co., Pa., July 15, 1874.

[Two points in the above candid letter we wish to note briefly.

1. "Drinking liquor may be a vice, but selling it for gain is a crime." If this is true,—if liquor-selling for gain is a crime per se,—then the apothecary who sells it for medicine is as much a criminal as the saloon-keeper who sells it for a beverage; and the State that licenses the sale of it for any purpose licenses a crime against society. But if the apothecary is not a criminal, then "selling liquor for gain" is not a crime; and the only crime in the case is the subsequent abuse of the liquor sold. Of course, if the liquor-seller knows or believes that the liquor will be abused, he becomes an accomplice in the crime; but this does not justify society in punishing him simply for selling. There is no getting over or round or under this fact.

2. The supposed contradiction between advocating "compulsory education" and opposing "prohibition" does not exist. The same principle that society has no right to coerce the individual except for its own protection covers both. The childless man is taxed for schools without injustice, because he would be taxed still more to suppress crimes, if the schools were abandoned: he must contribute his share of the necessary expense of maintaining public order, by which he profits as much as his neighbor who has children; and the ground of taxation is the right of society to do what its own self-protection demands. That is why we advocate compulsory education. And we oppose prohibition because society has no right to do more than its own self-protection demands; which it does do when it punishes as a crime what is not a crime. One and the same principle requires compulsory education, and forbids prohibition: namely, the right of society to coerce the individual for its own protection, but for nothing else.—ED.]

TEETOTALISM THE ONLY SAFETY.

ITHACA, N. Y., May 30, 1874.

EDITOR INDEX:—

If ever I was heart-sick and saddened, it is by the position you take in THE INDEX, May 28, in regard to temperance.

All over the land our homes are desolated, because some of our heart's idols are sacrificed on the altar of intemperance. Kill my sons, but don't destroy their reason, their manhood.

What right have you to demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from taxation? Is not that coercion? Does it not rouse the malice, the opposition, of our Orthodox brethren? Show me an instance where there is a law repugnant to any class of people that does not arouse a spirit of defiance. What proportion of church members can read the Demands of Liberalism without having such a spirit aroused? The very best people in the land are working in every way they think reasonable and right to suppress intemperance. In this place the women have met in the chapel, and spent a half or three quarters of an hour in prayer; and then they give their attention to business. They have committees to visit saloons, to reason kindly but faithfully with their keepers; never more than two at one place. I do not know that any one has given up through their efforts, but they have established a first-class temperance saloon, and a reading-room in connection with it.

Professor Russell, of Cornell University, has also thrown himself into the work, feeling that the success of the university depended on getting a higher standard of morals; and through his influence the students have established a free reading-room, in connection with which is a recreation room. Here are found conveniences for games, etc.; also a piano, which frequently contributes to the enjoyment of those present. We have set our hearts on trying to have this an orderly, healthful, safe place for people to educate their sons and daughters. But, really, if the drinking of pure liquors is not so very bad, after all, and every man who chooses has a moral right to sell impure liquors whenever and wherever he chooses, it is absurd to try to check the tide. If our best men need alcohol for stimulant or nourishment, as one learned professor tells us, I think Tom, Dick, and Harry will feel justified in taking such as they can get. You cannot keep women calm, when they find their young sons or loving husbands falling a prey to the destroyer. Can a man wrong himself, and not wrong another?

Has a house of ill fame a right to allure and decoy my young daughters to their own destruction? Have we any right to coercion in the matter, supposing these places were as numerous and as fashionable as drinking-saloons? Have we any right to make a law to hinder any man who chooses from establishing such houses, and making them as attractive and popular as is in his power to do?

I cannot believe that you have felt much of the blighting effects of intemperance. If a beloved son, who you had hoped would attain literary and moral excellence, had been ruined by drinking, or a tender, true, and noble daughter had been heart-broken for the ruin of one whose life was blended with hers, then, perhaps, you would think that the better, safer, and more temperate class could forego the benefits of alcohol for a generation, and endeavor by choice fruits and well selected food, combined with pleasant social intercourse, to endure this seeming loss for the good of humanity. What is now expended for liquors would make many pleasant homes and many delightful places of public resort.

If you believe the majority of the lower classes are not advanced to a state of governing their appetites and propensities, I do not see how you can oppose wholesome restraint on a class who would be much more open to the teachings of reason without whiskey than with it. How much better that they break into our houses and carry off our silver, than that they be permitted, and even encouraged, to make brutes of our children! If the pillars of the Free Religious Society are going to take the mantle of conservatism as regards temperance, as it falls from the venerable old elders and deacons of the olden time, and "take a little wine for their stomach's sake," and publicly give their influence in favor of such a course as Mr. Frothingham did in the Herald of Health some years since, then we, the people, must work with renewed zeal and self-denial to accomplish for our brothers and sisters what science and culture may not comprehend or appreciate, but what is required by a patriotism that is willing to sacrifice the uncertain good of alcoholic stimulant to the safe way of trusting to really nourishing foods and harmless drinks for sustenance.

Yours with great respect, though plain and humble speech,

PRUDENCE K. LINTON.

[We hope that the readers of THE INDEX will not mistake our opposition to the policy of prohibition for advocacy of free indulgence of the appetite for liquor. What society has a right to do is one thing; what the individual had better do or not do is quite another.

1. Society has a right to suppress crime on the simple ground of self-protection; but the use of alcohol which does not lead to crime does not come under its jurisdiction. If such use of alcohol creates other evils than crime, they should be remedied by other means than punitive legislation.

2. The danger of excess in the use of alcohol is so great that teetotalism is the wisest policy on the part of all who are not really masters of themselves. We applaud those who, conscious of an infirm will, adopt this policy. But while no one has any right to criticise the individual who thus protects himself against possible excess, no one has any right to compel all to teetotalism because some freely choose it.

3. What we deprecate is the attempt to substitute State laws for private virtue. This attempt must fail. Outside of actual crime, the moral evils of intemperance ought to be opposed by moral means alone. Teach children the immense danger and disaster of intemperance, and train them to habits of self-control by enlightened reason; and then they will be safe everywhere without prohibitory laws. That parent condemns himself who demands such laws for his children's safety.—ED.]

THE ARGUMENTUM AD HOMINEM.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

The Rev. Dr. Miner, a leading Universalist preacher of Boston, and the President of Tuft's College, recently had a debate at Hyde Park with Dr. Dio Lewis on the subject of prohibition, in the course of which Dr. Miner deliberately and repeatedly took the ground that, "if any religious views are entertained in society which, in the judgment of the Legislature, tend to produce as much harm as rum does, it would be the bounden duty of such Legislature to prohibit such views." The account given of it in the Christian Statesman, where I read it, says that on the announcement of this proposition "intense excitement pervaded the audience."

Mr. Editor, no wonder an intelligent audience would be deeply moved by such an utterance; for in it Dr. Miner laid down a principle of action very far-reaching, and very terrible in its effects upon human interests. A principle is a very ticklish thing, either in mechanics, in religion, in morals, or in government; for it is either good and safe, or bad and dangerous. Dr. Miner has adopted the principle that a man's religious opinions—"views," as he calls them—may be suppressed by pains and penalties, if in the opinion of the Legislature they tend to produce as much harm as rum does. Dr. Miner is one of the Vice-Presidents of the "National Association for the Religious Amendment of the Constitution of the United States." On this account his opinions as to the powers and functions of the civil government in regard to religion, and the holders of religious views, are worthy of notice. I propose to trace briefly Dr. Miner's principle to its logical results.

All the Orthodox churches maintain and teach constantly that, if you take away from the minds of common people the fear of an angry God and of eternal hell-fire, and lead them to believe that sinners will fare as well after death as the saints, you convert them into reckless violators of all law, human and divine. So sincerely and generally do the people believe this that the conviction is embodied in the Constitution and laws of most of the States in the Union, forbidding the oath of a Universalist to be taken in a Court of Justice, because, by denying the doctrine of a future state of punishment he has no motive to speak the truth, or do anything else that is good. To remove fear from the human mind as a restraint to evil-doing is regarded as practically to open the floodgates of license in every department, and to deluge the land with crime. The anecdote is often retailed, in discussions on this point, of a rich Universalist, whose timber-lands in the West were marauded upon by thieves, paying largely to support a Methodist Church in the neighborhood where the preacher, by his constant and hearty fulminations of the wrath of God, and of hell-fire in the next world, protected in some good degree his property from pillage. It is safe to say that the Catholic, and nearly all of the Protestant Church, agree in regarding the Universalist doctrines as "tending" to dislocate all morals, and to convert the earth into a hell.

Suppose, now, that the Legislature of Massachusetts, impressed with these convictions, should pass a law suppressing the Sunday utterances of Dr. Miner, and his Universalist brethren throughout the State, and, in case of uproarious persistence on their part to inculcate their dangerous "views," should lock up their meeting-houses, and send the preachers to jail; that would be giving the Doctor a taste of his own medicine which might, or might not, work well.

On the contrary, it is alleged by the heterodox churches that the "tendency" of Orthodox doctrines is to produce the worst results on society. To teach children in Sunday-school, as the Rev. Mr. Clarke, in the Golden Age of the 11th July, says is done in the Third Presbyterian Church of Albany, that they are children of the devil—children of wrath—incapable of, and indisposed to, any good thought, word, or deed,—conceived in sin, and brought forth in iniquity—doomed to a fate from which they cannot be rescued by any act of their own, is to train them up to lives of self-disrespect, meanness, and crime. What can be more crushing, they say, to the energies and hopes of young persons of either sex than to tell them they are totally depraved—that the rottenness and stench, external and internal, and the utter weakness of a small-pox patient fitly represents their moral loathsomeness and inability in the sight of God? What is a criminal breaker of all laws but a man who takes the Orthodox creed at its word, and illustrates in life the damning and damnable doctrine of total depravity? What motive has a man to fight against his destiny and the purpose of God in creating him a vessel of dishonor and destruction? Are not the prisons of the land full of the victims of such training?

Now, if the Legislature of a State where radical and heterodox convictions prevail, should believe that Calvinistic "views" "tend" to gross immorality, and should shut up all the Presbyterian Churches within its limits, and put their ministers under bonds to hold their peace, Dr. Miner and his little handful of Universalists might rejoice; but all the rest of the sects would mourn. And as to the government that would adopt this principle, the victims of it, so far from considering it "the ordinance of God," would regard it as the institution of the devil.

So I might go the grand round of the sects, and show that upon Dr. Miner's principle each one of them holds "views" which, in the ever-changing complection of the Legislature, might be deemed dangerous to the morals of society, and send their advocates to prison.

If Dr. Miner took this extraordinary and alarming position by virtue of his being an officer of the National Association, and to qualify himself for efficient service in putting religious dogmas into the Constitution of the United States as a test, we ought to thank him for his candor. He is at home among the revolutionists, and will need watching.

A. B. BRADFORD.

ENON VALLEY, Pa., July 19, 1874.

ATHEISM AND INSPIRATION.

"It is impossible," says C. A. Bartol in a late INDEX, "that the denial or disallowance of fresh inspiration, which is the principle of atheism, should be adopted with slavish content by any who hope for their race."

I just wish to say that atheism as now held to, although it recognizes no inspiration, old or fresh, in the theological sense, does most emphatically recognize the powers, forces, and influences which inexact writers frequently refer to as inspiration. That civilization, society, ethics, language, and even man himself, have been slowly evolved from the rudest beginnings all atheists now believe. That there have been causes equal to these results they do not doubt. That evolution under natural law will go on for ages in the future as it has done in the past, giving higher and better intellectual and moral conditions, they believe equally with the liberal religionists.

Why this fling, then, at atheism? I do not see that atheism involves the "denial" or "disallowance" of anything the recognition of which is essential to confidence and hope in humanity. For one, I look forward hopefully to the future of my race; but I should not have this consolation if I thought the race would become stationary or retrogressive without a "fresh inspiration" or special impulse from a supernatural Being, every once in a while.

B. F. UNDERWOOD.

ANOTHER GERM.

SNOHOMISH CITY, SNOHOMISH COUNTY, WASHINGTON TERRITORY, June 2, 1874.

EDITOR INDEX:

Dear Sir—Last week, a few mutual friends who have long felt the need met and organized a Free Religious Association. Yesterday, being Sunday, as well as first of the month, we held our first public meeting. We think ours the pioneer organization of the Pacific coast. I enclose to you for publication, if you deem it worthy a place in your columns, Article V. of our incorporation act (we are incorporated under the laws of Washington Territory), and set up the claim that ours is the most liberal platform of any association of the kind in existence. The articles were drawn by Eldridge Morse, Esq., of this place, a liberal scholar, earnest student, and persistent investigator. The great wilderness of the North-west has received in her lap a progressive spark from the glowing hearths of the civilization of the far East. We will place it on the altar of eternal truth, and fan it into a flame. We humbly offer you our murmurs of congratulation, and assure you our sympathies are liberal enough to reach across the continent, and embrace all the true friends of free thought.

The following is a copy of the Article named above, and contains the "heart and soul" of our faith:—

"ART. V. The object of said Association is the investigation and discussion of all matters of faith, morals, and religion, and for this purpose to hold regular Sunday meetings, whenever they can be properly maintained, and at such other times as may be convenient; the exercises to be at the discretion of the trustees, only they shall be conducted in as free and liberal a manner as is possible, consistent with a regular order of exercises. No person shall be prohibited a full and free statement of his belief or opinions on a given subject, on account of any creed, faith, or opinion, held or professed by said person. Nor shall the Association be responsible for the faith, creed, or opinions, of any of its members, or one member for the faith, creed, or opinions, of another."

With many assurances of esteem, I have the honor to subscribe myself most respectfully yours,

A. C. FOLSOM.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions,		10c per line.
" 13 " 25	"		8	"	"
" 26 " 51	"		6	"	"
" 52	"		5	"	"

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

CIRCULATE! Circulate!! Circulate THOSE PETITIONS. Don't feel satisfied when your petition is a yard long, unless you have asked every one to sign it. Get good, influential names.

GET EVERYBODY.

Don't neglect to show the petition to any one, because he is a stockholder in some church, or other exempted property, as many such persons admit the justice of the demand; and those who will not should be made to take the responsibility of refusing to sign it.

Don't delay! We want the petitions returned early.

Per order of EXEC. COMM. of the BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,

has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, assisted by ABRAM W. STEVENS, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
THOMAS W. HIGGINSON, Newport, R.I.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 4.

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

ASSOCIATE EDITOR:

ABRAM WALTER STEVENS.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
T. W. HIGGINSON, Newport, R.I.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
F. W. NEWMAN, England.
CHARLES VOYSEY, England.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS,

OF THE

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. Abbot, D. A. Wasson, T. W. Higginson, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. Wasson on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. Abbot, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. Wasson on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. Abbot on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age;" an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. Higginson on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potter on "Religion Old and New in India;" also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Sympathy of Religions, by T. W. Higginson. 25 cents.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 10 cents, singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets	1.50
Concord Days	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M). Little Women. Two vols	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl	1.50
Little Men	1.50
My Boys, &c	1.00
Shawl-Straps	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism	2.00
New Poems	2.00
Literature and Dogma	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine	2.00
Edelweiss	1.00
German Tales	1.00
BACON'S Essays	1.00
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution	2.25
Physics and Politics	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A). Radical Problems	2.00
The Rising Faith	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols	5.00
BIBLE in the Public Schools. Records, Arguments, and Decision in the case of John D. Minor et al. vs. the Board of Education of the city of Cincinnati: et al. in the Supreme Court of the City of Cincinnati	2.00
Arguments of Ramsey, Sage and King in favor of the use of the Bible	.50
Arguments of Stallo, Hoadley and Mathews against the use of the Bible	.50
The Opinion and Decision of the Supreme Court of Ohio in the above case	.25
BRACKETT (ANNA C.) The Education of American Girls
BROOKS' (CHARLES T.) Translations. The Layman's Breviary	2.25
The World-Priest	2.25
The Tall Student	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol	.80
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.) The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion	2.00
CLARKE (Dr. E. H.) Sex in Education	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects.	3.00
Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays	5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age	.20
CONWAY (MONCURE D.) The Earthward Pilgrimage	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE; Its True Aims and Requirements A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies"	1.50
The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor"	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols	4.00
Journal of Researches	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE.) Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA.) Philosophers and Fools. A Study	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each	1.00
Comprising— Adam Bede. Romola. The Mill on the Floss. Felix Holt. Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life.
The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy	1.50
How Lisa Loved the King	.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series	2.00
Essays. Second Series	2.00
Miscellanies	2.00
Representative Men	2.00
English Traits	2.00
Conduct of Life	2.00
Poems. With Portrait	2.00
May Day and Other Pieces	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold	1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols	5.00
Society and Solitude	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanase Coquerel the Younger	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG.) The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.	2.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity	1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers	.20
Child's Book of Religion	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS.) Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol	5.00
Elective Affinities	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments	2.00
Creed of Christendom	3.25
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France	1.50
Thoughts about Art	2.00
The Unknown River	6.00
The Intellectual Life	2.00
Chapters on Animals	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second	1.00
Child World. Part First	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures. 1. Metaphysical Lectures	3.50
2. Logical Lectures	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol	2.00
Twice-Told Tales. Mosses from an Old Manse. The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance. The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image. The Marble Faun. The English Note-Books. The American Note-Books. The French and Italian Note-Books. Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment	1.50
Atlantic Essays	2.00
Oldport Days	2.50
HOWELLS'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey	2.00
Suburban Sketches	2.00
Venetian Life	2.00
Italian Journeys	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "'Ninety-Three".	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses	1.25
Bits of Travel	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature	1.25
On the Origin of Species	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen	1.50
Songs of Seven	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skelligs	1.75
Studies for Stories	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours	1.25
Mopsa the Fairy: A Story	1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect	.50
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall	1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.	1.50
III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialognes of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols.	3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed	3.00
LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life.	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D'C). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series	1.50
Among my Books	2.00
My Study Windows	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Posies for Children.	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man	2.00
Pre-historic Times	5.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols	8.00
Elements of Geology	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE.) The Vicar's Daughter	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education.	3.00
Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES.) Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol	2.50
The New Affinities of Faith	.25
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART.) Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte.	1.50
Political Economy. New and revised edition	2.50
The Subjection of Women	1.25
Essay on Liberty	1.25
Representative Government	1.50
Autobiography	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works	1.0
MILLER (JOAQUIN.) Songs of the Sierras.	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN.) Voltaire	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-Time Stories	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series	2.50
The Same. Second Series	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion	2.00
NASBY (PETROLEUM V). Swingin' Round the Cirkle	1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations	2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical	4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism.	.25
Against Hero-Making in Religion	.25
PARKER (THEODORE.) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings	1.50
Historic Americans.—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations,—A.D. I. and MDCCCLV. A Christmas Story	.60
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS.) The Infinite and the Finite	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar	1.50
The Trotty Book	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts	1.50
Hedged In	1.50
The Silent Partner	1.50
What to Wear?	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition	2.00
PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc	5.00
The Expanse of Heaven	2.00
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante	2.50
SCHELLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With illustrations	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL.) Self-Help	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical	1.25
First Principles	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Æsthetic	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols	5.00
Philosophy of Style	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition	2.00
Sociology	2.00
SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus	.25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics	9.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin	.00
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols	12.00
TAINE'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols	7.50
The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol. Vanity Fair. The Newcomes. Adventures of Philip. Pendennis. The Virginians. Esmond, and Lovel the Widower.	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1. Barry Lyndon, Hoggarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humorists, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unreprinted Pieces.
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait	2.00
The Maine Woods	2.00
Cape Cod	2.0
Letters	2.00
A Yankee in Canada	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimac Rivers	2.00
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People	2.00
Light and Electricity	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion	2.00
On Sound	2.00
Radiant Heat	5.00
Forms of Water	1.50
Lectures on Light	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall	.50
TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each	3.00
Vols III. IV. and VI., each	3.75
The Voysey Appeal	.50
Voysey's Defence at York	.50
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden	1.00
Saunterings	1.50
Back-Log Studies	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life	1.50
Essays and Reviews	3.00
Character and Characteristic Men	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth	1.50
Success and its Conditions	1.50
Washington and the Revolution	.30
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story	1.50
Real Folks	1.50
The Other Girls	2.00
Pansies. A volume of Poems	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols	4.00
Child Life	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place, Boston.

$25 A DAY GUARANTEED using our WELL AUGER AND DRILL in good territory. HIGHEST TESTIMONIALS FROM GOVERNORS OF IOWA, ARKANSAS AND DAKOTA. Catalogues free. W. GILES, St. Louis, Mo.

CHARLES SUMNER.

A fine likeness of Massachusetts' great Senator, the copy of a recent Photograph by Black, is for sale at THE INDEX office, and will be sent by mail to any address on receipt of the price—fifty cents.
Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

SAVE FIFTY DOLLARS!

THE NEW FLORENCE.

PRICE, $20 below } any other First-
VALUE, $30 above } class Sew'g Mach.

SAVED, $50 by buying the Florence.

Every machine warranted.

Special terms to clubs and dealers.

Send for circulars to the

Florence S. M. Co., Florence, Mass.,

or 778 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

CHARLES SUMNER'S

GREAT WORK.

PROPHETIC VOICES

CONCERNING AMERICA.

By CHARLES SUMNER.

Fine Edition, Tinted Paper, with Steel Portrait, Crown 8vo., Cloth extra, $2.

Aside from its literary and historical merits, this volume has a special interest, from the fact that it was the last work on which r. Sumner was engaged before his death.

"PROPHETIC VOICES" will be found of great value to all who take an interest in the history of our country, so full is it of passages in which the unexampled prosperity of our land has been foretold by philosophers, poets, statesmen, and orators, of whom the lamented author has also given interesting sketches.

Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price.
Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

CHAPTERS

FROM

The Bible of the Ages.

FOURTEEN CHAPTERS.

Selected from Hindu Vedas, Buddha, Confucius, Egyptian Divine Pymander, Zoroaster, Talmuds, Bible, Plato, Pythagoras, Marcus Aurelius, Epictetus, Al Koran, Luther, Scandinavian Eddas, Renan, Taliesin, Milton, Penn, Adam Clarke, Mary Fletcher, F. W. Newman, Tyndall, Max Müller, Elias Hicks, Channing, Garrison, H. C. Wright, Lucretia Mott, Higginson, T. Starr King, Bushnell, Parker, Davis, Emma Hardinge, Emerson, Denton, Tuttle, Abbot, Frothingham, and others.

Gospels and Inspirations from many Centuries and Peoples.

"Slowly the Bible of the race is writ,
Each age, each kindred, adds a verse to it."

Edited and Compiled by

GILES B. STEBBINS.

Four hundred pages; bound in cloth; price $1.50. No Extra Charge for Postage.
Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

BUST OF THEODORE PARKER,

BY

SIDNEY H. MORSE.

Dignity, reverence, sweetness, vigor, equipoise, breathe through the clay; the artist has so filled his own heart with appreciation of that noble life that he has been able cunningly to mould it into those delicate lines which the character had wrought on the living fibre. We are tempted to exclaim, as we stand beside it, as the old artist did to his perfected work, "Speak then!"—Hannah E. Stevenson.

All the characteristics of my husband are in the bust,—his greatness, his goodness, his tenderness, his love. You cannot give life to clay or marble; but you can represent it, and this Mr. Morse has done.—Lydia D. Parker to Hannah E. Stevenson.

The eyes, though but of clay, are gleaming with possible indignation, with possible tears; the lips are set firm with the resolution of him who, like Paul, could "fight a good fight" as well as "give a reason."—Samuel Longfellow.

The first time I have seen Theodore Parker since he died.—Wm. Sparrell.

The best representation of Mr. Parker ever executed in clay.—Boston Daily Globe.

The face is strong and noble as it should be. The likeness is good.—Boston Daily Advertiser.

Nothing appears for beauty alone, or finish, or to show the vanity of the artist. All is forgotten in the man—the true, real, Yankee man, Theodore Parker.—L. S. H. in the Golden Age.

Copies of this Bust, finely finished n plaster, $10 each. Boxing for transportation, $1 extra. Freight or expressage paid by party sending order. Weight of box about fifty pounds. Orders may be sent to
S. H. MORSE,
Room 13, 25 Bromfield St., Boston, Mass.

STUDENTS FITTED for any College.
Please address
EMILY J. LEONARD,
Meriden, Conn.

CONSTANT EMPLOYMENT.—At home, male or female, $30 a week warranted. No capital required. Particulars and valuable sample sent free. Address, with six-cent return stamp. C. ROSS, Williamsburg, N. Y.

FREE DISCUSSION

is held at HOSPITALLER HALL, 593 Washington Street, Boston, every Sunday, at 10½ A.M., 2½ and 7½ P.M. All that relates to the Religious, Political, and Social interests of mankind constitute the subjects for discussion. THE INDEX and Index Tracts are for sale every Sunday at Hospitaller Hall.

WEST NEWTON ENGLISH AND CLASSICAL SCHOOL.—The twenty-first school year of this Family and Day School, FOR BOTH SEXES, will begin Wednesday, September 16, 1874.
For particulars address
NATH'L T. ALLEN, Principal,
West Newton, Mass.
At home Saturdays.

PENN MEDICAL UNIVERSITY,

OF PHILADELPHIA.

The regular course of Lectures in this Institution will commence on the first Monday in October, and is open to both sexes. The school is liberal and progressive, and thorough in its teachings. For announcement giving terms and other particulars, address
E. D. BUCKMAN, M.D., DEAN,
No. 1030 Spring Garden St.

TO NEWSPAPER PUBLISHERS.

Having conveniences for doing the best of newspaper printing at reasonable prices, I should like to contract for composition alone, or for composition, press-work, and mailing, for one or more weekly papers.
Best of references given, and satisfactory work guaranteed. GEO. H. ELLIS,
7 Tremont Place, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX.

Bound volumes of THE INDEX for 1871, 1872, and 1873, will be sent by express (at the purchaser's expense) on receipt of $2.50, $2.50, and $3.00 respectively. These volumes are exceedingly valuable singly, irrespective of each other; for the important essays and other articles they contain are of permanent interest, and will furnish as instructive reading twenty years hence as to-day. No more valuable present could be made to a friend struggling out of Orthodoxy than one of these volumes.
Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

WARREN'S

TRUE CIVILIZATION.

Price 50 cents.

PRACTICAL DETAILS,

showing the workings of the

COST PRINCIPLE.

Price 25 cents.

For sale by

S. H. MORSE,

25 Bromfield St., Boston.

MUSIC BOOKS FOR SCHOOLS.

HOUR OF SINGING.

Price $1.00. For High Schools.

Well proved, highly popular, practical and useful book.

BY EMERSON & TILDEN.

American School Music Reader.

BOOK I. PRICE 35 CENTS.

This charming number is for Primary Schools; has full directions for teachers (in fine print) and delightful little graded exercises and songs for the children.

American School Music Reader.

BOOK II. PRICE 50 CENTS.

For the Schools and Classes next above Primary Schools. Advances well into the elements.

American School Music Reader.

BOOK III. PRICE 60 CENTS.

For the higher classes of common schools.

The above books are by EMERSON & TILDEN, are thorough, well arranged, practical, pleasing, and useful.

CHEERFUL VOICES.

PRICE 50 CENTS.

In great demand, and is one of the best collections of School Songs ever published.
BY L. O. EMERSON.

The above books sent post-paid, on receipt of retail price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO.,

BOSTON.

CHAS. H. DITSON & CO.,
711 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE.

Our organization some time since decided to direct its efforts for the present towards securing the

Repeal of the Laws

whereby church and other corporate property is unjustly exempted from its share of the burden of taxation.

As a means to this end, we have published for general circulation several thousand copies of a

TRACT

on Church Exemption, being the article by Mr. Abbot which appeared in THE INDEX of Nov. 27.

The edition was made as large as our funds would allow; but, so great has been the demand, it is already nearly exhausted.

Our next edition ought to be large enough to place a copy in the hands of

EVERY VOTER IN THE STATE,

and generously to supply the calls for them in other States.

To do this, we need funds; for, although we have made arrangements for printing the Tract at very low cost, it is impossible for the Boston League, with its various other expenses, to bear the entire expense alone.

Will not, then,

All Friends of the Movement

come forward and help us with liberal donations?

We frequently receive communications from parties wishing tracts to distribute, asking how much they shall pay. To such we reply that the cost to us is about $2.50 per thousand, and we shall be pleased to furnish them at this price per thousand, or 30 cents per hundred, to all who will circulate them. But all additional donations will be gratefully received for the purpose of circulating them gratuitously throughout the country.

To many of the subscribers of THE INDEX and others whose names have been furnished us as probable friends of the movement, copies of the Tract, together with Petitions asking the repeal of the Exemption Laws, have been sent,

With the Hope that such friends will try to secure as many signatures to the petition as possible in their locality

We respectfully ask those who are unable to attend to the matter themselves to place the petitions in the hands of those who will.

Let us

ROLL UP THE LIST!

Let our united voices be heard! And let it be done NOW!

We would say, also that we feel deeply the need of

Other Organizations

in this State, to coöperate with us in securing equality and justice, by pressing the "Demands of Liberalism." If, in any locality, there are those who are inclined to

Form a Liberal League,

we are ready to render such assistance as lies in our power.

LIBERALS!

If all will unite and work, the results sought can be accomplished

Address

BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE,

NO. 1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

Per order of the
EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

NONPAREIL Farm Feed, Bone, Drug, and Hand-grinding MILLS. Ten Sizes. Also Cotton-Seed Hullers. Illustrated pamphlets free. Address
SEDGEBEER, SHEPARD & MILLER,
181 East Front Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

THE AMERICAN EDITION

OF

MONCURE D. CONWAY'S

SACRED ANTHOLOGY,

A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES,

has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.

Address THE INDEX,
1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,

BANKERS,

LEROY, MINN.

Money invested on short time, or for a term of years, on unincumbered improved farms, at 12 per cent. interest per annum, payable semi-annually. Perfect title and ample security guaranteed. All expenses for abstract of title and recording mortgage paid by borrower. We collect and remit to any part of the United States free of charge.

REFERENCES.—First National Bank, McGregor, Iowa; First National Bank, Austin Minn.; Milwaukee National Bank, Milwaukee, Wis.; City National Bank, Chicago, Ill.; Allen, Stevens & Co., Bankers, New York City; Morris Altman.

REAL ESTATE SECURITIES, paying 8 to 10 per cent. interest, or

Investments in Real Estate in Chicago and vicinity,

if judiciously made, are the best and safest modes of employing capital. The old

Real Estate and Loan Agency

OF

ERNST PRUSSING, 143 RANDOLPH STREET,

Chicago (Established 1853),

Guarantees perfect title and ample security in all its Real Estate Loans.

Firstclass securities always on hand. Interest and principal collected without charge. Real Estate Investments made on commission or on shares; taxes paid, &c.

Orders of capitalists and real estate owners respectfully solicited.

REASONS FOR USING THE

EUREKA SPOOL SILK.

It is full length. It is full size. It is smooth and elastic, and is equally adapted to hand or machine use.

Many kinds of spool silk are a perfect fraud, being not only shorter in length, but a much finer size than they are represented to be, and of so poor a quality as to be unfit for use. The ladies will always find the Eureka Silk exactly as represented. Every spool is warranted, and the manufacturer's name indelibly branded on every spool. Call for it.

RADICAL AND LITERARY

LECTURES

BY

JOHN WEISS,

RADICAL LECTURES.

The Idea of Hereafter.
An Act of Faith.
Intelligence in Religion.
Religion and Science.
Heart in Religion.

SHAKSPEARIAN LECTURES.

FIRST SERIES.

1. Cause of Laughter.
2. Irony and Humor.
3. Dogberry, Malvolio, Bottom, Touchstone.
4. Ajax in Troilus and Cressida: The Porter in Macbeth: The Fool in Lear.
5. Falstaff.
6. Hamlet.

SECOND SERIES.

1. The Women of Shakspeare.
2. Portia.
3. Ophelia.
4. Macbeth and Lady Macbeth.
5. " " "
6. Contrast in Shakspeare's Characters.

Address JOHN WEISS,
32 E. Brookline St., Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year. LIBERTY AND LIGHT. Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 5. BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, AUGUST 13, 1874. WHOLE NO. 242.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF ———.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in ——:

Also, as soon as five hundred such Liberal Leagues shall have been formed in different places, to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be hereafter called, in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the needed reforms.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the National Convention of Liberal Leagues when called together.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

So far as I am concerned, the above is the platform of THE INDEX. I believe in it without reserve; I believe that it will yet be accepted universally by the American people, as the only platform consistent with religious liberty. A Liberal League ought to be formed to carry out its principles wherever half a dozen earnest and resolute Liberals can be got together. Being convinced that the movement to secure compliance with these just "Demands" must surely, even if slowly, spread, I hope to make THE INDEX a means of furthering it; and I ask the assistance and active co-operation of every man and every woman who believes in it. Multiply Liberal Leagues everywhere, and report promptly the names of their Presidents and Secretaries. Intolerance and bigotry will tremble in proportion as that list grows. If freedom, justice, and reason are right, let their organized voice be heard like the sound of many waters.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

BOSTON, Sept. 1, 1873.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION,

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State; and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation.

GLIMPSES.

BY F. E. A.

COMMISSIONER BAIRD shows that the fisheries of this country are rapidly decreasing in productiveness, owing to over-fishing. This is a hint to sea-side loiterers.

THE Christian Statesman thinks that the late frequent and terrible disasters in this country are "warnings of heavier judgments to come, if the nation continues impenitent."

AUSTRIA has 856,980 soldiers; Russia, 1,401,510; Italy, 605,200; Germany, 2,261,160; France, 977,600; England, 478,820. Total 6,580,260,—as against 3,808,150 in 1859. And this is European civilization!

MR. RUSKIN vigorously lampoons the lecture-system. He says that "your modern fire-working, smooth-downy-curry-and-strawberry-ice-and-milk-punch-altogether lecture is an entirely pestilent and abominable vanity." So he refuses to beam on a Glasgow audience.

THE ULTRAMONTANES are the disunionists and rebels of Germany, and aim to subvert the Empire in order to set up the Church in its place. Why treat self-preservation as persecution? The Empire is not what we hope for in Germany; but nevertheless we say, success to Bismarck!

REV. WILLIAM F. BAKER, in the Independent, relieves himself of the opinion that Boston is a "camp of unbelief," and is busily trying to "invent another and better Christ." It was the cheerful voice of Mr. Baker that the poet Campbell had in mind, when he feelingly referred to—

"The wolf's long howl from Oonalaska's shore."

THE REACTION against the "praying crusade" has begun, and liquor saloons are again on the increase. The Richmond (Indiana) Independent says that "today there is more whiskey, ale, and beer sold and drunk in Richmond than before the crusade commenced." Similar reports reach us from other quarters.

THE INTERNATIONAL PENITENTIARY COMMISSION has just held its first meeting in Brussels. Much is to be hoped from the deliberations of such a gathering, especially as the results reached are to be published broadcast. M. Beltrani-Scalia is to edit monthly an International Bulletin for the Study of Penitentiary Reform, in French, as the organ of the Commission.

THE Christian Statesman admires old Dr. Parish, who preached in 1810 before the Massachusetts Legislature against the treaty between the United States and France. "The atheists of France and the Puritans of New England—was ever an alliance so monstrous!" The Statesman sees a lesson for the times in the old gentleman's paroxysms, and all radicals know what to expect if the Statesman has its way.

BRET HARTE, in the July Atlantic, tells in rhyme a story of Northern Mexico of two hundred years ago which is a not wholly untruthful picture of that country to-day, as the following bit of satire shows:—

> "Por el Rey." What matters indeed,
> If King or President succeed
> To a country haggard with sloth and greed,
>
> As long as one granary is fat,
> And yonder priest, in a shovel hat,
> Peeps out from the bin like a sleek, brown rat!

THERE IS NO END to the abuse by which the Indians are stung into reprisal (of course after their own bloody sort) on our frontiers. This last outbreak is reported officially to be due to such abuse. The "old, old story"—shall we never cease to do evil and then to hush up the complaint by destroying the complainant? America is little better than ancient Rome; it is ravenous with "earth-hunger," and relishes its meal none the less that it is seasoned with human blood. The Indians must depend on themselves for justice, or go without it: they will get none in Washington.

THE SUPREME COURT of this State has decided, in the case of Mrs. Feital (who was injured by a railroad accident on a Sunday), that Spiritualism is a religion; that Spiritualist camp-meetings are "religious meetings;" and that Spiritualists are entitled to protection as much as any other class of religious worshippers. This is perfectly just, as far as it goes; the next step is to abolish the absurd law which grants protection on Sunday only to those who are engaged in works of charity or necessity, or in going to or from religious meetings. People of all classes should be as efficiently protected on Sunday as on any other day.

BY THE KINDNESS of Mr. Thomas S. Murray, Superintendent of Public Instruction in Douglas County, Kansas, we have received a copy of the "Amendments to School Laws," passed by the Kansas Legislature in the session of 1874. Chapter CXXIII. enacts that every child in that State between the ages of eight and fourteen years, unless excused for good reason by the school board, shall be required to attend school at least twelve weeks yearly, six of which must be consecutive. It is most encouraging and hopeful to see the States one by one coming to embrace the principle of "compulsory" or universal education.

THE FIRST "Council of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations," held recently at Cleveland, Ohio, is pronounced by the American Israelite "a perfect success." It acted on the questions of cheap Bibles, Sabbath (Saturday?) schools, circuit preaching, the Hebrew Union College at Cincinnati (which is to be opened by October, 1875, and will cost at least $500,000 or $600,000). Fifty-six congregations joined in the Council; and the glowing enthusiasm with which the Israelite depicts the prospect of a "resurrection of Hebrew literature and philosophy" and religion is catching. The Jews are good citizens; may they prosper abundantly!

THE Catholic Review of August 4 intimates that the sympathies of the Christian Statesman are "more inclined toward THE INDEX or the Independent than to any of the really 'Orthodox' journals." This is a specimen of the Review's fairness. The Christian Statesman is an honorable and high-minded opponent of THE INDEX, as its critic well knows, and is specially devoted to the advocacy of the Christian Amendment. We take this opportunity to express once more our most sincere respect for the fair and just spirit which never fails to make itself felt in the Statesman, though we seldom agree with its opinions or sympathize with its objects.

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walters; Secretary, E. M. Bridgman.
WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—President, J. B. Bassett; Secretary, Anton Grethen.
NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
BALBEC, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
SAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.

[For THE INDEX.]

The Church and the State.

AN ADDRESS DELIVERED AT MADISON BEFORE THE ALUMNI OF THE WISCONSIN STATE UNIVERSITY, JUNE 17, 1874.

BY W. H. SPENCER.

ALUMNI OF THE STATE UNIVERSITY OF WISCONSIN, FRIENDS, AND FELLOW-CITIZENS:—

The subject which I have chosen for my remarks this evening is "The Relation of Church and State, as it has been, as it is, and as it should be." I have selected this subject simply because I think it is a practical one, and should interest us as citizens of the State and alumni of a State school. I hope I may be able to approach the question in a spirit of fairness, as well as fearlessness, with a love only for justice and equality, without any of what Herbert Spencer calls the theological or "anti-theological bias" to distort my vision and warp my judgment.

Emerson says that "men as naturally make a State or a Church as caterpillars a web." When this webbing process began may ever remain a matter of speculation. Ethnology and philology, perhaps archæology, may assist to approximate the day when the State-idea and the Church-idea first broke forth into consciousness, but as yet they point with indefinite finger. We cannot, however, think of the Adams and Eves of the race as a family of units,—a race of Thoreaus, with a centrifugal tendency so strong that association and coöperation would be impossible. A State could not have sprung from a company of hermits, any more than you could twist ropes out of sand.

If we receive the story of Creation in Hebrew writ as a hint of the truth, or if we accept any evolution theory of the genesis of man, we must conclude that prehistoric men were gregarious in their habits. Not only would the social instinct bring men together, but the necessity of self-preservation in the struggle for life would aggregate men.

In every such primitive association of men we see the incipient State, the germ of the republic.

We may suppose that such associations of individuals, for a long time, would be exceedingly loose and fluent; rights and duties would be ill-defined. Church and State were then in the protoplastic stage of development. The words "heretic" and "traitor" would hardly have been found in the vocabulary of the "Stone Age." Still, the Church and State, we may believe, were then in embryo.

History does not catch sight of man until he is emerging from the patriarchal state. Sir Henry Maine tells us that "the elementary group is the family, connected by common subjection to the highest male ascendant. The aggregation of the families forms the gens or house. The aggregation of houses makes the tribe. The aggregation of tribes constitutes the commonwealth." Such he regards the steps in the process of "nation-making."

One of our Chicago dailies is no friend of what it denominates a "papa government." No doubt it is about time that the patriarchal system, with its officious intermeddlings in the commerce of nations, State politics, and individual liberties, on the plea of "protection," should cease, as a political anachronism, an effete tradition; but in the early ages, when the State was in its infancy, this papa government was an imperative necessity, and we can easily comprehend the rationale of it.

What was the object of prime importance in the first governments of men? Evidently it was not justice, but strength. As the animal endowed with greatest strength, other things equal, would conquer in the struggle of life, so those tribes of men who for any reason were most powerful would conquer; and the inexorable law of the survival of the fittest, in the struggle for life, would thus preserve the strong and exterminate the weaker tribes. The very existence of a tribe, clan, or State depended on its distinctive powers,—on the size of its teeth and the length of its claws. Strength to kill was the cardinal virtue; might was right.

Now, since strength was the great desideratum, everything would bend to that. Unions would be formed because in union is strength. Men, families, and tribes would combine for purposes of offence and defence. Thus we see how the exigency of the times, the need of self-preservation itself, would force men into social compacts. The watchword then was not "liberty and union," but union; union not for liberty, but for life.

The primary want of mankind must have been something that would bring and bind men together more and better. Powerful chiefs, acquiring authority by virtue of superior personal strength and prowess, would arise and subject the many to one will and purpose, and so, gradually, what Bagehot calls the "legal fibre"—that is, the ingrained idea of and respect for law—would come to exert its power in cementing the wild and naturally rebellious individuals into a strong, compact commonwealth.

At such a time, when the very existence of a people depended on their combined strenth; depended on the size and stability of the union; depended on the quantity rather than quality of government,—we readily understand how no division of power in the State could be endured without imminent danger of disintegration and destruction. It was then a political necessity that whatever power there was in Church and State should be united, that it might speak with one voice and strike with one arm; "the priest must not teach one thing and the king another; king must be priest, and prophet king." As the pioneers of the West, surrounded with danger, walked and slept with a bowie-knife in one side of their belt and a Derringer in the other, so the early governments among men saw the chief or ruler carrying on his sole person the authority of Church and State. It was right because it was necessary. The distinctions which afterwards arose between "political penalties," and "ecclesiastical prohibitions," and "social censure," were all one then; all power to reward or punish centered in the despotic will of the priest-king; Church and State were united.

Thus we should conclude, from a priori reasoning alone, that all ancient religions must have been "State religions," and turning to history we find our assumptions verified. Look at the Jewish religion, for example. We find that Moses is a priest-king, or, if you please, a king-priest, and his law is a Mosaic of the articles of a creed and the sections of a statute. State and Church were as indissolubly bound together as the Siamese twins; the blood of each flowed in the other's veins. As a matter of fact, history shows, what our reasoning had led us to conclude, that all ancient religions were State religions. It is true of the Egyptian, Hindu, Persian, Chinese, Greek, Roman, and Scandinavian religions. They were every one of them what might properly be called State religions.

Now the question arises, Was it well that Church and State should be united? At first, it was unquestionably right, because it was a vital necessity. They had not yet arrived at that stage of social evolution when the differentiation of office and function was practicable, if even possible. Wherever there has been an arrested development we see, even to-day, the primitive condition of government. The author of Ancient Law tells us "that Braminical India has not yet passed beyond a stage which occurs in the history of all the families of mankind, the stage at which a rule of law is not yet discriminated from a rule of religion. The members of such a society consider that the transgression of a religious ordinance should be punished by civil penalties, and that the violation of a civil duty exposes the delinquent to divine correction. In China, this point has been past; but progress seems to have been then arrested, because the civil laws are coextensive with all the ideas of which the race is capable." We see, then, that although it was necessary to the first step in the progress of the human race that king and priest, State and Church, should be united, yet it was just as necessary to a further step that they should be disunited; and wherever this second step has not been taken, and, as Mr. Maine expresses it, a "rule of law is not yet discriminated from a rule of religion," in that nation there has been an arrested development.

Let us rejoice that the western world has gone beyond the first step. Europe and America have for centuries been passing slowly through a series of political metamorphoses, and "each step has been an onward one," each process has been a progress; and still the respective functions of Church and State are coming out into clearer lines of divergence and distinction; and I, for one, believe the time is not far distant when Church and State shall be completely divorced and independent of each other. The logic of events leads to it; the signs of the times point to it. We are dwelling in the midst of the "age of discussion." No subject is exempt. The great verities of religion, as they are called, are stretched out on the dissecting-table of science; the high priests of the Church are summoned to court. No belief is so hoary or sacred as to find exemption from this modern inquisition. The relation of Church and State must be discussed and decided anew. What the verdict will be few can doubt who have watched the direction which the current of events has been taking for three centuries. There are small counter currents, and local and temporary eddies of opinion, it is true; but the great gulf-stream of political thought has been flowing steadily in one direction, and that direction you cannot mistake if you take a bird's-eye view of several centuries. Look at the relation of Church and State as it was, compare it with what that relation is to-day, and you will see clearly what current is bearing us on, the direction of its flow, and what its goal.

You all know that the history of the Christian Church is largely a history of the strife between ecclesiastical and civil rulers over their respective jurisdiction and authority. Almost from the time that Constantine mounted the throne of the Cæsars down to the last Catholic Œcumenical Council and the Protestant Constitution Amendment Convention, there have been waged wars of words and wars of swords to settle the relation of Church and State. At first, it appears that the Church acknowledged the supremacy of the civil ruler. For three or four centuries the Bishops of Rome (now called Popes) received the ratification of their election from the emperors of Constantinople, and paid them tribute; but it was long regarded by the Popes as a kind of mock homage; a traditional form of flattery; a bowing to the shadow of a king, rather than a right exacted by an acknowledged superior. In the eighth century this fiction of Byzantine authority was completely dissipated by the brilliant achievements of the rising French kingdom in the West. Charles Martel struck his hammer on the crust of Europe, and the magic that evoked a half-million soldiers to drive back the Saracens also frightened forever from Europe the gaunt spectres of Asiatic authority over the western Church. Then, for the first time, arose into prominence the dispute in Europe as to whether the Church should rule State, or State should rule Church. For five centuries the Church came forward with its hands full of pseudo-Isadorian decretals, and all sorts of forgeries, to establish its right of universal dominion, of dispensing subjects from their oaths and deposing kings.

From Gregory VII. to Gregory IX. the Church claimed absolute domination over the State; that the Pope is lord and master of the whole world; in the language of Innocent III., that "the papal power is to the imperial and royal as the sun to the moon, which last has only a borrowed light;" and, what seems still more strange, we see kings bowing before this papal assumption, ceding vast estates to the Church, crowned by Popes, and trembling before their threatenings like whipped spaniels before the master. And then at another turn of the kaleidoscope of history we see kings dominant, carrying away captive Popes, and reënthroning them at their sovereign will. For several centuries all was unsettled and chaotic as respects the relation of Church and State. The Church idea of papal absolutism and the growing State idea of imperial sovereignty were contending for the mastery. Those who believed in the supremacy of the vicar of Christ were matched against those who believed in the divine right of kings. Long and savage was the contest; but slowly and surely the civil power has been driving the ecclesiastical forces from the old battle-fields. Every century the latter have been retreating into some new and narrower line of defence, and what is the status of the Catholic Church to-day! A king without a kingdom. The Church has lost all her old temporal dominions. Even Italy has slipped from her grasp, and we see the descendants of Gregory VII. reduced to find comfort in the barren claim of "spiritual dominion," which is subject to be all swept away by the floating grants of private right and rule any day. The papal thunderbolts carry no lightning now. The encyclical letter, syllabus, and anathema excite only derision and contempt; while the last decade has seen the repeal of the Austrian Concordat, the expulsion of the intriguing Jesuits, the wholesale confiscation of Church property in France, Italy, Mexico, and Turkey, and other measures looking toward the complete divorcement of Church and State. This is true of the Catholic Church; and if we now turn our eyes to the Protestant Church we shall see that the same process of secularization of State has been at work there. Look for a moment at the state of things at the Reformation.

"The reformers opposed, on the one hand, the enthusiasts and fanatics who clamored for the subordination or surrender of the secular rule to 'the saints,' and thus for the establishment of a theocracy; and they opposed, on the other hand, an absorption of ecclesiastical power in the State, such as marked the Roman Empire under heathenism, and the Greek Empire in Christian ages." But apparently they found it impossible to realize their idea of Church independence, for we find afterwards that Luther is disposed to make the Elector of Saxony head of the Church. All through Germany the civil rulers compelled villages and cities to support preachers; they enjoined the use of the catechism, punished blasphemy, and abolished the mass; and, after a time, the course of events in Germany brought the government of the Church completely into the hands of the Protestant princes within their respective States. It became with Protestants, in fact, almost as much as with Catholics, an axiom of government, that a nation, like a family, must profess but one faith; and, at the Diet of Augsburg, the Protestants accepted the proposition that the religion of the people was to be determined by the religion of the prince, and this principle was reaffirmed at the peace of Westphalia. Thus, in Germany, we see the Protestant Church merged into the Protestant State, despite the early wishes of the Reformers. But in Switzerland we see, on the contrary, the State, for a time, merged into the Church. Here the prince was not head of the Church, but the preacher was head of the State. Calvin was governor of a Genevan theocracy, and while he held to a certain independence of Church and State, he held, nevertheless, that the State is bound to coöperate with the Church in fostering the true religion, and in extirpating heresy; and John Calvin was to decide what was heresy, and Servetus found him a stern, unyielding, unfeeling judge.

If now we come across the Channel to England we see the relation of Church and State is similar to that in Europe under Constantine. The king was head of the Church, a State Pope; and to-day the ruling monarch is nominally head of the English Church, and fills by appointment all high ecclesiastical offices, while the government clergy are supported by general taxation.

The Puritans in this country, it may be, intended to establish an independent Church in a free State; but, by their banishment of heretics, by their decreeing that the right of suffrage, and of holding civil office, should be contingent upon membership with some church, they really established on this western continent a kind of theocracy. It took no deep root, however, for our democratic soil was not congenial to such an exotic. However, as we shall see, this thing still puts out a few leaves, though it is dead at the top.

Since the days of Luther and Calvin, Henry VIII. and Roger Williams have changed the relation of the Protestant State to the Protestant Church.

In the late contest with the Romish Church, the spirit of modern Germany is expressed by these words of Bismarck, the man of "blood and iron" visage: "In Germany there can be but one sovereignty, and that uniform and absolute, the sovereignty of the laws. This is a constitutional, not confessional, government."

The State has taken the education of her children out of the hands of the clergy, and has also made marriage a purely civil contract. The citizen may enjoy his religion at the Kirche or at the beer-garden, as he pleases; and, it must be confessed, most Prussians prefer the latter place. Whether you believe in free religion or the free without religion, the government protects you. It fosters no church; it protects all equally. Such is the land of scholars, which even under Protestantism once decreed that your religion must be the religion which happened to be held by the reigning prince.

In England, thirty years ago, Mr. Gladstone wrote a book on the relation of Church and State, wherein he holds "that the State is a moral person, bound to act in the name of Christ and for the glory of God, and to make religion the paramount end in guiding and governing the nation;" and yet the man who said this thirty years ago has lent his powerful influence as Prime Minister of England, lately, to a measure for the disestablishment of the English Church in Ireland, which was carried,—an indication of a remarkable progress toward Church independence among that conservative people. The late movement toward the secularization of the schools evinces a moving of the English mind toward the final disestablishment of the Church in England, and the reduction of the function of government to what Macaulay said it should be, the "protection of life and property."

But perhaps nowhere more than in the United States have we seen in two centuries a more rapid progress in the line of a complete separation of Church and State.

No longer here is the right of suffrage and eligibility to office dependent upon communion with some church; no longer does the titheman notify you of your "parish dues," which you must pay, willing or unwilling; no longer does the beadle drive you to church, nor disturb your slumbers there. The times have changed. An avowed atheist may vote; an infidel may be elected to office; any one may enjoy a nap in almost any church, without annoyance from beadles or loss of respectability,—just as it should be.

The liberal founders of our government provided a safeguard against religious intolerance in the first amendment to the Constitution of the United States, declaring that "Congress shall make no law respecting the establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof;" and most of the States have made laws in the spirit of this constitutional clause, guaranteeing freedom of religious opinion and worship. Thus we see, from a rapid survey of the Protestant and Catholic Church, in its relation to the State, that there have been great changes, and that these changes have all been in the direction of Church and State independence; and these facts force upon one the conclusion that the time is near approaching when the Church and State shall be completely separated, and stand free and independent of each other. And this brings me to the next part of my subject,—the relation of Church and State as it is and as it should be.

When so much religious freedom is granted as in this country, it may be asked what more could be granted. Where perfect liberty is accorded to every one, by the State, to worship God according to the dictates of his conscience, or to worship one hundred gods, if he please; or, like the Comtists, to worship the Grand Etre; or to worship himself, as many do; or to worship neither God, man, nor the devil,—what greater freedom could be demanded by man, or granted by the State? I answer that it is not more freedom that we demand, it is more justice; and I am now going to tell you, in very plain language, what, in my opinion, that little word justice means; and you will see that the relation of Church and State is not yet what it should be, nor what it will be, unless our development as a nation is arrested before this generation is gone.

Look into the last United States statistics and you will find that there are three hundred and fifty-four millions, four hundred and eighty-three thousand, five hundred and eighty-one dollars' worth of property in the United States, belonging to ecclesiastical bodies, that is not taxed one cent to support the government that protects it. You will find that in this State alone there are nearly five millions of dollars invested in church institutions, that yields not a penny to lighten the burden of taxation that comes upon other property. You are thus compelling a part of the property of the State to pay for the protection of the whole property, which is both inexpedient and unjust. The State has no right to know any difference between property for religious and property for non-religious purposes. All property that does not belong to the State should be taxed. Whatever the State gives, whether to ecclesiastical, benevolent, or educational institutions, should be given by direct appropriations, that the people of the State may see and know how much they give, where they give, when they give, and for what they give. I am happy to say that this subject of taxation of church property has been up before the legislature of this State. I hope it will be introduced again at the next session, and every session thereafter, till just and equal taxation becomes the law in this State, as it is in California.

It seems to me that there is no principle of political ethics plainer than this, that since in exempting ecclesiastical property from taxation you must over-tax all other property by just the amount exempted, you are thereby committing a legal robbery upon every tax-payer in this State; and doing it in the name of religion cannot sanctify the injustice.

There are thousands of people in this State, intelligent, moral, industrious, law-abiding citizens, who do not believe in any church institutions whatever, and who object to taxation for what they have no interest in, and are perhaps strongly opposed to; and in the name of political justice and religious liberty, I wish to put on record my protest against such taxation.

Do not suppose, friends, that I advocate this measure in a spirit of hostility to the churches. Not at all! I speak simply for justice and equal rights. If I may be allowed to be personal, I may say that I belong to that class of men whose interest is supposed to be identified with the fortunes of the Church; but, as an independent man, preaching before a society that is proud to call itself Independent, we demand that the State shall no longer exempt us and tax others for our support. We cannot see why the parsonage should go scot free of taxes, while the home of the poor mechanic across the way is compelled to bear its tax-burdens, local, county, and State. It is a kind of vicarious suffering we are unwilling to impose.

"America," says Mr. Parton, "has been the paradise of dead-heads." True; and since Congressmen have been forced to pay for their postage, paper, and penknives, the biggest dead-heads are the preachers. Yes, we preachers.

Go into the store to buy a paper collar, and the clerk dead-heads you by selling it at one cent under retail price. The very railroads insult you by classing you with children under twelve, and run you through on half-fare.

If we preachers are anything, we are men first, and preachers next; and as men I, for one, beseech the State, and all corporations and individuals, to treat us, not as children or charity-subjects, but as men able and willing to pay full fare through this world, like other men. I have always thought it consistent with self-respect to decline all dead-head tickets on railroads, and I want the law-makers of the State to understand that there is one Church, up at Sparta, in this State, that declines to accept its dead-head taxation tickets.

I am opposed to this whole dead-head system, from beginning to end; opposed to it because it makes the preacher a beggar at the feet of society, and pauperizes the Church itself; but opposed to it principally because it is unjust to compel the extra and anti-Church people of the State to pay taxes on property belonging to the Church people.

By exempting from taxation this elegant church across the way, every Jew in Milwaukee, every German rationalist in Madison, every mechanic in Racine, every farmer in Rock, every lead-miner in Iowa County, is extra taxed. It matters not how much. A three-penny tax on tea was enough to precipitate the American Revolution. It is not the amount, but the injustice, of the tax wherein lies the evil and the grievance. Just so long as Church property is exempt, just so long is all other property in the State over-taxed, and just so long is the State indirectly supporting a State Church in this country.

But it is said, in objection, that the churches ought not to be taxed, because they are a benefit to the community, as they educate and promote the morals of the people. Granted! Does this give them title to exemption? Are there not a great many other institutions that might claim exemption on the ground of their service to the public? As I understand it, bath-houses, laundries, and barber-shops are doing something to promote true religion, if "cleanliness is next to Godliness." Barnum's great "moral show," all first-class theatres and concerts, and, according to Haweis, a well-tuned hand-organ, contribute somewhat to the development of morals as well as æsthetics. And what shall we say of the orders of Masonry, Odd Fellows, Grangers—do they not promote charity, benevolence, and fraternity? Is their influence not conducive to public morality? And why then should their halls be taxed?

And our newspapers surely do something to conserve good morals, those that always tell the truth, and our savings banks that pay back what they take over the counter, and our railroads that carry passengers for three cents a mile, and many other institutions are either directly or indirectly promoters of the morals as well as the comfort and happiness of the public. If we exempt all institutions which benefit society in some way, pray what would be left to tax except gambling-saloons, rum-holes, and brothels? The plea that exempts the Church exempts all; the justice that taxes one must tax all.

If it be urged that religious institutions ought not to be taxed because they yield no pecuniary returns, we reply that a great deal of personal property and real estate is unproductive, which is nevertheless taxed, from the piano that stands dumb in the corner of the parlor in the city, to the sandy land in the counties of Juneau and Jackson. Property is taxed not because it is productive, but because it is protected, and where there is no taxation there can be claimed no protection.

But it is urged again that to tax the churches is inexpedient, as it would kill out a great many of the poorer and weaker ones. Perhaps it would. Many churches are already staggering under all they can carry, and an additional tax-burden might crush them. So, many a farmer I know, who would gladly turn his yearly tax toward lifting the mortgage that is pressing heavily on his farm; but he knows the State must be paid or his farm be sold for taxes. Is it harder for the poor church than for the poor farmer? No doubt some churches could not survive taxation, but if their existence is dependent on State favors or appropriations, or what amounts to the same thing, the remittance of their taxes, then is it not time that these churches give place to something that can live by virtue of its own vigor and vitality? Is it not true that we have about double the number of church edifices required to seat the church-going public? Half of the religious societies nearly are superfluous, but they live, as Parton says, "because they cannot quite succeed in dying. They hold on and will hold on as long as it is possible for the annual expenses to be met. The law of the survival of the fittest hungers for their extinction, but that beneficent law is balked and frustrated by exemption from taxation."

But while taxation would kill the weaker, it would strengthen the stronger churches. It would prune away the off-shoots and send the sap circulating up the main trunk. It would be a check-mate on their sectarianism that divides churches by splitting theological hairs. It would remand a good many preachers to the real places to which God called them, and leave the pulpit to the competition of talent that might adorn it.

And while taxation might be a source of ruin to the smaller, it would be a source of revenue from the large and wealthy societies. Millions of dollars are expended for religious luxuries, pious vanities, theological shows, confectionary religion, by the wealth and fashion of the age; ought this not to be taxed?

In New York City the wealth invested in Jewish synagogues, Catholic and Protestant churches, is fabulous. It is estimated that the property belonging to the Catholic Church alone in New York cannot be less than eighty millions of dollars, while, as Chicago would say, at the little village of St. Louis it is computed at twenty millions of dollars, and still Catholics are greedy for more dead-head property. They exhibit commendable enterprise, energy, and tact in preëmpting the best building sites and erecting structures that seem to be built for eternity. I do not for a moment fancy that they will ever absorb one-half of the State, as they did in England in the fourteenth century, or two-fifths of it as they did in France in the last. I have no great fear that any kind of ecclesiasticism will monopolize our domain and force the State to take refuge in confiscation, as they have done in Mexico; for we have too many public schools for that, and are too far away from the dark ages,—but I do hold that just and equal taxation demand that these millions of dollars belonging to Catholic, Jewish, and Protestant sects and societies be taxed for the support of the government that protects them. The State has no right to impose an extra tax on my neighbor's property to support my church. Let me enjoy my religion as I please, but let me pay for it. Let him enjoy his as he will, reading on Sundays at home, riding in the country, walking in the woods, sailing on the lake—so long as he pays just and equal taxes, and obeys the civil laws, the State has no business to institute an inquisition into his religion, nor tax him one cent to support a religion which is the private property of his neighbor,—and as a preacher I demand that the State shall not tax others for my support.

If the gospel I believe in has not enough back-bone to stand alone, stand without leaning against the State, then let it go down. If it does not so appeal to the reason and the conscious wants of men as to receive their voluntary support, then let the poor thing die. If it has not vitality sufficient to hold its own in the struggle of ideas, then it is either born before its time, or has outlived its time, and in either case should be supplanted by ideas that are stronger and better adapted to the changing wants of a growing age.

It is not the function of the State to "protect" religion any more than it is to protect our manufactures. "Hands off," we say to the State. A fair competition, an even chance, is all the Church ought to ask or ought to have. I have unbounded faith in the common sense of humanity; I have faith also in a common sense religion, and faith that they will find and fit one another if the old mother State will get out of the way. I believe, too, in a religion that can bear the sunlight and the storm; that needs not to be kept under glass cases, like wax flowers, to keep it from soiling, or preserved in naptha, like potassium, to prevent oxidation. Such a delicate valetudinarian religion is too frail for the bracing atmosphere of our institutions. It had better emigrate. If the Church in America is to survive, it must pull its own oar and be ready to take the stroke. It must become too proud to go begging of the State; too robust and independent to need government aid; too just to demand it; too honest to accept it. When it takes this attitude, then we may see an independent Church within a free State, and not till then.

In the early stages of "nation making," the union of Church and State, as I have pointed out, was necessary to the progress of each; but that stage has been passed, and we have now reached the point in our political development when a further progress demands that Church and State shall be entirely separated, and pursue independently their special lines of development; and to this end let all ecclesiastical property be taxed. Justice and equality demand it. The welfare of the State, and I believe also the welfare of the Church, would result from it.

At the risk of wearying your patience I will call your attention to one or two more points of contact between Church and State. They are lingering reminiscences, vanishing "rudiments," as Darwin would call them, of organs once used in our progenitors.

The first that I shall speak of is the law providing for the employment of chaplains in Congress, in our State legislatures and other institutions supported by public money. It is true this is not a grievous tax upon the people, but the principle is in violation of the spirit of our laws, for it is taxing the people to support a "government clergy." If we may judge from recent appearances, the last chaplain will soon be heard in the legislature of this State. At their last meeting we saw our honorable law-makers introducing facetious and absurd propositions concerning the dispensing with the services of chaplain, and prohibiting or abridging the remuneration of the same. The most sacred thing in religion, prayer, was joked about in the most flippant manner in this room by the people's representatives. And why? Not, I believe, because those gentlemen have not respect for the clergy of this city, not because they have not reverence for the truths of Christianity, but because they regard the ceremony of a prayer every morning in the legislature as an impertinence, an intrusion of the Church in the affairs of the State; and so it is. Whether men ought to feel devout at such a time is not the question. The fact is they do not feel devout, do not go there to listen to prayers, and do not wish to hear them; and hence they attempted to get rid of a service which is to them a waste of time and weariness to the flesh. Who could blame them? Why should we try to keep alive an obsolescent custom when the spirit which once dwelt in it has departed? What a farce for a preacher to rise in such a place and solemnly say, "Let us pray," when the honorable gentlemen are absorbed in reading in the morning papers their great speeches of yesterday, are sharpening their lead pencils in prime for the next debate on the railroad question, or figuring up their chances for re-election! For the sake of religion we ought to protest against this dragging of prayer into places where it is no longer wanted, simply because it was a custom established by our great, great grandfathers; and for the sake of the State let us protest against this intrusion of the officers of the Church in affairs that belong exclusively to the officer of the State. "Mind your own business," is an injunction which the Church must learn to heed, if, in the future, she would save herself many snubbings, jostlings, jealousies, and heart-aches.

There remains but one more point of contact between Church and State to which I will ask your patient attention this evening, and this is in our public schools, producing no little friction and jar in the social machinery.

It would give me great satisfaction to feel that all of you could concur with me in what I am about to say, but I am prepared to find that some of you will feel the strongest antagonism toward my sentiments. I cannot, however, withhold them. My subject is the relation of Church and State, and as I believe they should be entirely separated, logical consistency compels me to point out one more ligature that binds them; namely, the law that enacts that *religious services be held in the public schools. We do not indeed find here the old New England Primer and the Westminster Confession and Catechism, as was taught a half century ago, in our public schools, especially in New England, but the old Primer lessons and catechetical régime still linger to some extent, so great is the momentum of custom, the persistence of social habits. We see the reminiscence of the Puritanical catechism in our modern practice of Bible reading and praying in public schools. The law that requires the teacher each day to go through the form of reading from Scripture and praying before the children are allowed to proceed to business should be repealed. Now I do not deny that the Bible is an excellent book to read from in public schools when proper selections are made; but as a matter of fact, is it not in most schools read as a mere formal and perfunctory service? The master reads it because he must, and the children endure it because they must, or surreptitiously study their lessons meanwhile. In most cases is it not a waste of time? But were this the only objection to the practice, we might suffer it in silence. There is another reason why I think it is not only expedient but it is our duty to insist no longer on Bible reading as a religious service in our public schools.

Catholics, Jews, and Infidels are taxed to support these schools. They must send their children to them, or incur additional expense by educating them in private schools. To many of these people, the custom of reading from the Bible in schools is offensive. Now it seems to me that to compel such persons to listen to a ceremony in schools which they are compelled to support is very like a Protestant persecution of a petty sort, which we ought to be ashamed of. If you say that such people ought to get rid of their prejudices against Bible reading, they might retort that we ought to get rid of our prejudices for it.

To the Jew the New Testament is a record of a false Messiah, and contains the religion of a people who have persecuted him in every land save this since the Christian era. He is a strict monotheist, and abhors the doctrine of the trinity of the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. The book is, therefore, to him not sacred; it may be obnoxious to see it treated as such. He has a right to his opinion, and we ought to respect it. To the Catholic, the Bible, as read in public by a layman, a schoolmaster, one unanointed, has been for three centuries a hated symbol of Protestantism. To see such a man read it is perhaps as obnoxious to him as the performance of the mass by a priest in the public school would be to a Protestant. Is it wise, is it kind, is it right thus to outrage his feelings? If you would realize how he feels, just put yourself in his place. Imagine, you Protestants, that your children were compelled to dip their fingers in holy water and make the sign of the cross every morning before entering the school. You would not submit to it. Yet what harm in a little water on the tips of the finger? the Catholic might reply. It is not the water, but the symbol which that ceremony stands for that is hateful to you; and just so, since Bible reading by a layman has always been regarded by Catholics as the peculiar symbol of Protestantism, its reading by a schoolmaster in public schools is obnoxious to them. Now, as I would not have them do by us, I would not do by them. As I would wish the Catholic to remove his cup of holy water, so I ask the Protestant to remove his holy Bible. Let us banish from such places everything that can excite hostility and opposition to our public schools. We must preserve them. The welfare of the nation demands it.

But it is sometimes said in objection that our republican institutions are founded on the Bible, and therefore the State must teach the Bible in order to preserve its foundation. If this were true, then the Bible should be thoroughly studied as a text book, whereas it is now only read in a very superficial manner, as a religious service; and who will presume that the instruction which comes from such five or ten minutes' daily Bible-reading in our public schools is the sword of our might and shield of our liberty? But it is well for every one to understand that the Bible is not the source of our political institutions. It might as easily be proved to be the source of the anarchy of Spain, monarchy of England, or despotism of Russia, because the Bible is found there. Republics do not spring from the Bible, nor rest upon it. You will look in vain in Old or New Testament for that which inspired the Declaration of Independence. It so happens that the very man who wrote that Declaration was a so-called "Infidel."

You find love in the Bible, all through the New Testament especially, but nowhere do you find liberty as we understand that word. You find in the Bible faith, charity, humility, and the duty of man to be governed by Christ; but nowhere do you find in Hebrew or Christian Scripture the doctrine of the right of man to govern himself; and this is the stuff out of which republics are built, and it was found in old Athens as well as in young America. Do not imagine me to be finding fault with the Bible; far from it. I wish simply to refute the very common notion among Christians that the Bible is the fountain of everything good in this world. It is the source of the Christian religion, which is much to say, but it is not the source of our republican institutions—and therefore is the argument invalid that justifies the Bible in public schools as a political measure.

No, friends, our Republic does not rest on the Bible, much less on a five-minutes' daily Bible-reading in our schools; then why insist on it? Reason does not retain it. It is custom that holds it, and people do not see, what Stuart Mill says, that "the despotism of custom is everywhere the greatest hindrance to human advancement." The best argument one hears to preserve the custom is this: "I don't believe in giving in to the Catholics!" Well, I believe always and everywhere in "giving in" to justice, whether it is to Catholics, Jews, Chinese, or Modoc Indians. I am not at all ashamed of "giving in," or "knuckling down," to the Golden Rule. It is at all times noble to be just, and especially so when justice cannot be exacted of us. We have, indeed, the power; but we have no right, nor reasonable excuse, for compelling to submission Jews and Catholics. It does not endanger our institutions to remove the obnoxious symbol. While it remains it is a constant source of irritation and social discord. It engenders the hostility of the Catholics to our public school system, and gives them the best excuses for assaulting it. Remove the Bible, and we take the feather from their dart; we disarm their prejudices; we conciliate instead of irritate; we make friends where now we make enemies; and, above all, we do unto them as we would that they should do unto us,—and all this we do without sacrificing anything but a little false pride, and antiquated custom, which, as Carlyle expresses it, "stands, like any rotten post, because it is not shaken." This is plain talk, friends, without any attempt at dodging, or covering up with soft phrases, just what I mean. Should it offend any one, I can find consolation in the words of old Jerome: "If an offence come out of the truth, better is it that the offence come than that the truth be concealed." And if, in selecting such a reformatory subject for my theme, you think I am violating the traditions or conventionalisms of the occasion, let me say that I have more reverence for the truth than respect for traditions; and more faith that you are serving God best and humanity most by speaking what comes to you as truth, whenever it comes, than by timidly halting and doubting about proper times and proper places, and so, perhaps, go through life with your mouth shut, for fear of speaking "out of order."

I believe that it is time that the pulpit and press took off their muzzles. I am sometimes ashamed to confess that I am a preacher, because I know that many of the public look upon us either as superstitious fools or intelligent cowards; or, as Huxley has divided the English clergy, into those who are "ignorant and speak out," those who "know and are silent," and the "minute minority who know and speak according to their knowledge." And if I am not mistaken the press is ranged by the public under about the same heads. Let us "speak out" on this question of the "relation of Church and State." While we are sitting down with folded hands, congratulating ourselves on our free country and a constitution that prohibits religious tests as qualifications to office, and provides that "Congress shall make no law respecting the establishment of religion," we see an organized body in our country, whose avowed object is to amend this Constitution, in the words of its President, so as to "acknowledge God as the author of the nation's existence, . . . Jesus Christ as its ruler, and the Bible as the supreme rule of its conduct," and thus establish a theocracy in America, compelling every man to subscribe to a creed or be debarred the rights of citizenship; we see already three hundred and fifty-four millions of dollars' worth of property, belonging to ecclesiastical institutions in the United States, exempted from taxation every year; we see an enormous amount of sectarian pilfering from the public treasury, in the shape of direct appropriations by our legislatures to denominational institutions, both Catholic and Protestant; and finally we see our public schools, in many places, run in the interest of the dominant sect, and made a mere appendage to some ecclesiastical institution, and trustees of schools exhibiting more zeal to inquire concerning an applicant's creed than concerning his character, concerning the soundness of his faith than the soundness of his methods of instruction, concerning his experience in prayer-meetings and Sunday-schools than his qualifications as an educator of youth in secular branches. There is needed a civil service reform all through our schools as much as at Washington. If there is nepotism there, there is sectarianism here. The school committee, as agents of the State, have no business to know or care whether the applicant is a Christian or Jew, Catholic or Protestant, theist or atheist. The only question they have authority to ask is, What is his moral character, and what his intellectual qualifications for the office he seeks? We must bear in mind that the purpose of the State in founding schools was not, properly speaking, to make good Christians, or good Jews, or good Infidels, but good citizens; that and nothing more. To this end the schools should be thoroughly secularized. Every remnant of the old New England Primer and Catechism should be swept clean out of them. The State should write on the door of every public-school building, "Positively no admittance to the Church here," and enforce that rule to the letter. I have already told you what, in my opinion, that rule includes.

I do not for a moment flatter myself that most of you will agree with me in what I have said. I think there may be others here who do agree, but who will forever keep a "discreet silence," because it is unpleasant to find fault; but I fondly hope that there are others here who, realizing that it is necessary to find fault with wrong before you can right the wrong, will be willing, for the good they may do, to play the role of the fault-finder, and harass our law-makers until they learn, as Mr. Maine says, "to discriminate between a rule of law and a rule of religion;" to provide for just and equal taxation, and make Church and State independent. This they can do and will do. That the entire separation of Church and State will be the final issue of this process of political and religious fermentation and segregation going on for three centuries, I cannot for a moment doubt. All the signs of the times point to it. Look at the sixteenth century and then at the nineteenth, and you see the arrows on the map of history indicate the current of events flowing steadily in one direction, in one broad gulf-stream, toward the final and complete separation and independence of Church and State. I believe that this is our goal because, as the preacher would say, "Providence has willed it;" because, as the lawyer would say, "It is in harmony with the spirit of our laws;" because, as the political orator says, "It is manifest destiny;" because, as the modern philosopher says, "It is fulfilling the law of social evolution." But I am not one of those of which the New York Nation speaks, who believe "that all will come out right," without any special effort of our own, and by reason of some good luck with which Providence has endowed the race. This is the optimism of the savage, of indolence or indifference. The optimism of the civilized man is that which believes that things will work together for good if man will work together with things, and be himself a wheel, and an important one, in the mills of God that grind so slow and fine.

If, friends, I have set to work a little human machinery in this State, to effect this refining work in civilization, I am sufficiently rewarded and am content.

*The law in Wisconsin does not now require Bible reading in public schools, though the practice is still observed in most schools of the State. It is still a custom expected, if not exacted, by the school board.

[For The Index.]

CHARACTER INDEPENDENT OF BELIEF.

A BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH OF PROFESSOR PETER ENGELMANN, OF MILWAUKEE.

The time was when the acknowledgment of scepticism in religion was the signal for social ostracism. Avowed atheism was not only stigmatized as an opinion, but popular prejudice rendered impossible the avowed atheist's business success. "Be politic, at least," was the advice of a church-member to a so-called infidel, some thirty years ago: "Subscribe to the church, if you cannot to its creed. It is a bread-and-butter consideration." "Better poverty than policy," was the reply. "Let them hunt me down, I will not be a hypocrite." And poverty was his portion. He was looked upon as an enemy to society; an object of pity or holy horror; a subject of prayer, albeit his attitude as a citizen was above reproach, his moral integrity above suspicion. It was a brave man or woman, then, who dared advance free thought in a Christian community. It is comparatively easy to-day to take sides with a redoubtable band of doubters. You often hear men say, now, "I have long disbelieved in the Christian dogmas, but it would not pay to say so."

"The thoughts of men are widening with the process of the suns."

It is now common to be true to conviction. The sceptic of the hour cares little for the contumely cast upon him by the religionist. He steadfastly goes on, establishing character instead of substantiating creed, and wins at last a recognition of this apart from any church consideration. He elicits approval of deeds apart from professions,—of principle apart from piety.

When notable examples of such heroism and of such recognition are known to us, who hold liberty of thought as the dearest of boons,—all the more precious for its high cost,—it seems simply just to the cause of freedom to pay them a fitting tribute; with no disposition to laud and magnify,—no spirit of triumph, as if we should say, "Behold how we free thinkers live and die!" but in the spirit of sympathy with goodness, on whatsoever soil it grows; and in order to carry conviction, if possible, to the Orthodox religionist, that goodness is not a growth peculiar to the churches, and that avowed "infidelity" is not inconsistent with the purest integrity; above all, in the desire to encourage, by these exemplars, all free-religionists to speak and to live their honest thought; to suffer, if need be, for the freedom they hold dear.

Such an exemplar was the late Professor Peter Engelmann, founder and principal of the German and English Academy in Milwaukee. His life-long, self-sacrificing devotion to freedom, his courageous promulgation of free thought—always in the vanguard and against the tide of public opinion,—are worthy of emulation. From such a life, with its wondrously fruitful results, may the conclusion be drawn that it is ever best to be brave and untrammelled, outspoken, and onward-looking, inspired by far-off and not immediate results. It will, indeed, be allowed but few to reap such a harvest as did this scholarly, unselfish educator. Few are entitled to such recognition as is now the reward of this beloved teacher, this untiring servant of progress. Professor Engelmann is crowned to-day with universal accord, and the laurel was gained through obedience to principle.

Peter Engelmann was born in a village of Rhenish Russia. His parents were farmers, as were his elder brothers, and they desired to make a farmer of him also; but he had such a yearning after books and opportunities for study that he was finally allowed to attend a better than the village school, the "Gymnasium" at Kreuznach, where he worked his own way, taking charge of several children of the family where he boarded.

His parents were pious people, and all his surroundings were religious. Still, though much attached to his family, and gratefully attached to the clergyman of his native village, he very early in life began to doubt the Christian dogmas. He was continually perplexing his teachers of religion at the various schools with questions like "Why?" "How could that be?" and pointing out the contradictions and impossibilities of the religious teachings. For this reason his school certificates, of various grades, always first-class and full of praise in regard to his conduct and moral character, generally contained the wish and hope that he "might become more interested in matters of religious belief." Even in youth, as ever afterward, he spoke frankly whatever he thought. This outspokenness was his prominent characteristic.

He entered the University of Berlin in 1843, where he studied mathematics, astronomy, and the natural sciences generally, with excellent success. The noted astronomer, Professor Encke, seems to have been favorably disposed toward him, as he employed Engelmann with calculations for the Berlin Astronomical Annals. He was a favorite with all his schoolmates, as he was kind and generous in disposition, amiable in social intercourse, and unselfish in the highest degree.

He was always enthusiastically devoted to the cause of the mental and political liberation of mankind; and when the revolution of 1848 approached, he was one of the first agitators for liberty. He gave up the career that stood open before him, if he remained loyal to despotism, and published a revolutionary paper, which was for a time printed in an old saw-mill near the Rhine. After the failure of this revolution, he, with a number of radical friends, emigrated to the "sweet land of liberty."

Professor Engelmann found himself working on a farm in Michigan, soon after his arrival in this country. "Latin" farming proved no more profitable for him than for others who have attempted it. In 1850, he came to Milwaukee, and taught a district school south of the city for awhile, and then founded the Milwaukee German and English Academy. In this institution he unselfishly and devotedly labored until within a few days of his death. His labors have reaped a rich harvest in this field. In the school, and by his connection with the "National German-American Teachers' Union," as well as by many articles and lectures, he has done a great deal to introduce more rational methods of teaching youth, according to Pestalozzi's and Frœbel's ideas. He desired the instruction in natural science, natural history, in fact, all instruction, to be "object teaching." For some years it had been his intention to publish a hand-book of universal history for the use of schools. He was also about to prepare a teacher's manual of mathematics. His loss to the rising generation, in this direction, can scarcely be estimated, inasmuch as his methods of teaching partook greatly of his own rational views. The results of these methods proved very satisfactory in his school. Although serious and strict in his classes, never, it is said, was teacher more beloved and revered than he was by his pupils, boys and girls. They all felt that his life and love were devoted to them.

Professor Engelmann was one of the founders of the Wisconsin Natural History Society, and its museum owes more to his labor than to anything else. Since his death, it has been named "Engelmann's Museum." He was one of the leaders of the first liberal society in this city, the Freeman's Society, and was a member of the present Liberal Society. He was one of the first who agitated for the anti-slavery party against almost the whole population. Hence he always had many political enemies; but even these have been proud to pay his character the highest tributes of respect. He was always uncompromisingly in favor of woman's equality, and an active member of the Radical Democracy, who have declared themselves in favor of woman's suffrage. Wherever liberty came in question, he was always to be found on its side with his whole heart.

He was always busy delivering popular, scientific, and historical lectures, for which he never took any remuneration. He wrote many articles, on all manner of subjects, for many papers—always in the interest of free thought. His last work in this direction, before his sickness, was a pamphlet to be published by the Wisconsin Union of Liberal Societies, in answer to a paper written by a "Pastor Sheissynth," who made a futile attempt to prove materialism to be wrong, and tending to immorality. He was ever a professed materialist, and firm in his convictions to the last breath.

His death was caused by a congestion of the lungs, and was so sudden as to be an untold shock to friends, pupils, and the entire community. Although it was his request that no formal obsequies should mark his funeral, the feeling in the city was so intense that it was one of the largest and most imposing funerals ever known here. There were no religious forms observed, but it was a perfect ovation to a man universally beloved and respected. "It will be such a sad funeral," said one; "you know he was an infidel; there will not be even a prayer." Sad it was, but not in this sense,—not through the lack of solemn forms. It was the people's loss, deeply felt, sincerely mourned. Hundreds of old and young followed the remains to their last resting-place, which was heaped with floral tributes till the unsightly new grave was hidden in blossoms. Tears and tender reminiscences were mingled with them, and so this good and useful man went to rest from his labors.

Bravely and sweetly as he had lived, so did he die. Conscious of death's approach, of the completion of his usefulness, and without a dream of a future existence, he felt his life go out with absolute content. Many have been the assertions of religionists, that rationalism might be good for living, but it would not stand the test of dying. A prejudiced press even to-day publishes false and garbled accounts of the death-bed scene of a noted atheist. Fortunately, there is ample testimony to the fact that materialistic views interfere no more with a good man's peaceful death than with his useful life. The assertions to the contrary are day by day proven false. The materialist is not stimulated to noble activities by the hope of a future reward; by the selfish thought of good accruing to himself alone, beyond the grave. He is satisfied with the simple fact of right doing for right's sake. He is satisfied to reap every day results which he can see and feel—see in the benefit he brings to his fellow-man; feel in the benefit he brings to himself from the reaction of right doing. The culmination of Professor Engelmann's unselfishness seems manifest in the very fact of his materialistic belief. Without a thought of praise from God or man, he was content just to work away at the crude materials of freedom and education, content with simply being a stepping-stone on which the perfecting race of man may climb toward that perfection which—in our faith—is Nature's plan; and this seems the highest reach to which goodness may attain. To lay one fair, white stone in the structure of liberty and knowledge, secure for the ages, is not that enough? Can heaven hold a higher, fairer reward?

Professor Engelmann's labors of love can never be lost to the world. To contemplate such a life, to study its methods, its results, is to raise a standard of manhood that would seem to be the noblest ideal of living. Its reward has come in the universal regard of all who knew him. It came to him with the consciousness of having done what he could to uplift his kind. Unostentatiously was it done always, and without a hope of reward in this world or any other. Never cringing, never fawning,—brave as a lion in uttering his freest thought,—wise, tender, and full of human sympathy,—what had such a man to fear in dying! Death was merely the fact that cut him off from usefulness. He might have regretted this fact for this reason; but death meant nothing more to him, nor need it.

And more, he has achieved a sure immortality in the thoughts of his fellow-men. The other is a secret which death's hand alone holds.

> "A whisper there, a whisper here,
> Confirms the hope to which we cling,
> But still we grasp at anything,
> And sometimes hope, and sometimes fear."

While writing this, another sudden stroke has reached the city's heart in the death of one of its oldest, most respected citizens—Sidney L. Rood. Although not occupying any public position, this man has been so identified with the growth and well-being of the city that his life may worthily be compared to the one we have tried to sketch above, as he too lived and died without religious belief. It is a proof of the progress of freedom that, in a consecrated church, this man received the commendations awarded to his character with no commendations for his lack of belief. It is a step forward when a large-hearted, broad-thinking man, like our Mr. Dudley, will say in an Orthodox pulpit, "There are thousands of men and women outside of the churches whose lives are examples of righteousness; and there are thousands of men and women in the churches whose lives prove their righteousness mere professions." Only a few years since we heard a sermon, in a Christian church, delivered over the remains of an unbeliever. That sermon was a shock to every sensitive, sympathizing heart in the audience. "How cruel!" was the general exclamation. It was the very essence of cruelty, and condemned the pietist who uttered the denouncing words to a worse hell, if possible, than the one into which he seemed delighted to cast the "miserable sinner." Yet this "sinner" had never been known to do an unkind deed, or speak an unkind word, in his life. The tribute paid by Mr. Dudley to Sidney L. Rood was an evidence of the march of mind, the development of the religion of humanity. Mr. Rood had lived uprightly; had been the liberal supporter of many feeble public institutions; had done unnumbered and unrecorded deeds of charity and benevolence. His name never resounded, nor stood upon subscription lists; but his "left-handed" munificence was well-known and well-bestowed. He was brusque, and rough-spoken oftentimes, but it was usually when rebuking some society sham. His swearing meant more piety than some men's prayers. His was a religion of deeds. He, too, will live in the thought of all who knew him.

And thus we are slowly coming to a consideration of healthy manhood and womanhood, and not of religious sentimentality. We are fast dropping out the prejudices which have obscured principles, and given undue prominence to piety. We are beginning to see already "as we are seen," "not through a glass darkly," and are growing toward a true recognition of character apart from belief.

AMELIA A. WILLIAMS.

MILWAUKEE, July 10, 1874.

Poetry.

[For THE INDEX.]

"UT AMERIS, AMABILIS ESTO."

TRANSLATED FROM THE RUSSIAN OF OZBONHAIEZ.

BY A. W. KELSEY.

The Law of Love, which long ago was given unto men,
Still lives—in books! But what a need
Of loving life, in word and deed,
And true espousal of that creed
Which Christ expounded then!

Oh, that the Founder of the Faith would come another time!
What stern rebukes he would bestow
On forms, lip-service, and the show
Which lets one Sunday's homage go
As purge for six days' crime!

That mockery—the Christian Church—is seen on every hand;
The rich man's Lord is worshipped there;
The house of God, the place of prayer,
Alas, is but a pious snare
Which money can command.

The Laws of Trade are held to be above the Laws Divine;
Expediency, worldly wise,
A cover for deceit and lies,
Is still the same, and sneering cries—
"These men have drunk new wine."

Ah God, is it for ends like these that thou didst place us here?
If Code or Pandect be a guide
For hearts that would with thee abide,
Christ's sermon on the mountain-side
We do not need to hear.

Ye who live not in your belief, know this as wholly true:
"Though ye have prophesied through ME,
And in my name wrought wondrously,
Yet will my last just sentence be,
Your works I never knew."

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING AUGUST 8.

E. J. Miller, 10 cents; Wm. Brunson, 10 cents; Jno. Hendrie, 10 cents; Wm. Brime, $3; Miss Devereux, $3; Godfrey Gundrum, $3; Geo. H. Barton, 75 cents; J. W. Scammall, $1; Julius Kirschbaum, 75 cents; C. M. Dennison, $3; Wiley Britton, $1; H. D. Bennett, $5; J. J. Hoopes, 25 cents; McKean & Forest, 25 cents; H. D. Roman, 75 cents; W. W. Justice, $1; A. Starbird, $3; H. F. Marshall, $3; Roger Sherman, $6; Thomas Carleton, $3; S. R. Kochler, $3; C. D. Von Vechter, $1; Jonas Hilton, $1.50; L. Kingma, $3; J. S. Kearns, $1.50; W. D. LeSeur, $1; Reuben Tomlinson, $3; Geo. Mansfield, $3; A. W. Kelsey, $1; A. Stephan, $3; Thomas Nye, $3; M. S. Wetmore, $3; J. R. Buchanan, $3; Maggie Devor, $1.50; Wm. Lawrence, $1.50; Merritt Peckham, $3; H. S. Ware, $3; Jane Wood, $4; O. B. Frothingham, $350; Wm. Wiley, $10.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—Postage on THE INDEX is five cents per quarter, dating from receipt of the first number, payable in advance at the place of delivery.

N. B.—When writing about a former remittance, always give the date of such remittance as exactly as possible.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY

BY

THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

NO. 1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

Toledo Office: No. 35 Monroe Street. Julius T. Frey, Agent and Clerk.

Francis Ellingwood Abbot, ... Editor.
Abram Walter Stevens, ... Associate Editor.
Octavius Brooks Frothingham, Thomas Wentworth Higginson, William J. Potter, Richard P. Hallowell, William H. Spencer, Mrs. E. D. Cheney, Rev. Charles Voysey (England), Prof. Francis W. Newman (England), Editorial Contributors.

BOSTON, AUGUST 13, 1874.

SUNDAY LECTURES.—The Editors of The Index will lecture occasionally on Sundays, if desired, within a convenient distance of Boston.

Referring to Mr. Gannett's recent striking article on "Mystery in Religion," the Independent of July 30 says: "On the whole, Mr. Gannett thinks that we had better stick to our science, and yet make up our minds not to decry mystery. We need both, and shall get along poorly enough without either. It is a most sane word from the ranks of the Radicals."

The amount of fairness invested in the attacks on Free Religion that meet our eye is usually so economical, that we feel like the countryman who stopped at the Maxwell House, Nashville, for dinner. The waiter inquired what he would order, and was told to bring "something of what he had." The waiter brought him a regular dinner upon unusually small dishes, and set them round his plate. The countryman surveyed them thoughtfully for a moment, and then drily remarked, "Well, I like your samples; now bring me a dinner!"

These naughty resolutions, passed by the little boys of a Pennsylvania city, show that the "spirit of '76" still breathes in the people of that doughty State, and prove that it is the right place in which to hold the approaching National Centennial Celebration:—

Resolved, That we put our best foot foremost in this great cause, and fling to the roaring hurricane our banner, inscribed "Free Vacation and Boys' Rights."

Second—We will go in swimming whenever we darn please, and won't come any extra shenanigan about getting our hair dry to sell the folks at home; and that we will have shirts to wear so that the big fellows won't laugh at us when we are undressing and making our toilets by the sad river waves.

Third—We are willing to do the square thing by our parents, but ain't cut out for tending to babies, and we won't do any manual or girlual labor about home that does not properly come within boys' sphere, and not that if it interferes with the hours of play, which health demands boys should have; namely, between seven o'clock in the forenoon and nine in the afternoon, with necessary intermissions for meals.

Fourth—And be it enacted that neither straps and taws, nor cowhides, nor yet slippers, will have any effect in this rebellion. If they try that game, it will be good-by, John, for errands, and we shall ever pray. That's the kind of hair-pins that we are.

The recent attempt to assassinate Prince Bismarck by a Catholic was paralleled in this country by a similar attempt by another Catholic very nearly at the same time. Rev. Henry Miller, D.D., pastor of the Fifty-first Street Baptist Church, New York, while he sat at his study desk, writing, on Sunday evening, July 19, had two pistol shots fired at him, and narrowly escaped with his life. He had not long before said in a sermon that the Catholics aimed a blow at his religion in trying to prevent Bible-reading in the schools; and this sermon, reported in the daily papers and attacked editorially in the New York Tablet and other Catholic publications, was the undoubted cause of the assault. We commend this terrible incident to the attention of those who believe that all danger from religious fanaticism in this country has passed by forever. Human passions are to-day exactly what they always have been; and so long as superstition survives, so long will it be willing to shed blood in its own defence. Grave questions between the Church and the Republic still remain to be settled; and he is a sanguine man, sanguine even to the verge of insanity, who believes that they can be settled without inflaming the passions of the ignorant and superstitious to a most dangerous pitch. The only hope of freedom in its struggle with Christianity lies in a quiet but inflexible resolve, cost what it may, to handcuff superstition by depriving it of all legal privilege. Look to your Liberal Leagues, you who mean to hand down to posterity the priceless inheritance of religious liberty.

THE "NEW SOCIAL REPUBLIC."

There is comparatively little danger to a staunch ship, however severe the storm, provided it has plenty of sea-room; the danger is in approaching the coast. There is comparatively little danger to any truth or true institution, however wild the billows of free discussion, provided it is not wrecked by the timidity that would steer it upon the rock of a fancied immunity from all examination. In this age of universal scepticism, it was to be expected that not only all political and religious, but also all social, principles and institutions would be challenged, doubted, and rejected by many. Church and State, with their fundamental ideas and their visible social ramifications, are and will be exposed to the most searching scrutiny; whatever is good will survive, whatever is evil will sooner or later perish. The foundations of morals are to be tested quite as severely as the foundations of theology or philosophy, and whatever cannot stand the test will disappear. This is all right and wise and beneficial; and no one need feel the least alarm. Where thought and speech are free, and where government is only the expression of the public will, it is idiocy to be quaking with dread lest somehow two and two shall cease to make four, or lest adultery shall be transfigured into a virtue. Truth will be truth, and good morals will be good morals, to the end of the chapter; and they will be so regarded until mankind goes "clean daft" in a lump. Let us not think the world is upside down because a few people, either viciously, conscientiously, or whimsically, choose to stand on their heads. There will necessarily be some rough weather in the voyage of free thought; but, if we are old salts, let us not get sea-sick. At all events, let us not imagine the good ship Reason is going to the bottom, or starting for the moon, merely because the motion makes green-hands giddy.

Such thoughts as these flash into the mind, when an unsuccessful war frightens France back into Catholicism, or when a great scandal case is trumpeted as the inauguration of the "new social republic." While thousands and thousands of the best citizens, both radicals and conservatives, are grieving inexpressibly at the dark cloud hanging over the head of one of America's most honored sons, we hear one voice exulting in the prospect that now the great genius and vast influence of Henry Ward Beecher will be driven to declare for "free love," and thereby carry the whole world forward into the precious millennium which that phrase suggests. We quote from a journal which probably is not seen by many of our subscribers, the Woodhull and Claflin's Weekly of August 8: "I have the power, I think, to compel Mr. Beecher to go forward and to do the duty for humanity from which he shrinks; and I should myself be false to the truth, if I were to shrink from compelling him. Whether he sinks or swims in the fiery trial, the agitation by which truth is evolved will have been promoted. And I believe that he will not only survive, but that, when forced to the encounter, he will rise to the full height of the great enterprise, and will astound and convince the world of the new gospel of freedom by the depth of his experiences and the force of his argument. . . . I know, too, by intimate intercourse, the opinions, and, to a great extent, the lives of nearly all the leading reformatory men and women in the land; and I know that Mr. Beecher, passing through this crucial ordeal, retrieving himself and standing upon the most radical platform, need not stand alone for an hour, but that an army of glorious and emancipated spirits will gather spontaneously and instantaneously around him, and that the new social republic will have been forever established."

If we can make anything out of this hazy effusion of enthusiasm and felicitation over what, if a fact, is the most damning social disgrace of our age, it means that, if Mr. Beecher should come out boldly and defend adultery, in the abstract and the concrete, as the normal and ideal thing, he would carry the world by storm and convince all mankind that faithful, wedded love is a superstition of the past; and that a vast swarm of now timid reformers would rally about him to preach the same glorious gospel, and carry its salvation to every shore. If this is not what the Weekly means, we can make nothing out of it whatever. Now we are not unfamiliar with the spectacle of reformers somewhat pale and qualmish under the influence of the heavy ground-swell of free thought; we have occasionally witnessed very distressing scenes of spasmodic ill-health on board the stout ship Radicalism, as it ploughs its way across the ocean. But, we confess, Mrs. Woodhull's beatific vision of the "new social republic" is the most aggravated case of seasickness on record. There never was, and probably never will be, a case more extreme; for she distinctly pronounces Mrs. Tilton's assumed "tender, loving, womanly concessiveness" to Mr. Beecher to be the "best and most beautiful of things, the loveliest and most divine of things which belong to the patrimony of mankind." She declares explicitly that "passional starvation" (which is her synonyme for chastity) would be in the case of such a nature as Mr. Beecher's a "horrid cruelty." Enough!

Let no squeamish reader exclaim that utterances which are so shameless, if judged by any tolerable standard of morals, ought not to be quoted in any respectable journal. That is not true. Here is the mirror unconsciously held up to "free love," in which it may discern its own hideous features unmasked. Here is adultery held up for sympathy and admiration and applause, as a thing "divine"—yes, that is Mrs. Woodhull's own word. Here, in the face of all the unspeakable misery entailed upon all the parties to this fathomless scandal, is a challenge to the world to sanction and enact its cause as the organic law of a "new social republic." Your children and mine must grow up to hear and read such teachings on every hand; and accursed be the fastidiousness which forbears to brand them openly as devilish! While every pure heart in the land is saddened, sickened, asphyxiated, by the fetid exhalations now steaming up from the pit, it is fatuity to withhold the word of execration on the social philosophy that would foster them. Mrs. Woodhull may be personally an angel of purity, and spotless as the driven snow: we know nothing against her, and make no attack upon her character. But when she exultingly points to adultery as intrinsically "divine," and sure to be made fashionable by the assumed example of a great man (although she forgets how this same great man found himself without a follower, even in his own church, when he undertook to defend President Johnson in his treason to humanity); when she hails the bursting of a foul social ulcer as heralding the permanent and general establishment of "free love," and thus holds up universal ulcerism as the normal condition of social health,—it is time to tell her and all her sympathizers that the true name of her "new social republic" is Hell.

THE BIBLE SOCIETY IN THE CAPITOL.

The fifty-eighth anniversary of the American Bible Society was held in Washington, D.C., on the evening of May 17, in the hall of the House of Representatives; which would doubtless be refused to the Free Religious Association for the holding of one of their conventions, though their claim would be quite as just. The receipts for the past year were $664,436.06; the entire number of volumes issued during fifty-eight years was 30,972,786. Speaker Blaine opened the meeting, to add to the semi-governmental appearance of the celebration. Hon. Horace Maynard called attention to the fact that a Bible lay on the Speaker's desk, and said that "the Speaker thus had for his threefold guide a copy of the Bible, a copy of the laws of the United States, and a set of rules governing the House of Representatives." Professor Julius H. Seelye, D.D., of Massachusetts, who has just been appointed one of the three Commissioners in this State to report to the next Legislature on the subject of church taxation, proved his eminent fitness for this duty by saying, with reference to the statue of the Goddess of Liberty on the dome of the National Capitol, that "this statue was the real symbol of the cause of the Confederacy: the Cross was the true symbol of liberty." Such was the evident desire of this powerful Society to obtain, as far as possible, a practical recognition and indorsement of Christianity from the government of the United States—a desire, moreover, which is certainly increasing among the Protestant sects of this country.

Surely it requires very little penetration to discern that the tendency illustrated so significantly by this meeting of the Bible Society must gain immense strength, whenever it comes into open and conscious collision with the rapidly intensifying purpose of the people to secularize the government more completely. Substantially, this growing desire of the sects to secure a governmental recognition of Christianity is identical with the avowed object of the Christian Amendment party; and it will take only a slight cause to precipitate a direct struggle between the giant forces of orthodoxy and the spirit of religious liberty for possession of the government. The Christianizers are far-seeing; they are manœuvring to occupy the commanding strategic positions in advance; and, although they are so far ahead of the main body of the orthodox army as to seem unsupported by it, events will yet prove the contrary. Protestantism will yet discern the necessity either of protecting its own vanguard or of suffering a total and annihilating defeat. When the Bible Society claims for the Bible the first place among the three guides of the Speaker of the national House of Representatives, and boldly declares that the statue of Liberty ought to give place to the Cross on the dome of the Capitol, it utters the heart of the whole Protestant Church; and what are such claims and declarations but a substantial demand for the recognition of God, Christ and the Bible in the United States Constitution? Orthodoxy must yet unite in that explicit demand, or be extinguished in America; and when it comes to this, who doubts its choice? Yes, the Goddess of Liberty or the Cross of Christ—that is the issue! And so long as the organized followers of the Cross hold high jubilee in the halls of Congress, while the followers of Liberty have not yet learned to stand side by side anywhere, the omens are not propitious.

A CASE FOR SOCIAL SCIENCE.

What shall be done with the boy-murderer, Pomeroy, is now a question agitating the Massachusetts public. That the excited populace, after the discovery of his having murdered a little girl a month before he tortured to death the boy Millen, for which he is now awaiting trial, could hardly have refrained from applying Lynch law to his case, if they could have got possession of him, is doubtless true; yet it can hardly be supposed that the State of Massachusetts will deliberately hang a boy of fourteen. To do so, if not a violation of law, would be a disgrace to the enlightenment of the State and the civilization of the age. Nor ought it to be supposable that after a few years of ordinary imprisonment he will be allowed to go free. An attempt is being made, indeed, to prove that he is not a responsible agent; that he is a moral lunatic, a victim of a strange hallucination; that he is pushed to the dreadful outrages he has committed by something that may well be called a demon possessing him. A plausible story of prenatal influence was told, which seemed to bring good evidence to show that his monstrous propensity to inflict cruel torture on helpless children was impressed upon his nature before birth by the condition and acts of his mother. But this story has been completely overturned by the straightforward testimony of the mother, at the coroner's inquest, and the only thing put in the place of it is her rather fanciful belief, or surmise, that vaccination of the boy in his infancy, which appears to have produced at the time a serious and strange disease, also infected his mental nature with a kind of animal ferocity.

But even if it could be shown that Pomeroy is not a responsible being, it would not follow, as some people seem to infer, that society has no right to do anything with him. On the old theory that society punishes for crimes, such an inference might be drawn; for, where there is no moral responsibility, there can be no guilt, no crime, and no rightful punishment. But on the truer theory of dealing with criminals, which is coming into vogue, the State does not punish—at least, in any sense of awarding retribution,—but aims to protect society against harm from the criminal, and, if possible, to reform him. To say, therefore, that a human being is not a morally responsible agent, because of some defect of mental organism, does not in the least deprive society of the right of dealing with him for acts against its safety. Indeed, if a man ever loses responsibility for himself, then responsibility for him devolves upon society. At the very point where he ceases to be accountable for his own conduct, the accountability of society for his conduct begins. If there are moral lunatics, then society must take charge of them, as it does of mental lunatics, so that other persons may suffer no harm from them. And if young Pomeroy belongs to this class, he is certainly to be kept under restraint quite as much as if there were no doubt of his moral responsibility. His own plea when arrested, "Put me where I cannot do such things," indicates the solution of the question, What shall be done with him?

Yet to shut up a boy of fourteen in solitary confinement for the rest of his life, or even to put him under ordinary prison treatment, with no attempt to reform his nature, would be almost as much of a disgrace to the civilization and enlightenment of the age as it would be to take away his life. Were he a raving maniac, then, unfortunately, nothing more might be possible. But he is very far from being a raving maniac. He is described as cool, self-possessed, and as not at all lacking in intelligence. Until he made confession of his crimes, he showed a good deal of mental keenness in defending himself from the accusations made against him. And he confessed, as he says, so that his mother and brother might not be regarded as implicated in his guilt,—showing that he has some natural affection and a sense of honor. Except in the one feature of his monstrous propensity to inflict torture and death on unoffending children there appears no sign of mania or insanity about him, or even of anything strange in his nature. And that even this propensity, abnormal and horrible as it is, is not uncontrollable, is shown by his record at the Westborough Reform School. That record clearly proves that he is not wanting in mental and moral capacity, and it ought to be well considered before any theory of his moral unaccountableness be adopted. His conduct in that institution was exceptionally good, and his ability as a scholar such that he became first in his class. It was on the ground of his good conduct and his good scholarship, as Mr. Tufts, agent of the State Board of Charities, has said in his printed card, that the trustees unanimously decided that he was fit to be released. They were mistaken in this opinion, not knowing how deep-seated and strong his depraved propensity was. But the grounds on which they gave their opinion—whether he was playing a part in order to secure his release, or whether, as is more likely, his good record was the result of the restraining influences of his surroundings, and of the awakening of better desires within him—show in either case that his nature is capable of being controlled by rational motives.

What, then, is the plain inference? Is it not that he should not only be put under restraint, so that he cannot gratify his strangely demoniacal disposition to cruelty, but that he should also be put under such training that the good and useful faculties of his nature may be brought into constant exercise, and, if possible, so cultivated as gradually to smother and destroy his evil passion? It is a case interesting to biological science as well as to philanthropy. If the condition of Laura Bridgman, and the possibility of educating her through the one sense of touch, excited not only the sympathy of philanthropists but the interest of philosophers, as involving important questions of psychology, so should the case of Jesse Pomeroy call forth a like twofold interest. How much can change of surroundings do towards changing the nature of such an exceptional case of depravity? Can this demon that possesses him be exorcised—not by prayer and miracle, but by scientific methods of education? Can his mental and moral nature be freed from bondage to the evil propensity that now enslaves it? Can the power of external moral influence, of personal magnetism, of appeals to worthy desires and ambitions,—in short, all the appliances of a wise mental and moral culture, be so brought to bear upon him that he can be trained from depravity to rectitude? Can he be put, not only where he "cannot do such things," but where the very desire to do them shall be extinguished and killed? These are the questions involved in his case; and they are questions not more momentous to him than they are to society. If they can be answered affirmatively, not only is he benefited, but great light will be thrown on the general problems of moral education and the treatment of criminals, and the civilization of the race will be advanced. Let the Social Science Association take him in charge with a view to answering these questions. It is at least a case for treatment according to principles of social science; a case not for ordinary policemen, nor for a purely sentimental philanthropist to deal with, but a case for philanthropy working by scientific methods. An enlightened State should certainly by this time be able to do better for humanity than to be obliged, for the safety of society, to kill such a boy because of his crimes, or to shut him up for life as an irreclaimable monster, with no attempt to reform him. Science and civilization, no less than philanthropy, are interested in the problem of his possible reformation. W. J. P.

PARKER AND POTTER.

The following note from Dr. Bartol needs no introduction:—

MR. EDITOR:—

I ask pardon of the living and the dead (now more alive) for this repeated conjunction of already coupled names. But I am taken to task as judging the two men by a diverse rule, blaming Mr. Parker for refusing to go, and not Mr. Potter for inclining to stay.

The difference is that Mr. Parker was never requested to leave, while Mr. Potter's name is cut off. At the time of the Parker controversy, I told my brethren, if he were expelled, I was expelled with him. In fact he continued, with occasional attendance, a member of the "Boston Association of Congregational Ministers" to the end of his days; and a resolution of special sympathy with him in his illness was debated, though not passed, at a meeting of the Theological Alumni, at which I was not present, in Cambridge; not passed because other sick clergymen of the brotherhood were thought to have equal claim.

I did regret Mr. Parker's perhaps politic use of his position, but I never censured it; and the question I spoke to in my sermon after his death was whether it was graceful in the circumstances to remain in a company which, by the withdrawal of its Orthodox members, had lost its proper ecclesiastical character, and become a sort of club; while the point, in Mr. Potter's case, was of membership in the entire Unitarian body. Unwelcome I could nowhere abide, nor, I think, could Mr. Potter; and his is the first exclusion by a formal act. Mr. Frothingham's voluntary going and Mr. Potter's extrusion are not the same.

All cases are distinguished; and I need not mention the many distinctions in those which my heading suggests. Mr. Parker was a born soldier. He assailed and ridiculed what he deemed the Christian superstitions, laughed at the "Lord's Supper," put on "the whole armor" of irony, and was personal in the extreme. He was a politician; he was a power; he struck some unfair blows; he had an overweening schoolmaster's opinion of his own strength. Yet he was an honest man, and did a great and glorious work. I but touch the contrast or counterpart of one who does not sneer or scold, strive or cry, or let his voice be heard in the streets, who neither despises nor disowns Christianity, however not calling himself Christian, and who has more scientific justness than had Mr. Parker in his theology. Mr. Potter I shrink from describing, as he would from being described. Eugénie de Guéria says: "When my brother suffers, I have a pain in my side." I know my friend would shun my praise. C. A. BARTOL.

CHRISTIANITY AND SELF-RESPECT.

This paragraph appeared in the Golden Age of July 11:—

Some time ago Francis E. Abbot wrote an impeachment of Christianity on moral grounds. He denounces it "because it enjoins self-abhorrence as the first condition of the salvation which it offers, makes the denial of all worth or worthiness in mankind the first step in the Christian life, and teaches that Christ will save those alone who have lost all faith in themselves and in their own power to escape the wrath of God. It thus strikes a deadly blow at the dignity of human nature, extinguishes that noble sentiment of self-respect without which all high virtue is impossible, and smites men with the leprosy of self-contempt. It makes them crawl like reptiles before Christ, 'their hands on their mouths, and their mouths in the dust.' It is the very abolition of true manliness among men." Francis W. Newman, the distinguished English rationalist, scholar and author, has replied to Mr. Abbot at length in Frazer's Magazine. He objects to the above statement of Mr. Abbot, [which] "identifies Christian doctrine with that of St. Augustine, and is worded more strongly than a majority of Christians will accept;" and, secondly, that "the attack is directed as truly against the Hebrew religion as the Christian," illustrating this by reference to passages in Job and Isaiah. He further contends Mr. Abbot's assertion will not be proved by history, for "we have a pretty accurate acquaintance with John Knox, Oliver Cromwell, Sir Harry Vane, and many other Puritans who were high Calvinists, and accepted in their fulness, as did Luther and Calvin, the doctrine so offensive to Mr. Abbot; but it does not at all appear to have lessened their manliness, or made high virtue impossible to them." Mr. Newman holds it is unreasonable for man to try to justify himself before God, but reasonable that he should be abashed by his moral imperfections. "To put our hands on our mouths, and our mouths in the dust before Him," not in dread of punishment, but in moral contrition, appears to be the very mode in which aspiration after the highest virtue is combined with the tenderest sympathy for transgressors outwardly more guilty than ourselves. The foundation of this was laid in Judaism; Christianity has signally built upon it.

The fact that Protestants, who by our theory are only half-Christian, imperfectly illustrate the effects of Christianity in its full strength, does not at all militate against that theory; while the further fact (which Professor Newman might have stated also) that even Catholics have often shown a high degree of manliness would not militate against it, since no artificial religion can wholly crush out human nature. It remains true, nevertheless, that Christianity destroys self-respect in the exact proportion that its fundamental doctrines are consistently embodied in conviction and character; and volumes might easily be filled with slavish and pitiable professions of utter worthlessness from the lips of Christians. If Professor Newman "holds that it is unreasonable for man to try to justify himself before God," and that a grovelling attitude even before him is anything but dishonor to human nature itself, we must (with entire respect for Professor Newman) hold the contrary opinion that all human conduct which is justifiable at all is as justifiable before God as before man; and that every form of religion, Christian, Hebrew, or Pagan, which teaches men that all their "righteousness is as filthy rags," saps the very foundation of genuine manhood, and is so far a curse to the race.

Literary Notices.

THEODORE PARKER: A Biography. By Octavius Brooks Frothingham. Boston: J. R. Osgood & Co. 1874.

I had reserved for my summer reading Mr. Frothingham's life of Theodore Parker, and, although the book has been perhaps abundantly reviewed and criticised, I feel tempted to say a word on one or two points, because I think everything which helps us to a more intimate acquaintance with a life so genuine and so religious is a real good to our souls. I feel grateful to Mr. Frothingham for the review of those years, so full of work and thought and love, which show how grand life may be in any epoch and under any circumstances.

And yet, when I feel how inadequate is the portrait,—how, even in the hands of such men as Mr. Weiss and Mr. Frothingham, with every qualification for the task, and with abundant material, a biography so poorly represents the living, acting man we once knew walking among us,—I am tempted to doubt the whole value of history, and to question whether we really have any genuine apprehension of Socrates, or Jesus, or Michael Angelo, or Luther. Or does time really distil from out the heterogeneous materials of a biography the true essence of a man, so that we do know the true hero of the past better than our own contemporaries?

Mr. Frothingham's work is most scrupulously fair; he carefully weighs all the qualities which belonged to his hero, and deals out a fair measure of his talent and his accomplishment; yet I seemed to long for a more perfect synthesis, a fire to fuse all these elements into a living whole, and give us the real man who wrought upon us with such power.

One of the remarkable attributes of Mr. Parker's mental nature stands out very clearly in Mr. Frothingham's delineation—his intellectual opinion on any subject, and his moral convictions of duty in regard to it. Take the question of the negro race, for instance. Mr. Parker's ethnological inquiries, in which he took great interest, led him to doubt the future of the negro as taking a high rank in the civilization of the world; but this consideration did not for a moment blind him to the moral duty of giving him a fair chance to test his powers and enjoy his freedom. Judging from other grounds, I believe that, had Mr. Parker lived ten years longer, he would have had more hope for the negro, as well as for Italy, France, and even Spain; but this intellectual opinion never prevented his ardent sympathy with every effort for the elevation of the negro to his rightful place.

Mr. Frothingham has been severely censured for representing Mr. Parker as lukewarm towards the woman's rights movement; and yet clearly nothing could be more deliberate and careful than his judgment in the matter. But here again I think we have Mr. Parker's intellectual estimate without the glow and warmth of his feeling on this subject. Certainly my own impression is that, while he looked upon many questions regarding the relations of the sexes as deep problems, he yet considered the woman question as of the first importance in our social progress, and that the moral and religious nature which he considered her to excel in was to be the means of salvation in our government of the future.

One of his parishioners, on coming into possession of her property and receiving her first tax-bill, sent in with it a remonstrance against the injustice of taxation without representation. Mr. Parker called "to thank her," as he said, "for doing such a womanly act." But to his manly, chivalrous nature woman was a very expressive word. He liked womanly women, full of harmony and grace, and did suffer from contact with those whom oppression had made mad, and who expressed their need of freedom by rude, aggressive language. Of such a one he said: "She is a noble woman; I respect her highly; but she makes every æsthetic hair to stand on end."

And this leads me to another point, in which I think Mr. Frothingham's coloring is not quite true. He does not give us the impression of Mr. Parker's warm love and need of beauty. In spite of the quotations from the journals which justify Mr. Frothingham's statement, I think Mr. Parker valued art more highly than would appear from this book. He had little opportunity for early culture of the æsthetic nature, and his strong moral sense made him place the highest estimate on that which was useful and necessary to the mass of mankind; but there was always a yearning after things of beauty and taste. Once, asking him to lend me some books on art, he said: "Keep the others as long as you please; but please return this one, Kugler's Hand Book, as soon as you have read it; for I have it in my hand oftener than any book in my library."

But with these slight drawbacks Mr. Frothingham has anew brought out for us, in strong relief, the thorough uprightness, the clear good sense, the heroic conscientiousness, the careful preparation for all labor, and the tender, loving nature of this friend of humanity; and so he has done great service to every one who through this medium first truly knows one who represents so fully the American ideal, the qualities which we need to ensure success in the great and doubtful problem of self-government which we have undertaken.

E. D. C.

A CLERGYMAN went to a hotel to order a dinner for a number of clerical friends. "May I ask, sir," demanded the waiter gravely, "whether the party is High Church or Low Church?" "Now, what on earth," cried the clergyman, "do my friends' opinions matter to you?" "A great deal, sir," rejoined the waiter. "If High Church, I must provide more wines; if Low Church, more wittles."

Communications.

IS SUFFRAGE A NATURAL RIGHT?

If the suffrage is a natural right, can the exclusion from its enjoyment of minors, foreigners, paupers, imbeciles, and criminals, or any of them, be defended? If so, on what ground?

If THE INDEX believes the suffrage is not a natural right, on what ground of expediency does it favor woman suffrage, while opposing the God-in-the-Constitution amendment; since women constitute the mass of Christians, a class which, so far as it includes the favorers of that amendment, is identical with them?

I am not alone in considering what is duty in relation to matters above suggested.

JOHN FRANCIS SMITH.

WORCESTER, Mass., July 18, 1874.

[1. The right of suffrage is a "natural right," not in the sense of inhering inalienably in the individual, but in the sense of resulting necessarily from the nature of free institutions. A free country is one that is governed by the free will of the people; this will must be expressed; and suffrage in whatever form is the expression of it. But "the people" must include all who are endowed with the ordinary faculties of humanity, reason, and conscience, developed to the ordinary degree; while it cannot include any not so endowed. It is, therefore, no more irrational or unjust to withhold the ballot from children, or lunatics, or criminals, than it is to withhold it from horses; they do not possess reason and conscience sufficiently developed to give them this right. The disfranchisement of paupers and foreigners may or may not be justifiable; we cannot now discuss doubtful points, but only broad principles. It must also be admitted to be a delicate question just where to fix the practical limit between the sufficient and the insufficient development of reason and conscience. It is enough to say now that there must be some practical limit, and that the "natural right" to vote depends on the possession of a certain amount of reason and conscience. Inasmuch as this right results from the very nature of free institutions, which we all believe in as the best, it seems proper to call it a "natural" right.

2. Whether women should vote or not is a question depending on another: have they the requisite degree of reason and conscience? If so, they have a "natural right" to vote; and (for one) we concede the point at once. In candor we must confess that the majority of women would probably favor the Christian Amendment; but that is no more reason for disfranchising them than for disfranchising the male advocates of that pernicious measure. Liberty must perish in this country, unless the majority of the people, men and women together, love it enough to preserve it. If they want to be slaves, slaves let them be. We aim solely to show them what liberty is and requires, and to arouse a deeper love of it; but we would not crush the Christian Amendment movement itself by disfranchising its advocates. They would certainly disfranchise and disqualify us; but not so would we do to them. Our trust is in truth and justice alone; if it proves a broken reed, it shall not be because we have been false to it, or because we dare not grant the liberty we demand. Women have a right to vote, and that is enough, whether they use or abuse the right. It seems strange that so clear and simple a principle should not be better understood.—ED.]

MARRIAGE CONTRACTS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

In your remarks in THE INDEX of the 6th inst., you say: "So long as the advocates of 'free love' are perfectly free to remain unmarried, the abolition of marriage would be an interference with the liberty of those who prefer to marry."

This is a mistake, as you will see upon further consideration. If free lovers were to demand that a law be passed forbidding marriage contracts, your remarks would be timely and just; but they do not do this. They demand merely that there shall be no law to compel contracts in marriage; which is virtually done by existing enactments, which render people who cohabit, without having contracted legally, liable to a criminal prosecution. Surely you cannot say that, under these laws, free lovers are perfectly free to remain unmarried.

This is what free lovers demand. They demand that there shall be no laws affecting the relations of the sexes, thus leaving the whole matter to regulate itself under the common law of contracts, and the people to make just such contracts as they severally and respectively may desire to make, or to make none at all, if this be their choice; and such a modification of public sentiment as will accord to all contracts, and to people living together without contracts, the same degree of respectability.

VICTORIA C. WOODHULL.

[1. We are aware of no "existing enactments" which directly or indirectly operate to "compel contracts in marriage." If an unmarried man and woman choose to live together, we know of no "criminal prosecution" to which they are liable; and in at least one instance we know of such a couple having lived together unmolested by the law, if not by public opinion, till just before the man's death they voluntarily married. The instances of Goethe and Christiane, and of G. H. Lewes and "George Eliot," seem to show that in Europe, also, there is no legal penalty for such an irregular connection. Why, then, should it not be said that "free-lovers are perfectly free to remain unmarried"? It is only necessary on this point to quote this sentence from Mrs. Woodhull's own "Principles of Social Freedom": "It is true that there is no enacted law compelling people to marry."

2. But it is demanded that "there shall be no laws affecting the relations of the sexes." This is to "pass a law forbidding marriage" in effect; and we emphatically repeat that it is a direct interference with the liberty of those who prefer to marry. The abolition of any institution, of course, is the universal and most effectual prohibition of all its benefits. The marriage contract is of such a peculiar nature that it cannot be sufficiently covered or protected by any general laws of contract, inasmuch as no other contract involves the birth of new beings. There must be special laws relating to this special result of the marriage contract, to abolish which would be to inflict great wrong on all who desire this special protection,—to interfere most tyrannically with liberty in the name of liberty itself. Well might Madame Roland exclaim on the scaffold, "O Liberty, what crimes are committed in thy name!" The free-lovers, it seems, are not satisfied with their own freedom; they insist on despoiling others of theirs.

3. But the free-lovers go farther still. They "demand" such a "modification of public sentiment" as shall accord to themselves the "same degree of respectability" which is accorded to the married. Truly, a modest demand! One's opinion, it appears, is not his own; it must obey the dictates of the free-lovers. One is not allowed even the freedom of his own thought and speech by them; he must think that to be "respectable" which they declare to be such! Is there no further "demand" to be made upon us, besides this trifling requirement to think and speak just as we are bidden? We suspect that there are some intractables who will demur at this summons to throw up their hats in honor of Mrs. Woodhull's discovery of the divine right of adultery (vide quotations in the editorial columns). They hold that, in order to be thought respectable, people should be respectable; and that the homage paid to pure and noble lives can be diverted by no "demand" whatever to lives which are impure or ignoble. If you would be respected, extort respect by the crystalline purity of your life itself; it comes not at beck or call.—ED.]

WHAT IS REAL "FREE SPIRITUALISM?"

EDITOR INDEX:—

In your journal of July 9 is a communication headed "Free Spiritualism," signed by John Hardy, of Boston, and mainly made up of a series of resolutions passed at "Primary Council, No. 1, of Universal Association of Spiritualists," in that city. I have no personal acquaintance with Mr. Hardy, and only have to do with the spirit and tenor of the resolves quoted in the article, which seem to imply that many Spiritualists are too limited in their ideas of free speech to suit the broader views of this Primary Council.

The "social question" seems the great issue in view,—the test of liberty of speech in the minds of these resolvers.

I can speak for our own part of the country when I say that the large majority of the Spiritualists are dissatisfied and disgusted with this question, as discussed from the "Woodhull" standpoint. Audiences have rights, as well as speakers, and surely an audience can refuse to hear a vulgar and impudent statement of views or opinions. Does free speech give license to say anything, anywhere, anyhow, and at any time? Or shall an audience demand order, decorum, propriety, and an absence of vulgarity in such men or women as have the privilege of addressing them? For instance, not long ago I was at a large meeting of Spiritualists and other liberal people, and a woman, well-known as of the "social freedom" school, was present, and was asked to speak by the officers of the meeting,—who did not approve her views, but were willing all should be heard. She used, or abused, her privilege, not only by advocating the abrogation of all marriage laws, but by coarse and vulgar language, simply disgusting to many in the intelligent audience.

Now I assert that while the Spiritualists are not faultless by any means, for they are human, yet they have no wish or aim to narrow or dwarf real freedom of discussion; but, in many cases, they will not subject themselves to hear coarse and vulgar language, or indecent sentiments.

You can remember that, while you published THE INDEX at Toledo, you were repeatedly asked by societies of Spiritualists to address them, and freely give your opinions; for they expected of you dignity, propriety, and earnestness. Had you gained a reputation for vulgar coarseness, you would have had no such invitations; and societies will discriminate in that way, and should. I have heard the whole question of marriage and parentage freely and searchingly discussed in meetings of Spiritualists, years ago, by Henry C. Wright and others; but in a reverent and lofty spirit, above all vulgar thought, or immoral tendency. In any audience of a like kind, I think a like discussion would be welcomed to-day; but that is one thing, and the crude and coarse speech of later self-styled "social reformers" is another. The claim to be eminently "pure" or "respectable" made in the resolutions, against such as do not care to encourage or endorse what they hold to be not only erroneous in idea but exceptionable and faulty in its presentation, needs only to be put in its true light to be seen as shallow and ill-timed.

Your limited space calls for brevity, and I bear this in mind, and have condensed in briefest possible language my refutation of these grave and mistaken charges in the resolves you publish.

Yours truly, G. B. STEBBINS.

DETROIT, Mich., July 26, 1874.

JUSTICE TO MRS. WOODHULL.

BEAVER, BEAVER CO., Pa., June 23, 1874.

MR. ABBOT:—

THE INDEX of June 18 contains Mr. F. W. Newman's view on the "Free Love" question. I have read his paper carefully, and have not forgotten the former discussions on the subject which appeared in the columns of THE INDEX from time to time. In my opinion, all your contributors do Mrs. Woodhull injustice; their treatment of the subject of "Free Love" is unfair, one-sided, prejudiced; indeed, it appears that scarcely any one thinks it proper to become thoroughly acquainted with the "principles of social freedom," as advocated by Mrs. Woodhull, before attempting to criticise her. The results of such a lamentable ignorance we have before us. One or two sentences from her lectures are selected, and, as a matter of course, the entire subject is immediately misrepresented, contorted, caricatured. When Mr. Newman wrote his thoughtful paper on Herbert Spencer, he certainly had made the subject a special study; he certainly had first examined that eminent thinker's First Principles before he was in a position to discuss Mr. Spencer's philosophy, physics, and metaphysics. I should think that, especially in the case of Mrs. Woodhull, the axiom, "Audiatur et altera pars!" ought to be respected. Both you and Mr. Newman believe Mrs. Woodhull to be an "enthusiast for ideas, certainly not the apologist of vice;" why, then, in the name of justice, not study her peculiar ideas, her radical lectures, her reformatory, outspoken journal, and become acquainted with her principles of "social freedom"? I have read her paper now for a period of over two years, and must candidly confess that, as far as I know, she never wrote a line which could make a pure, unsophisticated, true woman blush; on the contrary, I believe that she is a true reformer, and that every radical may with profit study her Weekly, which numbers among its contributors such able writers as Stephen Pearl Andrews, Warren Chase, Laura Cuppy Smith, etc.

I trust that my venerable friend, "A. B. B.," will find time to write on this subject before long, and I rejoice to notice your invitation to a dignified discussion.

Fraternally yours,

HUGO ANDRIESSEN.

[We very carefully read Mrs. Woodhull's Principles of Social Freedom, when first published, and we have derived our understanding of her theories from herself, as will appear from the editorial columns.—ED.]

DID CHURCHES OWN SLAVES?

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

One of your readers asked me what I meant, in a former letter, by churches owning slaves?

This only, slavery telling its own story. A slaveholder's journal of best repute, the Charleston, S.C., Courier, of February 12, 1835, contained the following illumining advertisement:—

"Field Negroes—by Thomas Gadsden.—On Tuesday, the 17th instant, will be sold at the north of the Exchange, at ten o'clock A. M., a prime gang of TWENTY-SEVEN NEGROES, accustomed to the culture of cotton and provisions, belonging to the Independent Church in Christ Church parish."

The Savannah, Ga., Republican, of March 13, 1845, advertised a sale of slaves which ended thus:—

"Also, at the same time and place, the following negro slaves: Charles, Peggy, Antoinette, Davy, Maria, Jenny, and Isaac, levied on as the property of Henry T. Hall, to satisfy a mortgage, fi fia, issued from McIntosh Superior Court in favor of the Board of Directors of the Theological Seminary of the Synod of South Carolina and Georgia versus said Henry T. Hall. Conditions of sale cash.

(Signed) "C. O'NEAL,

"Deputy Sheriff of McIntosh County."

It was Paul, I think, writing to some Corinthian synod or presbytery, who asked: "Dare any of you, having a matter against another, go to law before the unjust?" But what would Paul say to a suit like this, brought by the directors of a theological seminary, involving a seven-fold sale of their Lord Jesus Christ in the persons of seven of his weak and helpless children!

Rev. J. Cable, writing to the Mercer Luminary (I quote from a book, not having the paper at hand from which to date), says he lived eight years in Virginia, received his college education at Hampden Sydney College and Union Theological Seminary, and that "the college church held slaves enough to pay their pastor a thousand dollars a year, the church members paying not one cent."

The slaves, he said, had been left by a pious mother in Israel, and had increased so as to be a large and still accumulating fund. These slaves were let out on Christmas days, for the ensuing year, to the highest bidder, whose interest of course was, as was understood, to get what work was possible out of them at least expense.

Mr. Cable gave also the names of four other churches and their pastors, in that neighborhood, who were supported in whole or in part in similar manner; in one of which churches a Mr. Turner preached, "and used to electrify the State with his eloquence."

I have other instances of this church economy by brokerage in the blood and bones, bodies and souls of slaves, to support the gospel and buy baker's bread and grocer's wine for sacramental suppers; but these will suffice for the present.

My next letter may give some account of what our Southern slave system was by its own testimony: its laws and its own newspapers, political and religious, being the principal witnesses.

PARKER PILLSBURY.

CONCORD, N. H., August, 1874.

A DEBATE IN HOSPITALLER HALL.

No one has seen all the "institutions" of Boston who has not visited the Hospitaller-Hall Sunday debates.

There, or at some similar place, have the lovers of polemics weekly met for upwards of forty years, and engaged in the discussion of all manner of subjects, especially those pertaining to religion and philosophy. It thrives alike summer and winter, and no day is too stormy, too warm, or too cold to prevent the attendance of enough of the staunch and sturdy controversialists, or the securing of a successful meeting.

For the last five or six weeks, one of the sessions each Sunday has been devoted to the discussion of the question whether or not the study of science leads to the rejection of Christianity.

Feeling an interest in the subject, I have attended these discussions quite regularly, being curious to see how Christianity would deal with its most formidable foe.

Christianity was defined by the leading debater on the Christian side as "belief in the divine inspiration of the Bible, and an acceptance of the teachings of Jesus." This was the definition accepted by the radical side of the house, and they made their argument on this basis. That the Bible is not thus divinely inspired, they attempted to show from the accepted results of science.

Among the points made by them, I noticed the following:—

1. That the Bible states explicitly that God "made light," and, after having done so, "divided it from the darkness;" while science has shown that darkness is but the absence of light, and, since they were never united, they never could have been divided.

2. That the Bible states that "God made the firmament, and divided the waters which were under the firmament from the waters which were above the firmament," etc.; while science has shown that there is no such firmament.

3. That the Bible teaches that the sun, moon, and stars had none of them an existence until after the earth was formed; while science has shown that many of them existed long anterior to the earth.

4. That the Bible states that there were three days of successive light and darkness on the earth before the sun, moon, and stars had an existence; while science teaches us that no such days could occur without the sun.

5. That the Bible states that the sun, moon, and stars were made for the purpose of giving light upon the earth; while science has shown that many of the stars are so remote as to be perceived only by powerful telescopes.

6. That the Bible states that grass, herbs, and fruit-trees flourished upon the earth before the sun had an existence; while science has shown that such products are dependent on the sun for their existence.

7. That the Bible teaches that every kind of vegetable life that ever existed on the "face of the earth" was made before fish and fowls, and every kind of fish and fowl before beasts and cattle, and every kind of beast before man; while all scientific men agree that such was not the case. For instance, there are species, genera, and orders of plants that could not have existed until animal life had been upon this planet thousands of years; and new species of all classes of organic life have been continuously appearing from time to time, being either the result of many special acts of creation or developments from previous existing species. Authorities: Hugh Miller, Dawson, Hitchcock, Lyell, and others.

8. That the Bible teaches that the race of man has been upon this planet less than six thousand years; while science teaches that he has been upon it for many thousand years. Authorities: Lyell, Leslie, Page, Lubbock, and others.

9. That the Bible states that the first woman was made from a rib of the first man; while no scientist will admit the truth of the statement.

10. That the Bible teaches that there was a universal deluge on the face of the earth, which destroyed "everything wherein was the breath of life," except Noah and those who were with him in the ark; while science teaches that there was no such deluge. Authorities: Burkland, Pye Smith, Miller, Hitchcock, and others.

11. That the Bible teaches that either the sun or the earth, or both, stood still at Joshua's bidding, that the day might be lengthened to complete the slaughter of a hostile army; while science shows that no such event could have occurred without disarranging the whole order of the universe. Authorities: Tyndall, and others.

12. That the Bible teaches miracle and the efficacy of prayer; while both doctrines are being abandoned for that of the eternity and immutability of law. Authorities: Tyndall, Huxley, Carpenter, and many others.

These are some of the more important points made by the radical side of the house, though not by any means all that were made; being the first to recur to my mind they will serve as a sample of what the Christian defenders had to meet.

It devolved upon them, of course, either to deny what their opponents claimed the Bible taught, or deny what they claimed science taught, in each of these twelve propositions, and call for proof, or to show some rational mode of harmonizing them. Strange to say, no attempt was made to do either. Of course it is not fair to expect impossibilities; but I must confess that I felt disappointed that the defenders of the "divinely inspired Book" did not at least make a show of defending its statements. The course pursued by them was quietly to ignore these arguments, and attempt to change the issue by making capital out of the fact that many scientific men still continue to call themselves Christians, notwithstanding their rejection of many of the teachings of the Bible; a fact that probably no sane man would dispute. Such scientists as Prof. Carpenter, who utterly reject miracle, were named by even the most Orthodox of the Christian speakers, to show that the study of science had not led them from Christianity.

To crown all, the audience were told explicitly, with a charming disingenuousness, by some of the "Christian defenders," and by all impliedly, that belief in the story of the miraculous birth and resurrection of Jesus, and in his miraculous power and divine nature, so far from being essential to, were only myths and errors which had "clustered around," Christianity. Thus were they driven to the position that a few of the simple ethical teachings of Jesus are the only essentials of Christianity. When the Christian world shall have accepted this position, and made love of justice and virtue its only essential thing, may we all be Christians!

Meanwhile, I wonder if any good, old-fashioned, Orthodox, Bible-believing Christian can be found, who is willing to stand by his guns and test his faith by free and fair discussion.

Q.

IS PRAYER RATIONAL?

"He prayeth best who loveth best
All things both great and small;
For the dear God who loveth us,
He made and loveth all."

Is prayer a rational act? It is of no use to attempt to make it rational to the intellect; a man who lives in his head cannot pray. The intellect wants proof; the heart does not—it feels the truth. A Being answering to an Infinite Intelligence has never revealed Himself to the human intellect. One of Mr. Frothingham's critics says: "It would seem, then, that his idea of prayer consists in the indulgence of certain pleasant wishes, desires, aspirations, etc.; but I am opposed to all shams, and therefore I object to this kind of pleasant musing being called prayer." "Do not," says he again, "let us call this pleasant indulgence in emotions, when there is no petition, no supplication for a boon, which is addressed to no person, and from which no favors are expected in return, do not let us call this prayer." Well, "a rose by any other name will smell as sweet;" the act will be performed; it is instinctive to pray. The heart will pray to the living God who is felt, but does not prove himself.

How every thoughtful man is baffled, when he intelligently addresses a Deity which he cannot fix, locate, or conceive of, and who knows that the true Providence is not disturbed from the order that reigns in the laws of the universe! How the intellect pricks the bubble of devotion, labelling it "castles in the air;" but how readily and persistently there arises in the heart a sacred voice which speaks of altogether another world, a world of reality!

To say, "Give us this day our daily bread," is no "sham" to the instinctive part of our human nature, even if we do not get it, or do not expect it, or always have had it, and know we shall get it whether we ask for it or not. There is something that prompts the utterance of prayer, and it is in the soil in which the intellect roots. "It puts on no airs, offers no explanation;" but intellect hears it say to it, and feels its truth, "Thou art the later born! Hast thou commanded the morning since thy days, and caused the day-spring to know its place? Have the gates of death been open to thee? Or hast thou seen the doors of the shadow of death?"

I knew a strong-minded and thoughtful man who had no religion, who would have thought it childish to offer a prayer; but the last utterance he was ever heard to make was made as he passed by a humble individual with a rope in his hand; and five minutes after he was a suicide. These last words said with a long sigh were: "O God!" It was but a whisper, but I feel it to this day. I seem to hear it now. It was the ground-swell of the instinct. That was what prompted that utterance, which all at times are moved to utter, the greatest and the least. There are times when the intellect has to say to the heart (which is synonymous with instinct):—

"Help me, Cassius, or I sink."

The arisen world, that is, the world of spirits still active in mundane matters, are still on praying ground, if they are "over the river;" and some see a rationality in prayer in that connection who would not otherwise. It would be pleasant to extend this paper into that department, but that would, and perhaps may, make an article of itself.

J. WETHERBEE.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.¶

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions,			10c	per	line.
" 13 " 25	"		8	"	"
" 26 " 51	"		6	"	"
" 52	"		5	"	"

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

CIRCULATE! Circulate!! Circulate THOSE PETITIONS. Don't feel satisfied when your petition is a yard long, unless you have asked every one to sign it. Get good, influential names.

GET EVERYBODY.

Don't neglect to show the petition to any one, because he is a stockholder in some church, or other exempted property, as many such persons admit the justice of the demand; and those who will not should be made to take the responsibility of refusing to sign it.

Don't delay! We want the petitions returned early.

Per order of EXEC. COMM. of the BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,

has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, assisted by ABRAM W. STEVENS, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
THOMAS W. HIGGINSON, Newport, R.I.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 4.

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

ASSOCIATE EDITOR:

ABRAM WALTER STEVENS.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
T. W. HIGGINSON, Newport, R.I.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
F. W. NEWMAN, England.
CHARLES VOYSEY, England.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS,

OF THE

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. Abbot, D. A. Wasson, T. W. Higginson, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. Wasson on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. Abbot, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. Wasson on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. Abbot on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age;" an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. Higginson on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potier on "Religion Old and New in India;" also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Sympathy of Religions, by T. W. Higginson. 25 cents.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 10 cents, singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

Price.

ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets 1.50
Concord Days 1.50
Records of a School. A new edition 1.50

ALCOTT (LOUISA M). Little Women. Two vols 3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories 1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl 1.50
Little Men 1.50
My Boys, &c 1.00
Shawl-Straps 1.00
Work; A Story of Experience 1.75

ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS. 1.50

ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism 2.00
New Poems 2.00
Literature and Dogma 1.50

AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. 1.50
Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine 2.00
Edelweiss 1.00
German Tales 1.00

BACON'S Essays 1.00

BAGEHOT on the English Constitution 2.25
Physics and Politics 1.50

BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy 1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol 1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol 5.00

BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms. 2.50

BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations 3.00

BARTOL (REV. C. A). Radical Problems ... 2.00
The Rising Faith 2.00

BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols 5.00

BIBLE in the Public Schools.
Records, Arguments, and Decision in the case of John D. Minor et al. vs. the Board of Education of the city of Cincinnati: et al. in the Supreme Court of the City of Cincinnati 2.00
Arguments of Ramsey, Sage and King in favor of the use of the Bible ..... .50
Arguments of Stallo, Hoadley and Mathews against the use of the Bible ..... .50
The Opinion and Decision of the Supreme Court of Ohio in the above case ..... .25

BRACKETT (ANNA C.) The Education of American Girls ....

BROOKS' (CHARLES T.) Translations. The Layman's Breviary 2.25
The World-Priest 2.25
The Tall Student ..... .75

BUECHNER'S Force and Matter 3.25

BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols 6.00

CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol ..... .80

CARPENTER (DR. W. B.) The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions 3.00

CERVANTES' Don Quixote 1.50

CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing 1.50

CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet Naturalist. With Memorial Verse. 2.00

CHENEY (MRS. E. D). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside 1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience 1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated 1.50

CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions 3.00
Common-Sense in Religion 2.00

CLARKE (Dr. E. H.) Sex in Education 1.25

CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World ..... .75

COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. 3.00
Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays 5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age ..... .20

CONWAY (MONCURE D.) The Earthward Pilgrimage 1.75

CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol 2.00

CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE; Its True Aims and Requirements A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans 2.00

DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship 2.50

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies" 1.50
The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor" 1.00

DARWIN'S Origin of Species 2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols 4.00
Journal of Researches 2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals 3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated 6.00

DESCARTES (RENE.) Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences 2.25

DICKENS' Child's History of England 1.50

DUHRING (JULIA.) Philosophers and Fools. A Study 2.00

ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each 1.00
Comprising—
Adam Bede.
Romola.
The Mill on the Floss.
Felix Holt.
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life.
The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols 3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols 3.50
Wit and Wisdom of 1.25
The Spanish Gypsy 1.50
How Lisa Loved the King ..... .50

EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.. 2.00
Essays. Second Series 2.00
Miscellanies 2.00
Representative Men 2.00
English Traits 2.00
Conduct of Life 2.00
Poems. With Portrait 2.00
May-day and Other Pieces 2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold 1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold 1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols 5.00
Society and Solitude 2.00

EVANS (E. P., Ph. D). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanase Coquerel the Younger 1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols 5.00

FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion 2.00

FEUERBACH (LUDWIG.) The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation. 3.00

FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.. 2.00

FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity 1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers ..... .20
Child's Book of Religion 1.00
Life of Theodore Parker 3.00

FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols 9.00

GALTON (FRANCIS.) Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences 2.00

GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol 5.00
Elective Affinities 1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols 3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham 1.00

GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life 2.00
Literary and Social Judgments 2.00
Creed of Christendom 3.25

GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait 5.00

HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter s Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France 1.50
Thoughts about Art 2.00
The Unknown River 6.00
The Intellectual Life 2.00
Chapters on Animals 4.00

HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second 1.00
Child World. Part First 1.50

HAMILTON'S Lectures.
1. Metaphysical Lectures 3.50
2. Logical Lectures 3.50

HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol 2.00
Twice-Told Tales.
Mosses from an Old Manse.
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.
The Marble Faun.
The English Note-Books.
The American Note-Books.
The French and Italian Note-Books.
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.

HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers ... 1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance 1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment 1.50
Atlantic Essays 2.00
Oldport Days 2.50

HOWELLS'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey 2.00
Suburban Sketches 2.00
Venetian Life 2.00
Italian Journeys 2.00
A Chance Acquaintance 1.50

HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".. 1.75

HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits 10.50

HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life 1.75

HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses 1.25
Bits of Travel 1.50

HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature 1.25
On the Origin of Species 1.00
Mors Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism ..... .50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals 2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews 1.75

INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems 2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen 1.50
Songs of Seven 2.50

INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skelligs 1.75
Studies for Stories 1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series 1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours 1.25
Mopsa the Fairy: A Story 1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect ..... .60

INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures 2.00

INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES.
No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall 1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot. 1.50
III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith 1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain 1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq 1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr 2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine 1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aëronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew. 1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D 1.50

JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers. 1.50

JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion, India 5.00

JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian 2.50

JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols 12.00

KERR (ORPHEUS C). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous 2.00

LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols 4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols 6.00

LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings 4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics 2.00

LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham 1.50

LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. 3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols 4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed 3.00

LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life. 1.50

LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D'C). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews 1.00

LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols 4.00
Prose Works. Portrait 4.00

LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols 4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series 1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series 1.50
Among my Books 2.00
My Study Windows 2.00

LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Posies for Children. .75

LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man.. 2.00
Pre-historic Times 5.00

LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols 8.00
Elements of Geology 3.50

MACDONALD (GEORGE.) The Vicar's Daughter 1.50

MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife 3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. 3.00
Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848 ..... 3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann 1.25

MARTINEAU (JAMES.) Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol 2.50
The New Affinities of Faith ..... .25

MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind ..... .75

MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire 1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations 1.50

MILL (JOHN STUART.) Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each 2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each 2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. 1.50
Political Economy. New and revised edition 2.50
The Subjection of Women 1.25
Essay on Liberty 1.25
Representative Government 1.50
Autobiography 2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works... 1.0

MILLER (JOAQUIN.) Songs of the Sierras. 1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands 1.50

MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species 1.75

MORLEY (PROF. JOHN.) Voltaire 2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols 5.00

MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-Time Stories 1.50

MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series 2.50
The Same. Second Series 3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume 2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion 2.00

NASBY (PETROLEUM V). Swingin' Round the Cirkle 1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky 1.50

NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy 4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed 2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations. 2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy 1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical 4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism. .25
Against Hero-Making in Religion ..... .25

PARKER (THEODORE.) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion 1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols 4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols 3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings 1.50
Historic Americans,—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.. 1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence... 1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations.—A.D. I. and MDCCCLV. A Christmas Story ..... .60

PARSONS (THEOPHILUS.) The Infinite and the Finite 1.00

PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar 1.50
The Trotty Book 1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts 1.50
Hedged In 1.50
The Silent Partner 1.50
What to Wear? 1.00

PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition 2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates 2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena 1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts 4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc 5.00
The Expanse of Heaven 2.00

ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante 2.50

SCHELLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies 6.00

SCIENCE PRIMERS:
1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S... .50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe ..... .50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With illustrations ..... .50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth ..... .50

SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols 31.25

SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition 2.00

SMILES'S (SAMUEL.) Self-Help 1.50

SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical 1.25
First Principles 2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Æsthetic 2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers 2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed 2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols 5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols 5.00
Philosophy of Style ..... .50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.. 2.00
Sociology 2.00

SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus ..... .25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics 9.00

STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny 1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin ..... .00

STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New 2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols 12.00

TAINE'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols 7.50
The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske 2.50

TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems 1.75

THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.. 1.25
Vanity Fair.
The Newcomes.
Adventures of Philip.
Pendennis.
The Virginians.
Esmond, and Lovel the Widower.
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol. 1.25

This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.

1. Barry Lyndon, Hoggarty Diamond, &c.
2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.
3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c.
4. Four Georges, Humorists, &c.
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unreprinted Pieces.

THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals 1.50

THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods 2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.. 2.00
The Maine Woods 2.00
Cape Cod 2.0
Letters 2.00
A Yankee in Canada 2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimac Rivers 2.00

TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind 2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols 5.00

TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer 1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People 2.00
Light and Electricity 1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps 2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion 2.00
On Sound 2.00
Radiant Heat 5.00
Forms of Water 1.50
Lectures on Light 1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall ..... .50

TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures 1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings 1.50

VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each 3.00
Vols III. IV. and VI., each 3.75
The Voysey Appeal ..... .50
Voysey's Defence at York ..... .50

WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden 1.00
Saunterings 1.50
Back-Log Studies 2.00

WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion 1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols 6.00

WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life 1.50
Essays and Reviews 3.00
Character and Characteristic Men 1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.... 1.50
Success and its Conditions 1.50
Washington and the Revolution ..... .30

WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life 1.50
We Girls: A Home Story 1.50
Real Folks 1.50
The Other Girls 2.00
Pansies. A volume of Poems 1.50

WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols 4.00
Child Life 3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place, Boston.

$25 A DAY GUARANTEED using our WELL AUGER AND DRILL in good territory. HIGHEST TESTIMONIALS FROM GOVERNORS OF IOWA, ARKANSAS AND DAKOTA. Catalogues free. W. GILES, St. Louis, Mo.

CHARLES SUMNER.

A fine likeness of Massachusetts' great Senator, the copy of a recent Photograph by Black, is for sale at THE INDEX office, and will be sent by mail to any address on receipt of the price—fifty cents.
Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

SAVE FIFTY DOLLARS!

THE NEW FLORENCE.

PRICE, $20 below any other First-Class Sew'g Mach. VALUE, $30 above

SAVED, $50 by buying the Florence.

Every machine warranted.

Special terms to clubs and dealers.

Send for circulars to the

Florence S. M. Co., Florence, Mass.,

or 778 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.

TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns,—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address
THE INDEX,
No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston.

CHARLES SUMNER'S

GREAT WORK.

PROPHETIC VOICES

CONCERNING AMERICA.

By CHARLES SUMNER.

Fine Edition, Tinted Paper, with Steel Portrait, Crown 8vo., Cloth extra, $2.

Aside from its literary and historical merits, this volume has a special interest, from the fact that it was the last work on which r. Sumner was engaged before his death.

"PROPHETIC VOICES" will be found of great value to all who take an interest in the history of our country, so full is it of passages in which the unexampled prosperity of our land has been foretold by philosophers, poets, statesmen, and orators, of whom the lamented author has also given interesting sketches.

Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price.
Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

BUST OF

THEODORE PARKER,

BY

SIDNEY H. MORSE.

Dignity, reverence, sweetness, vigor, equipoise, breathe through the clay; the artist has so filled his own heart with appreciation of that noble life that he has been able cunningly to mould it into those delicate lines which the character had wrought on the living fibre. We are tempted to exclaim, as we stand beside it, as the old artist did to his perfected work, "Speak then!"—Hannah E. Stevenson.

All the characteristics of my husband are in the bust,—his greatness, his goodness, his tenderness, his love. You cannot give life to clay or marble; but you can represent it, and this Mr. Morse has done.—Lydia D. Parker to Hannah E. Stevenson.

The eyes, though but of clay, are gleaming with possible indignation, with possible tears; the lips are set firm with the resolution of him who, like Paul, could "fight a good fight" as well as "give a reason."—Samuel Longfellow.

The first time I have seen Theodore Parker since he died.—Wm. Sparrell.

The best representation of Mr. Parker ever executed in clay.—Boston Daily Globe.

The face is strong and noble as it should be. The likeness is good.—Boston Daily Advertiser.

Nothing appears for beauty alone, or finish, or to show the vanity of the artist. All is forgotten in the man—the true, real, Yankee man, Theodore Parker.—L. S. H. in the Golden Age.

Copies of this Bust, finely finished n plaster, $20 each. Boxing for transportation, $1 extra. Freight or expressage paid by party sending order. Weight of box about fifty pounds. Orders may be sent to
S. H. MORSE,
Room 13, 25 Bromfield St., Boston, Mass.

STUDENTS FITTED for any College.
Please address
EMILY J. LEONARD,
Meriden, Conn.

CONSTANT EMPLOYMENT.—At home, male or female, $30 a week warranted. No capital required. Particulars and valuable sample sent free. Address, with six-cent return stamp. C. ROSS, Williamsburg, N. Y.

FREE DISCUSSION

is held at HOSPITALLER HALL, 593 Washington Street, Boston, every Sunday, at 10½ A.M., 2½ and 7½ P.M. All that relates to the Religious, Political, and Social interests of mankind constitute the subjects for discussion. THE INDEX and Index Tracts are for sale every Sunday at Hospitaller Hall.

WEST NEWTON ENGLISH AND CLASSICAL SCHOOL.—The twenty-first school year of this Family and Day School, FOR BOTH SEXES, will begin Wednesday, September 16, 1874.
For particulars address
NATH'L T. ALLEN, Principal,
West Newton, Mass.
At home Saturdays.

PENN MEDICAL UNIVERSITY,

OF PHILADELPHIA.

The regular course of Lectures in this Institution will commence on the first Monday in October, and is open to both sexes. The school is liberal and progressive, and thorough in its teachings. For announcement giving terms and other particulars, address
E. D. BUCKMAN, M.D., DEAN,
No. 1030 Spring Garden St.

TO NEWSPAPER PUBLISHERS.

Having conveniences for doing the best of newspaper printing at reasonable prices, I should like to contract for composition alone, or for composition, press-work, and mailing, for one or more weekly papers.
Best of references given, and satisfactory work guaranteed. GEO. H. ELLIS,
7 Tremont Place, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX.

Bound volumes of THE INDEX for 1871, 1872, and 1873, will be sent by express (at the purchaser's expense) on receipt of $2.50, $2.50, and $3.00 respectively. These volumes are exceedingly valuable singly, irrespective of each other; for the important essays and other articles they contain are of permanent interest, and will furnish as instructive reading twenty years hence as to-day. No more valuable present could be made to a friend struggling out of Orthodoxy than one of these volumes.
Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

WARREN'S

TRUE CIVILIZATION.

Price 50 cents.

PRACTICAL DETAILS,

showing the workings of the

COST PRINCIPLE.

Price 25 cents.

For sale by

S. H. MORSE,

25 Bromfield St., Boston.

MUSIC BOOKS FOR SCHOOLS.

HOUR OF SINGING.

Price $1.00. For High Schools.

Well proved, highly popular, practical and useful book.

BY EMERSON & TILDEN.

American School Music Reader.

BOOK I. PRICE 35 CENTS.

This charming number is for Primary Schools; has full directions for teachers (in fine print) and delightfnl little graded exercises and songs for the children.

American School Music Reader.

BOOK II. PRICE 50 CENTS.

For the Schools and Classes next above Primary Schools. Advances well into the elements.

American School Music Reader.

BOOK III. PRICE 60 CENTS.

For the higher classes of common schools.

The above books are by EMERSON & TILDEN, are thorough, well arranged, practical, pleasing, and useful.

CHEERFUL VOICES.

PRICE 50 CENTS.

In great demand, and is one of the best collections of School Songs ever published.
BY L. O. EMERSON.

The above books sent post-paid, on receipt of retail price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO.,

BOSTON.

CHAS. H. DITSON & CO.,

711 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE.

Our organization some time since decided to direct its efforts for the present towards securing the

Repeal of the Laws

whereby church and other corporate property is unjustly exempted from its share of the burden of taxation.

As a means to this end, we have published for general circulation several thousand copies of a

TRACT

on Church Exemption, being the article by Mr. Abbot which appeared in THE INDEX of Nov. 27.

We have already issued three editions, the last of which is nearly exhausted.

We desire soon to issue

Another Large Edition

of this and other tracts on the subject, so that we can place a copy in the hands of

EVERY VOTER IN THE STATE,

and generously to supply the calls for them in other States.

To do this, we need funds; for, although we have made arrangements for printing the Tract at very low cost, it is impossible for the Boston League, with its various other expenses, to bear the entire expense alone.

Will not, then,

All Friends of the Movement

come forward and help us with liberal donations?

We frequently receive communications from parties wishing tracts to distribute, asking how much they shall pay. To such we reply that the cost to us is about $2.50 per thousand, and we shall be pleased to furnish them at this price per thousand, or 30 cents per hundred, to all who will circulate them. But all additional donations will be gratefully received for the purpose of circulating them gratuitously throughout the country.

Last winter this subject was brought before the Legislature of the State, and many petitions were presented asking a repeal of these unjust laws.

The matter is still in their hands, and at the next session will undoubtedly be acted upon. Meanwhile the

Voice of the People,

favoring justice and equity, should be distinctly heard.

We shall soon be ready to send out

BLANK PETITIONS AGAIN,

thus giving an opportunity to those who have not already done so, to protest against this continued wrong.

Let us make it

THE LARGEST PETITION

ever presented to our legislative body.

Will those willing to assist in circulating these petitions please

SEND IN THEIR NAMES?

We would say, also that we feel deeply the need of

Other Organizations

in this State, to coöperate with us in securing equality and justice, by pressing the "Demands of Liberalism." If, in any locality, there are those who are inclined to

Form a Liberal League,

we are ready to render such assistance as lies in our power.

LIBERALS!

If all will unite and work, the results sought can be accomplished
Address

BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE,

NO. 1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

Per order of the
EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

NONPAREIL Farm Feed, Bone, Drug, and Hand-grinding MILLS. Ten Sizes. Also Cotton-Seed Hullers. Illustrated pamphlets free. Address
SEDGEBEER, SHEPARD & MILLER,
181 East Front Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

THE AMERICAN EDITION

OF

MONCURE D. CONWAY'S

SACRED ANTHOLOGY,

A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES,

has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.

Address THE INDEX,
1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,

BANKERS,

LEROY, MINN.

Money invested on short time, or for a term of years, on unincumbered improved farms, at 12 per cent. interest per annum, payable semi-annually. Perfect title and ample security guaranteed. All expenses for abstract of title and recording mortgage paid by borrower. We collect and remit to any part of the United States free of charge.

REFERENCES.—First National Bank, McGregor, Iowa; First National Bank, Austin Minn.; Milwaukee National Bank, Milwaukee, Wis.; City National Bank, Chicago, Ill.; Allen, Stevens & Co., Bankers, New York City; Morris Altman.

REAL ESTATE SECURITIES, paying 8 to 10 per cent. interest, or

Investments in Real Estate in Chicago and vicinity,

if judiciously made, are the best and safest modes of employing capital. The old

Real Estate and Loan Agency

OF

ERNST PRUSSING, 143 RANDOLPH STREET,

Chicago (Established 1853),

Guarantees perfect title and ample security in all its Real Estate Loans.

Firstclass securities always on hand. Interest and principal collected without charge. Real Estate Investments made on commission or on shares; taxes paid, &c.

Orders of capitalists and real estate owners respectfully solicited.

REASONS FOR USING THE

EUREKA SPOOL SILK.

It is full length. It is full size. It is smooth and elastic, and is equally adapted to hand or machine use.

Many kinds of spool silk are a perfect fraud, being not only shorter in length, but a much finer size than they are represented to be, and of so poor a quality as to be unfit for use. The ladies will always find the Eureka Silk exactly as represented. Every spool is warranted, and the manufacturer's name indelibly branded on every spool. Call for it.

RADICAL AND LITERARY

LECTURES

BY

JOHN WEISS,

RADICAL LECTURES.

The Idea of Hereafter.
An Act of Faith.
Intelligence in Religion.
Religion and Science.
Heart in Religion.

SHAKSPEARIAN LECTURES.

FIRST SERIES.

1. Cause of Laughter.
2. Irony and Humor.
3. Dogberry, Malvolio, Bottom, Touchstone.
4. Ajax in Troilus and Cressida: The Porter in Macbeth: The Fool in Lear.
5. Falstaff.
6. Hamlet.

SECOND SERIES.

1. The Women of Shakspeare.
2. Portia.
3. Ophelia.
4. Macbeth and Lady Macbeth.
5. " " " "
6. Contrast in Shakspeare's Characters.

Address JOHN WEISS,
32 E. Brookline St., Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year. LIBERTY AND LIGHT. Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 5. BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, AUGUST 20, 1874. WHOLE No. 243.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF ———.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in ——:

Also, as soon as five hundred such Liberal Leagues shall have been formed in different places, to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be hereafter called, in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the needed reforms.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the National Convention of Liberal Leagues when called together.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

So far as I am concerned, the above is the platform of THE INDEX. I believe in it without reserve; I believe that it will yet be accepted universally by the American people, as the only platform consistent with religious liberty. A Liberal League ought to be formed to carry out its principles wherever half a dozen earnest and resolute Liberals can be got together. Being convinced that the movement to secure compliance with these just "Demands" must surely, even if slowly, spread, I hope to make THE INDEX a means of furthering it; and I ask the assistance and active co-operation of every man and every woman who believes in it. Multiply Liberal Leagues everywhere, and report promptly the names of their Presidents and Secretaries. Intolerance and bigotry will tremble in proportion as that list grows. If freedom, justice, and reason are right, let their organized voice be heard like the sound of many waters.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

BOSTON, Sept. 1, 1873.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State; and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation.

GLIMPSES.

BY F. E. A.

EVERY NOW AND THEN a "safe" robbery is reported. But if the robber is caught, what sort of a robbery is it then?

A CORRESPONDENT of the New York Nation says that the famous "Blue Laws" of Connecticut were an invention of the Rev. Samuel Peters, a Connecticut Tory, who was driven from the State at the beginning of the Revolutionary War, and who revenged himself by publishing in London, in 1781, a fabulous General History of Connecticut; and that the historian of Massachusetts, Hutchinson, does not give one of these pretended laws. Is there anything to be said in favor of the genuineness of the "Blue Laws"?

THE AMERICAN ASSOCIATION FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE began its twenty-third annual meeting at Hartford, Connecticut, on August 12. President LeConte, in his opening address, is reported as saying: "Already it is proved that, should the largest comet strike the earth, no possible harm could ensue." This declaration contradicts flatly the statement of M. Faye, quoted in another paragraph on this page. Science has its open questions still, it seems, but Dr. LeConte does not propose to serve M. Faye as Calvin served Servetus.

IN JULY a farmer living in Warren County, New Jersey, publicly offered to give to some poor sewing-girl of New York free board for ten or twenty days, and to send the amount of her fares to and from his farm, if the officers of the St. John's Guild would select the girl to receive the kindness. This offer, published in a New York paper, gives the hint of a most useful form of philanthropy. Thousands of farmers could afford to give a little vacation to the poor, overworked sewing-girls of our large cities, or at least to ask no other remuneration than a little help from the visitor in household affairs; and this would be most cheerfully given. Honor to the kind heart that conceived this plan! It ought to be widely acted on, and we hope it will be.

M. FAYE, in a recent lecture published in Nature, calculates that, "if the nucleus of our comet had directly encountered the earth, with its mass of 25,600 millions of millions of kilogrammes, and its relative speed of seventeen leagues per second (seven for the earth and ten in an opposite direction for this retrograde comet), the actual energy of the shock would be enormous; I calculated that its transformation into heat would immediately generate fifty-one million calorics per square metre of the hemisphere which sustained the shock. It would be enough to shatter, dissolve, and volatilize a part of the solid crust of our globe. No living being could survive such a catastrophe. Happily the probability of such an encounter is excessively small; and, indeed, the most remote geological ages do not bear any traces of such an adventure."

THE Nation of August 6 has a thoughtful and in the main excellent article on "Evidence about Character." It shows that the rules of evidence, as enforced in the courts, are not adapted to bring forward all facts logically bearing on a case, and therefore do not help to establish the full truth in cases involving reputation. It holds that there is "only one good reason" for carrying the Beecher case into court, namely, that the courts can compel the attendance of witnesses. There is, however, one other. In this country, at least, the decision of a legal tribunal is acquiesced in almost universally in such cases. If Mr. Beecher is exonerated by it, his accusers will be at least effectually silenced; and there is little doubt that enough evidence would be elicited to show with sufficient certainty whether the Brooklyn preacher is guilty or innocent on the main charge.

AS A DEFENCE against the charge of adultery, Mr. Beecher's "statement" and "cross-examination" are very strong as the case now stands, though not absolutely conclusive. The explanation he gives of the letters which cast such a gloom over the right-minded portion of the community is exceedingly probable, considering his peculiar nature; and it certainly dissipates the dark presumption they created. So far every unprejudiced person must unfeignedly rejoice. But the reason of this favorable change in the state of the case as respects the main charge lies in a fact which bears unfavorably on Mr. Beecher's candor, and which therefore weakens his testimony to that extent. In his card of July 22, he declared that his "published correspondence on this subject comprises but two elements, namely, the expression of my grief and that of my desire to shield the honor of a pure and innocent woman;" and the evident intent of this declaration was to deny the existence in that correspondence of any expression of deep-seated consciousness of wrong-doing. The opinion of the more thoughtful part of the public was adverse to the admission of this denial; which opinion is now confirmed by this last statement of Mr. Beecher. The whole strength of his present defence consists in its assigning an adequate cause for the profound self-accusation contained in the letters referred to—for the undeniable "third element" which we pointed out in them two weeks ago. He now confesses that "there was much that weighed heavily on my heart and conscience, which now weighs only on my heart;" and this burden on his conscience he satisfactorily explains, when he says that (although under a delusion) he "felt convicted of slander in its meanest form." The story now told makes the self-accusation perfectly intelligible without assuming adultery as its cause; and it is such a relief to turn the flank of this horrible assumption that the public will gladly believe the story, unless new and stronger evidences of guilt are hereafter brought up. Mr. Beecher, however, seems to have been singularly weak, and singularly devoid of moral courage and directness, in dealing with the parties he depicts in such an odious light; and it is clear that a new estimate of his character must be formed in many respects. He can no longer be regarded by any one as the great apostle of American manliness. If ever the folly of "dignified silence," the ruinous impolicy of meeting known slanders by trying to hush them up rather than by overwhelming them with the truth, has been demonstrated, it is now. The only way to treat a great calumny is to seize it by the throat and strangle it on the spot; and the timidity, vacillation, and wretched diplomacy of Mr. Beecher himself must bear a large part of the blame for the horrible suspicions of his purity which are now, we trust, scattered to the four winds of heaven.

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walters; Secretary, E. M. Bridgman.
WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—President, J. B. Bassett; Secretary, Anton Grethen.
NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
BALBEC, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
SAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

Temperance and Total Abstinence.

THE THIRD FREE LECTURE IN THE CITY HALL, DOVER, N. H., SUNDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 12, 1868.

BY FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

Within the past fortnight, two large Temperance meetings have been held—the New Hampshire State Temperance Association at Manchester, and the New England Christian Temperance Convention at Boston. At both gatherings, resolutions were passed in favor of prohibitory legislation; and there are other indications of a strong movement in the same direction. It seems, therefore, a fitting time for all those interested in the cause of Temperance (and every good man and good woman ought to be interested in it) to express their views on the subject, and thus do their part towards the formation of a correct public opinion concerning it. With the intention of fulfilling my duty in this matter, I propose to state my own private conclusions with regard to Temperance; and, although I am well aware that the persons most active as champions of the Temperance cause, and best known for their exertions in its behalf, entertain opinions widely different from my own, I am not deterred by this reason from expressing with distinctness and emphasis the conclusions to which I have come. It is with great regret that I must differ from men who are laboring in the cause of humanity with honesty and earnestness; but the interests of true reform cannot but be promoted by the frank expression of all honest thought. However severely some worthy people may condemn my opinions, I wish to help, not hurt, the cause of Temperance, as well as every other good cause; I wish to aim a blow, not at the branches, but at the roots, of the upas-tree of Intemperance; I wish to respect the liberty of my fellow-men, and, by thus respecting them, help them to respect themselves. If, consequently, I distrust the methods of those who, in their zeal for reform, trample on the equal rights and infringe the equal freedom of their fellows,—if I see no hope of lasting success except in awakening the love of virtue in the individual soul,—I claim to be as true a friend to sobriety and good morals as any of those who would make men sober in spite of themselves. The two great principles of American civilization,—the supreme duty of self-government by the individual according to the law of God in his own soul, and the equal duty of non-interference by society except for self-protection alone,—these two great principles, I say, I would unflinchingly apply to the Temperance question and every other great question that comes up for settlement. More mischief than benefit must come in the long run from disregard of these principles; and I count it a terrible mistake to say that good principles must not be "carried too far." No good principle was ever yet carried far enough: and he does true service to his race who seeks to straighten out the crooked paths of human action by carrying good principles to their extremes. Taking it, therefore, as a moral axiom that every individual has a right to be at perfect liberty until he violates the equal liberty of his fellow-men, we shall find ourselves not a little enlightened as to our duty with reference to the Temperance question.

First of all, let us make quite clear what we mean by "Temperance." In its largest use, this word signifies complete self-mastery, perfect control of outward conduct by an inward law. He is the truly temperate man who is in all things master of himself, and in all things guides himself by reason and conscience. Every passion bridled and bitted,—every impulse of the animal within us directed to its lawful end, or else held in check by the strong hand of the disciplined will,—nothing less than this fills out the true conception of Temperance. The soul must keep to the end a firm grasp of the reins, and never suffer the body, like an unmanageable horse, to take the bit in its teeth. When this occurs,—when the steed breaks loose, and rushes headlong to ruin,—when the body gets the upper hand, and the soul loses command,—then Temperance succumbs to Intemperance, and character dies. The order of God is inverted when the high intuitions and suggestions of the spirit are trampled underfoot in the blind rush of the animal. The intemperate man is a beast, and, forsaking the upright posture of manhood, crawls on all-fours like a swine. Temperance is the empire of the soul over the passions—Intemperance is the insurrection of the passions against the soul, a New York riot in the heart, a mad outbreak of brutish desires uncurbed by conscience. In short, Temperance is free government,—Intemperance is mob-law.

As commonly used, the words Temperance and Intemperance are restricted to a narrower meaning, being applied only to the passion for alcoholic drink. The essential idea, however, remains unchanged. The great sin of drunkenness consists in the obscuration or total eclipse of the soul's light,—the voluntary surrender of the human spirit to brutish passion. By the influence of alcoholic excess, the delicate mechanism of the brain, on the right condition of which reason wholly depends, is thrown into complete disorder; and, like a helmless and dismasted ship, man floats at the mercy of winds and waves. The whole superiority of man over the animal lies in that which the drunkard throws away as worthless,—in the possession of intelligence and moral insight. When these are gone, the drunkard is even lower than the beast to whose level he descends; for the beast is true to the nature God has given him, while the drunkard is false to his own far higher nature. In fact, the drunkard is a suicide, committing self-murder as a spiritual being to range himself with brutes. How instinctively just a use of words, then, is that common phrase, "brutal intoxication"! I can conceive of no higher virtue than that of elevating reason and conscience to the supreme throne of our being; and I can conceive of no deeper crime than that of degrading reason and conscience, and placing passion on their kingly seat. To be a man, in the fullest and highest sense, is the most glorious ambition, the most divine aspiration, that can be born in a human heart; but, once a man, to become a brute,—to be willing even for an hour to get down on hands and knees, and roll in the mire of swinishness,—is a fall from majesty and nobleness that might wring tears from an angel's eye. I know too well that this plunge from humanity into bestiality, than which I can conceive no greater disaster for a self-respecting man, is made often by men of generous characters and full of noble virtues; I have seen too many cases of such calamity to suppose that inebriates are always brutes; but the nobler and more generous I see a man to be, the less can I endure the thought that he should ever become a brute. The greater the height, the more terrible the fall; and I would rather that my tongue should be torn from my mouth, roots and all, than that it should utter one word except in pitying horror at the sight. No; while perfect manhood and womanhood is the ideal end of all my public teaching, let no one believe that I can look with complacency on drunkenness, the utter abnegation of manhood and womanhood. Self-government in obedience to the still, small voice within is the supreme end of my religion; while self-surrender to selfish passion or selfish interest is the supreme evil, the one sin that includes all other sins, against which I would fain strengthen my fellow-men to the utmost extent of my power.

But, while hating the vice of Intemperance with the very heartiest of its haters, I have never been able to act with what claims to be the party of Temperance. Alike in politics, religion, and reform, I have found myself compelled to stand aloof from parties, to protest against their shortcomings or inconsistencies, and to side only with universal principles. Until parties follow right principles, no true man can follow parties; and it is too much, perhaps, to expect of any large body of men at present that they shall follow, intelligently and consistently, universal and enlightened principles. Those who see in the logic of ideas a key to the solution of practical problems must for a long time to come be in a minority, and contentedly work as God shall give them room. Let me explain, then, why it is that, believing in Temperance principles, I cannot act with the Temperance party.

1. The first and chief reason is, that the chief principle of the Temperance party is not a Temperance principle. If we may judge of the mind of the party by the votes of its conventions, it holds the drinking of alcoholic beverages to be universally a sin, and complete abstinence from them to be universally a duty. This does not appear to me to be a true Temperance principle. It is not possible, in my opinion, to lay down absolute rules concerning particular acts without regard to motives. It is the motive that makes an act a sin; and who shall undertake to judge of the motives of men by the wholesale? If it is always a sin to taste a drop of wine, then every person who tastes a drop of wine is a sinner to that extent; and to pass so sweeping a judgment on every person who tastes a drop of wine is an assumption of omniscience which no modest person will make. Motives alone give their moral complexion to human actions, so far as the moral desert or ill-desert of the actors is concerned; and if the moral teaching of Jesus had one trait more marked than any other, it was the transference of all praise or blame from the outward act to the inward spirit out of which the act grew. It is a universal duty to have a right spirit, a universal sin to have a wrong spirit; but if we go beyond this to say that any particular act must be always a sin or always a duty, we fall back under that bondage of particular precepts from which it is the great claim of Christianity to have freed its followers. Even the Temperance party itself is obliged to find two exceptions to this universal sin of wine-drinking; namely, in cases of sickness, and in the case of the "Lord's Supper." I should respect the Temperance party more, as I do respect some of its members more, for making neither of these exceptions to what it regards as a sin irrespective of motives. If all wine-drinking is sinful per se, it is not made right by an innocent motive: and a consistent believer in its sinfulness would make no exception of any kind.

But not only do I regard the chief principle of the Temperance party as false, because it lays down an absolute rule concerning a purely outward act; but I also regard it as false, because it confounds use with abuse, and so is not a Temperance, but an Abstinence, principle. Nothing is more unjust, or more harmful to the Temperance cause, than heated denunciations of strictly temperate men under the name of "moderate drinkers," as the "worst enemies of the Temperance cause." Whether Temperance or Abstinence is the better principle, is a fair subject of discussion; but it is a question to be at last decided by each man in the privacy of his own heart, and not to be settled by the vote of clamorous conventions. For myself, I believe in the Temperance principle properly so-called; for many others I believe in it also; for some I believe in the Abstinence principle alone. The distinction between use and abuse, so scouted at by many declaimers, is one which runs through all human life, and will never be discarded by the common sense of mankind. The Temperance party deprives itself of the support of a large portion of the very best members of the community, with whose aid an overpowering public sentiment against drunkenness could be organized, simply because of its injustice towards persons whose example and influence are wholly on the side of Temperance. The true principle of Temperance is, in my opinion, to use alcoholic liquids as a good servant but a terribly despotic master,—to beware of the least excess, to guard most faithfully against the formation of any enslaving habit, and to deal with alcohol in all its forms as with a double-edged sword of razor-like keenness. To forget the danger of excess, or to despise it, is both folly and sin; for he who prizes his soul above his body will most assuredly feel his obligation to keep his soul pure and his faculties in perfect equilibrium. It is always the part of wisdom to suspect the passions at all times; and it is the part of virtue to repress the least approach to insubordination. But if we were to abandon the use of all things whose abuse is dangerous, where would be our common sense? How would life be possible at all? The real protection against abuse of alcohol, as against abuse of all other things, lies in the strengthening of conscience and the tenderest deference to its least behests. If we are really unable to govern ourselves,—if we find by experience that use itself is dangerous and is creating a habit whose power begins to make itself felt,—then there is no safety but to abstain, wholly and continuously. I can only applaud that man who says,—"For myself, I choose to abstain; but to others I concede an equal liberty of choice." I am not by any means advising to use intoxicating beverages; far from it. I simply say, Temperance is use, Intemperance is abuse; and he fulfils his duty in this matter who is publicly and privately temperate. What I contend for and insist upon is the right of individual liberty of action; the right of every man to be respected so long as he obeys his own conscience, without being branded by vehement partisans as "the worst enemy of the Temperance cause." I am not for temperance for one man is not temperance for another; and it is perfectly idle to lay down universal rules concerning particular acts. The universal and absolute obligation of all men to be "temperate in all things," will be questioned by none; but it is preposterous to set up the same standard of temperance for all. Individual differences of temperament, education, organization, character, and circumstance must be respected; and the Temperance cause will never prosper until they are respected.

2. Another great reason why I cannot act with the Temperance party is the excessive and unwise confidence it puts on the efficacy of the pledge. For myself, I disbelieve in pledges, except as a last resort. The practical results of the pledge are quite as often, I fear, evil as good. Its defensive power is not great, except with a few persons. This I have heard said by some teetotallers themselves, who were well qualified by actual experience and observation to bear witness on the point. A strong, free nature, even if once induced to take the pledge, is seldom easy under the yoke, and sometimes is so galled by it as to resort to any measures to break loose. Even a self-imposed fetter tends to destroy the sense of moral freedom, and to create a sense of constraint which often becomes a positive temptation. There are not a few persons who are greatly tempted to do what they are prohibited from doing; and sometimes they go and do it just to get rid of the offensive prohibition. To be sure, there is nothing noble in this, but there is a great deal of human nature in it; and so far the practical power of the pledge is weakened. Even where this sense of irksome restraint is not felt, all must admit that, unless conscience and will are strong, the pledge will not be kept; and the strength which seems to come from the pledge is, after all, only the strength of conscience and will at bottom. On the power of conscientious will, at last, must the keeping of the pledge itself depend. Too many persons lean on the pledge as in itself a sufficient protection; a sense of false security is created, conscience falls asleep, in some moment of temptation the prop gives away, and to false security succeeds an agony of despair. The pledge once broken, the sacred sentiment of self-respect is so fearfully injured that many a poor fellow straightway rushes headlong into the wildest excesses, believing that all hope of salvation is gone. The kind of support given by the pledge is not commonly of the best kind; but there are, doubtless, many cases where it is efficient. If a person feels himself in danger, and believes that the pledge will protect him, by all means would I encourage him to try it. As an occasional means of strengthening a feeble will, it would be useful; but it is wise to place reliance on nothing except moral improvement of the community, as a permanent means of advancing the Temperance cause. I cannot approve of the pledge being offered as a universal panacea of Intemperance, or urged upon all persons, or made a condition of joining a Temperance Association. After all, reliance must be placed at last on the individual conscience; where this is wanting, there is no security whatever in a verbal promise. Moral means alone can lay the foundation of a true reform, and to these, in the end, must the exclusive appeal be made.

3. This brings me to the third leading reason why coöperation with the Temperance party is for me impossible. They insist upon prohibitory laws which exceed the true limits of State action. The State cannot rightfully act except for the simple protection of itself and of its members: its power should not be used as an instrument of promoting moral reforms, which ought to spring spontaneously out of the voluntary movement of the people. Recognizing the equal rights of all persons, its sole legitimate function is to protect those rights; and the progress of the community must be left to those natural spiritual forces which in all ages are active for the gradual development of the race. The commonwealth cannot without usurpation take upon itself the task of the private conscience, and dictate what shall be bought and what not. The State may restrain the sale of liquor just so far as it is a public nuisance or immediate cause of crime, and no further; and this it may do solely as a measure of self-protection. There the limit really lies. How far the sale of liquor is a nuisance, and how far it is a lawful business, is, no doubt, a difficult practical question to answer; but it is very plain that, when the State undertakes to suppress the sale of liquor altogether, for the purpose of rendering it almost impossible for any man to get it for any purpose, then the freedom of the people is violated, and a reaction is inevitable. John Stuart Mill is correct in teaching that the "self-regarding vices" are no concern of the State; these are to be reformed by moral means, or not at all. If a man wants to get drunk and cannot, there is, at any rate, no virtue in his sobriety; and I more than doubt whether the attempt thus to keep men on their feet when they are determined to go on all-fours is productive of any permanent good. Fetters on freedom always work more harm than good in the end; and the stringent statutes against liquor-selling in some of our States are largely to blame for the present reaction. The only Temperance reform that is good for anything, or that can stand the test of time, must be based on the enlightened conscience of the people, and not on any enactments of the government. For no cause whatever would I consent to any infringement by the State on the just rights of the individual; and if the people are not yet ripe for a true temperance reform, I would rather wait till they shall be educated to it than attempt any hot-house forcing process by abridging private freedom.

4. Another reason for keeping aloof from the Temperance party is the intolerant spirit and temper it manifests. Nothing more bigoted and harsh has for a long time met my eye than the Boston Journal's account of the treatment of Dr. Blagden in the New England Christian Temperance Convention in Boston. Dr. Blagden, personally one of the worthiest of men, and for years the senior pastor of the Old South Church, undertook to address the Convention in favor of Temperance, as opposed to Abstinence; and but for the generous appeal of Henry Wilson to the audience he would have been hooted down by them. A party which thus refuses free speech and fair play is not one with which I wish to act. The same spirit of intolerance betrays itself frequently in the tone of Temperance lecturers and newspapers, and must surely repel all who prize courtesy and just dealing in the treatment of different opinions.

5. Let me add here a word of disapproval of what I cannot help calling the unscrupulousness with which ardent advocates of Abstinence too often argue from the Scriptures. The example of Jesus, so far as the four gospels are concerned, is, fairly looked at, wholly in favor of the temperate use of wine. I say this, not with any wish to shield my own opinions behind his name (for I wish them to carry no weight with any one except their own intrinsic worth), but solely because persons who speak on the subject often fail to deal candidly with the gospel narratives as they stand. Jesus is said to have been called a wine-bibber, because he came "eating bread and drinking wine"; he is said to have turned water into wine at a marriage feast in Cana of Galilee; and he is said to have bid his disciples drink wine in memory of him at the Last Supper. On the other hand, he nowhere says a word against the temperate use of wine, and, so far as the record goes, nowhere gives any sign of condemnation of it. Dr. Miner, to explain away this seeming sanction given by Jesus to a practice he vehemently reprobates, declares that the wine used in that day was not intoxicating in its influence, but was simple grape-juice,—a statement worthy of about as much respect as if he had said that apple-juice never used to ferment in the days of the Pilgrim Fathers, but had a fashion of keeping sweet all winter without turning into vinegar. Such reckless assertions will bring any cause into contempt. On the one hand, the partisans of Abstinence quote with great emphasis every reproof of drunkenness contained in Scripture, and then, on the other hand, turn round and say the Jews had nothing to get drunk with! These two things hardly agree. If the wine that sparkled so brightly when it "moved itself aright" was only harmless grape-juice, why warn us so solemnly against it? But if there was danger in the cup,—if it "bit like a serpent and stung like an adder,"—why say there was only grape-juice in it? With sophistry similar to that of Dr. Miner, Dr. Manning, at the New England Christian Convention before referred to, tried to explain away the miracle said to have taken place at Cana. He argued that Jesus did not himself say that the water became wine, but the governor of the feast said it, not being sober at the time. Here, then, according to Dr. Manning, the governor of the feast had got intoxicated, and the wine at the feast sanctioned by the presence and miracle of Jesus must have been something stronger than grape-juice. But, admitting that Jesus did not say the water had become wine, Dr. Manning must either admit that the water did become wine, or else deny the miracle altogether. Which he meant to do, is not clear. But for an Orthodox minister to deny the miracle would be as strange as for a professedly Christian teetotaller to confess that Jesus sanctioned moderate drinking. To me, it matters nothing what the example or precept of any teacher is; I judge for myself on the merits of each case. But I do wonder when those who profess to be guided by the example of Jesus denounce moderate drinking as a sin. Do they know that they are denouncing their Master? I do not covet the conscience of any man who can stoop to twist, distort, and pervert the plain meaning of the Scriptures, because he does not dare honestly to admit that the Scriptures are against him. For myself, I ask no question whether the Scriptures are for me or against me; I am content to use the faculties God has given me as faithfully as I know how; and if I make mistakes, I trust that something will be pardoned to an honest purpose.

This, then, is in brief my conclusion. Temperance in all things, government of all our life by the still, small voice of conscience within our hearts, is our chief duty; and so long as we are faithful in this obedience we are not bound by any rules of man's making, but free to follow our own secret convictions. And this may we serenely and bravely do!

THE STRENGTH OF UNBELIEF.

To our editorial note last week concerning the weakness of unbelief in Boston, Colonel T. W. Higginson, whom we respect above all the rest of the Free Religionists, sends us this reply:—

To the Editor of The Independent:—

I have been accustomed to claim for the Independent a good deal of fairness and candor in dealing with those whom it regards as unbelievers; and I therefore read with surprise what seemed to me a series of very incorrect editorial statements in the last issue. The second paragraph of "Editorial Notes" makes the following affirmation:—

"Unbelief in Boston has not for years been so weak as to-day. The Parker Fraternity and the Twenty-eighth Congregational Society are feeble enough; the Horticultural Hall meetings have been abandoned; and if The Index influences anybody at all, it is only the unlettered sceptics of the West."

The first assertion belongs to a class which I must leave your contributor, Rev. Augustus Blauvelt, to answer. As to the second, I do not know what "feeble enough" means; but I take it to signify in this case very feeble. As the Twenty-eighth Congregational Society (of which the Parker Fraternity is only an offshoot) has proved itself strong enough, in this the twenty-eighth year of its existence, to erect and dedicate a building of its own, the "Parker Memorial Meeting-House," and as it holds meetings in this building every Sunday, which meetings I can state from personal observation to be attended by a large and most respectable congregation, the epithet "feeble" seems to be most singularly misapplied. It was generally predicted that this society could not last a year after the death of Mr. Parker, which took place fourteen years ago.

The statement in regard to the Horticultural Hall meetings is still more surprising. When, how, or by whom were these meetings abandoned? As one of the committee having them in charge, I can only say that I have never heard their abandonment so much as proposed. If I am not mistaken, the last year was the first time that these lectures proved self-supporting; and it is to be hoped that the next winter's course will be equally successful. In the words of Mr. Webster, "It would be awkward to be annihilated without knowing anything about it."

Finally, in regard to The Index. If to have a large Western following is in any way discreditable, what is to become of the Independent? and if The Index influences the unlettered, what becomes of the common Evangelical assertion that the Free Religious movement is confined to a handful of scholars? But I dispute the correctness of your assertion. When you say that "if The Index influences anybody at all, it is only the unlettered sceptics of the West," it occurs to me that it certainly influences me; and that, however sceptical or unlettered I may be, I certainly do not reside at the West. The Index is distinctly and absolutely Mr. Abbot's own organ; nobody else is responsible for it; and its editor will testify that nobody criticises it more sharply than its own occasional contributors. But it is a great mistake to ignore its ability or to belittle its influence.

All just-minded radicals agree, I think, that nothing is really gained by misstating or underrating opponents; and it seems to me that the same policy is equally binding, were it only as policy, on just-minded conservatives. T. W. Higginson.

Newport, R. I., July 30, 1874.

We are not able to see why our statement was not essentially correct. Dr. Blauvelt's views of the strength of unbelief are not precisely ours, and we trust the Free Religionists will not flatter themselves that other Evangelical apologists who have made as deep investigation into the current doubt of the times are as alarmed as he. It is true that the Twenty-eighth Congregational Society has lately erected a meeting-house, and since this their single temple can depend for preachers upon a large body of unoccupied radicals—Colonel Higginson, John Weiss, Samuel Johnson, F. E. Abbot, William R. Alger, and other able men,—it would be strange if a respectable audience did not attend it. But Theodore Parker used to preach to three thousand people. Did his successors, D. A. Wasson and J. Vila Blake, gather as many hundreds, and do as many hundreds now meet regularly every Sunday morning? Parker's three thousand listened to a man whose belief in God, conscience, personal immortality, was as firm as Jonathan Edwards's. The congregations who hear his successors are apt to find rhapsody instead of prayer, the memory of a good life instead of immortality, the cosmos instead of God. And if it has taken twenty-eight years to build one permanent building for radical worship, how long will it be before unbelief outnumbers the twenty-five or thirty Christian Unitarian churches now so utterly abandoned by Mr. Parker's successors?

We are glad to get the information from Colonel Higginson that the Horticultural Hall meetings were held last winter; but we confess that as news of them did not reach our ears, which in previous years had heard their coming from afar, we were hasty enough to conclude that what we did not hear gave no sound.

As for the culture of The Index and its readers, Colonel Higginson, himself one of the best examples America can show of the highest culture, must know that for seventy-five years we have had an "unlettered" and ignorant class of sceptics, neglectful alike of all churches, liberal or conservative, and ready to send recruits to this and that infidel ism or spiritualistic delusion. Unitarianism sixty years ago was the secession of some of the most cultivated men and churches of the most cultivated of American denominations; some of the later Free Religionist seceders from Unitarianism have also been of the highest intellectual attainments; but now-a-days Mr. Abbot and Colonel Higginson find themselves hedged about with followers whose doubt is that of sheer intellectual inability to comprehend faith, and whose screeds, as they appear side by side with finished editorial or admirable "T. W. H." contributions in The Index, leave an impression of pity for the men they almost shame by their company. An ignorant man has as good a right to his religion as a scholar; Christianity has always had thousands of the illiterate in its ranks; but theirs is the wisdom and the humility of a conscious ignorance and weakness, which does not, Ingersoll fashion, declare that it has created God. We must still assert that, if the tone of The Index is any safe guide, its contact with culture in the majority of its followers is very slight, and that its influence, like that of the Investigator, upon the better class of thinkers is very small. Of course Colonel Higginson reads it with sympathy; but if he, with his culture, were a conservative Unitarian, we believe his conversion from the mere reading of a journal to which he now lends one of its few attractive features would be far distant.

Let us say in general, without "misstating or underrating" the strength of our opponents, that, however it may be with simple unbelief, we cannot see any great gain of Free Religion within the past ten or twenty years. Nearly every Unitarian of the extreme left has found himself compelled to leave the denomination in consequence of his own inability to work in it, or in consequence of the feebleness and dissatisfaction of his congregation; and therefore the Unitarian churches have never, we think, been as a whole more Evangelical, or free from deistical taint, than to-day. The seceders from their ranks have found no radical organizations to give them meeting-house or salary, and most of them have passed over from the field of religious instruction to that of general literature. Let us mention such names as occur to us. F. E. Abbot, failing to carry his Unitarian church in Dover, N. H., with him to deism, went to Toledo, Ohio, founded a Free Religious society, of which we have heard nothing since his departure from that place, and is now (without stated place of preaching) editor of The Index. D. A. Wasson, abandoning his Orthodox Congregational church in Groveland, Mass., founded an "Independent" society in that place, whose strength departed when he left and went to Boston as Parker's successor. He is now (without stated place of preaching) an occasional writer for the press, and a resident of West Medford, Mass. William C. Gannett has, we believe, never had a stated place of preaching. John Weiss, resigning his Watertown society, has since been a lecturer on Shakspeare. William J. Potter, repudiating the name of Christian, has naturally been dropped from the list of Unitarian Christian ministers, although he still preaches to a considerable Unitarian congregation. Samuel Johnson, who once preached to an "Independent" society in Lynn, of which we now know nothing, is devoting himself to literature. C. P. Cranch, who never fairly entered the ministry, writes and paints. William R. Alger has given up preaching to the Music Hall Society, a result with which want of funds on the part of the society is said to have had something to do. Samuel Longfellow lives in Cambridge (without stated place of preaching). O. B. Frothingham has withdrawn from the Unitarian body, and preaches to a considerable, but not large, Free Religious audience in this city. J. T. Sargent lives (without stated place of preaching) in Boston. Finally, Colonel Higginson himself, to the gain of literature, but to the loss of the religious chaos he adorns, has long abandoned regular preaching. Of Unitarian ministers still recognized as such in the official list, we recognize but three having regular pastoral charge whom we know to have advanced to or near the platform of the Free Religious Association—Dr. Cyrus A. Bartol, of Boston; Dr. William H. Furness, of Philadelphia; John W. Chadwick, of Brooklyn, and William T. Clarke, of New York; and of these Dr. Furness and Dr. Bartol's spirituality is such that from their radical influence the school of THE INDEX has little to hope. These facts seem to indicate that whenever a man transcends Christianity and quits the Unitarian or any other Christian church, he is apt to fall out of regular religious work of any kind. And thus it is that "unbelief" in any phase which claims to be "religious," not only in Boston but everywhere else, has gained little of late. There is unbelief at the present day, we admit, both pervasive and potent; but not of the sort which claims to be "Free Religious," or in any other sense religious. It is the utterly irreligious unbelief of materialistic atheism. That has the strength of direct consistency. But with the unbelief which proclaims itself religious while denying the basis of religion we need give ourselves little concern.—New York Independent.

THE SUNDAY QUESTION IN AMERICA.

BY H. S. X., IN THE LONDON "FREE SUNDAY ADVOCATE" OF JUNE 1, 1874.

When the western districts of Notting Hill and Kensington were visited, some time since, by the Rev. Bee Wright and friends, who, for a brief period, galvanized into life the long defunct act of Charles II., of pious memory, I remember hearing some very strong expressions from the inhabitants, while they were smarting under the sting of the Rev. Bee. Bad as these petty persecutions were, it has been reserved for one of the American States to furnish at least a parallel, and "had I but Aladdin's lamp" I would request the genii to set me down in Boston, that I might study the Sunday question under American influences. When I say American influences I do not include cowhiding, or tar and feathers. I should consider these undue influences, and likely to prejudice the mind of a student; but this being at the present time out of the question, I must content myself by being simply a reporter. Turning over a number of old copies of THE INDEX, published in Boston, I came upon an article entitled "Emancipate Sunday," from which I quote the following:—

"A case of petty persecution for infraction of the Sunday law, in Brookline, Massachusetts, which has already been briefly mentioned in these columns (THE INDEX, for June 15, page 191), has led to the publication of a pamphlet by Mr. William I. Bowditch, a highly respected citizen of the place, containing a cool and dispassionate exposure of the disgrace thus cast upon the town and the State. From this pamphlet it appears, original documents being cited in evidence, that on Sunday, May 12, Mr. George J. Walther assisted his wife in transferring a passion-flower from a small pot into a large one; and that, having screwed a hook into a water-spout for the purpose, he was just about hanging up the vine, when a policeman, E. C. Clark, threatened to arrest him for a violation of the Sunday law if he did not stop. Mr. Walther stopped at once, expressing, however, an intention to test the matter after a consultation with a lawyer. The policeman next day complained of him to a magistrate, obtained a warrant for his arrest, and obliged him to appear before Trial Justice C. H. Drew, who fined him two dollars and costs, amounting to three dollars and ninety-five cents—the policeman's share being one dollar and sixty cents. From this judgment Mr. Walther appealed.

"These irritating proceedings naturally excited the indignation of the fellow-citizens of the victim; and a petition signed by eighteen of the most influential of them was presented by Mr. Bowditch to the Selectmen of Brookline, together with a circumstantial statement by himself of the whole matter. These petitioners requested the town authorities to see that the fine and costs should be paid by the town itself, or to assess them upon the petitioners; to stay the proceedings where they were; and to forbid the police for the future to make any further voluntary complaints on account of infraction of the Sunday law. To this petition the Selectmen returned answer by the Town Clerk, a few days later, that they had 'voted that it is inexpedient to take any action upon the subject.'"

Mr. Bowditch protests against this decision, and declares that the Selectmen have free legal power to forbid the police thus to make complaints for violations of the Sunday law. But the writer of the article says:—

"The real evil lies further back, in the Sunday law itself. The only radical reform must consist in the expunging of this law from the Statute Book. Until this is done, there can be no real security against the repetition of the vexatious and bigoted prosecution complained of. No law is really "obsolete" as long as it stands unrepealed: it is always liable to be revived by any party in power which may choose to make use of it. Dead-letter laws are mischievous in many ways—creating contempt of all laws so long as they remain merely nominally in force, and becoming instruments of oppression if, as in this case, brought unexpectedly into operation. The only safe and wise course is to repeal every law which the advancing enlightenment of the age pronounces unworthy of itself.

"With this belief, we respectfully but earnestly recommend to the protestants against this absurd and tyrannical prosecution that they make it the ground of a vigorous movement in the next Legislature of Massachusetts for the immediate repeal of the Sunday law. It is this law which for ten years has defeated the beneficent measure of opening the Boston Public Library on Sunday; and it is a great mistake to treat it as in any sense a dead letter. Let the liberals of Massachusetts improve the opportunity now before them to agitate effectively for the abolition of the Sunday statutes—at least to the extent of repealing all those provisions which are in fact based on the idea that Sunday is in some sense a specially 'holy day.' It is quite enough to make Sunday a 'day of rest,' a legal holiday, as a pure municipal regulation; whatever is more than this comes of superstition. We hope sincerely that the Massachusetts liberals will now prove that they possess the courage of their opinions, and will not rest content with any half-cure of the contemptible tyranny here attempted to be practised. Let them lay the axe at the root of the tree, and destroy for all time the arrogant pretence that one portion of the community have a right to prevent another portion from taking care of flowers, or playing croquet, or doing any other innocent and inoffensive act on their own premises on the first day of the week. The 'conscience' which is hurt by seeing other people employ themselves on that day as they please, so long as they behave themselves quietly and peaceably, is a conscience that is incompatible with the first principles of civil freedom; and it is not a conscience that can be embodied in statute law without most unjustifiable interference with individual rights. Whoever wants to worship in a church on a Sunday, free from molestation or disturbance, should be scrupulously protected in that right; but on the same ground every other individual should enjoy an equal liberty. Now is the time for a determined attempt to get rid of outgrown puritanical legislation on this subject in Massachusetts. Let the whole country see that the old Bay State understands her duty."

With these remarks I think we must all concur, and it is evident that the same dogmatic spirit that exists in England is abroad in America, born no doubt of the same grim old puritanism.

But there as here its days are numbered; its ranks are thinning fast, and in the end the spectre of puritanism must vanish before the spirit of rationalism. But the end is not yet; old errors, like old trees, strike their roots deep, and to eradicate them it requires persistence, courage, and unity. This last the first, the keystone of the arch. The army of progress must be undivided. We, like the heroic Greeks when they won the battle of Marathon, are outnumbered by six to one; but they fought as one man; and let us learn this lesson from the past, and we shall conquer as they did. It took centuries before the intellect of man could free itself from the domination of Catholicism. From Pelagius in the first to Luther in the sixteenth is a long stretch of time for the mind to travel over; but we can hear, if we have ears to hear, the dim yet audibly articulate protest of those brave hearts whose lives were quenched by fire and sword, at the bidding of men who professed to bring to poor, suffering, ignorant humanity a religion of love. What bitter mockery! The reaction set in at last with the Reformation, but with the rise of puritanism Sunday liberty was lost.

The same spirit of reaction, or revolt of common sense, which slowly but surely broke the despotic sway of the dominant church of the past, is abroad to-day, searching, questioning, collecting facts regardless of consequences—regardless, so long as the truth is gained, how many, or how few, preconceived notions and priestly "Thou shalts" are relegated to their place with other exploded shams. When I started I expressed a wish to be set down in Boston by the aid of Aladdin's lamp; but I have wandered "on the saddle of a thought" into Greece before the birth of Socrates, and some four centuries before the birth of the Founder of Christianity, whose religion, as Mr. Graham tells us, was a life and not a creed. A life of love. We know too well what it has done as a creed. Would that humanity could even now reduce it to a life.

I have been riding, as it were, in a circle, and have come back to the point I started from,—Emancipate Sunday. Yes, that is a work in which the reader must help as well as the writer. Sunday freedom once gained in London will speedily be obtained in the provinces.

Boston, though oppressed by sabbatic laws, is yet the centre of religious freethought in America; as Wendell Holmes tells us, "Boston has opened, and kept open, more turnpikes that lead straight to free thought, and free speech, and free deeds, than any other city of live men or dead men, I don't care how broad their streets are, nor how high their steeples."

THE REAL REVELATION.

BY W. A. LEONARD, IN THE LONDON "UNITARIAN HERALD" OF JUNE 19, 1874.

Most of our readers know there are two schools of philosophy—the one called experiential, or utilitarian, refers all moral judgments to experiences of utility; while the other, known as the intuitional, reduces all moral obligation to the principle of an inexplicable constitution of the human mind. The former is the objective school, and claims amongst its adherents such men as the late J. S. Mill and Mr. Herbert Spencer. The latter is subjective, and numbers its supporters from among such thinkers as Miss Cobbe and Mr. Lecky.

It would seem apparent, from the oft-quoted maxim, "Extremes meet," that there must be, could we only find it, some ground on which the deep thinkers on both sides could agree. Where such opposite views are held by thinkers of the mental calibre of those just named, it is but reasonable to conclude each side must have some warrant for its belief, and, as is usual in such cases, the common ground must be one where each side is fairly represented, and where a compromise harmonizes the previously conflicting opinions.

And, indeed, it is a matter of supreme importance that a third school, embracing the truths held by the other two, and avoiding their errors, should be formed as soon as possible. For, first, let us see the great error that both the experientialist and the intuitionalist teach; their final result discovers a purely subjective principle. With the experientialist the association of ideas, whether acquired or inherited, is the sole reason of all morality; that is, our present ideas of morality are nothing else but an accumulation of generalized experiences from observations of the different effects of different actions upon human happiness; and hence the morale of our action is to be judged, not by an objective standard of morality, but by its apparent utility.

According to the intuitionalist, on the other hand, men "derive the first principles of their duties from intuition;" hence to a man's "conscience" must the final appeal be made in matters of morality. It requires but a moment's reflection to show that man's "conscience" varies with the ages, and also with the various stages of civilization at which the race may have arrived; therefore, what seems right at one period and to one community may appear wrong at another time and to another civilization. Thus truth will be made non-absolute, instead of the absolute and eternal Reality we hope and believe it is, and to the attainment of which we press forward as to a long-desired and much-valued goal! We have been led into these remarks by a singularly able paper in the Boston (U. S.) INDEX, written by the editor, Mr. F. E. Abbot.

THE INDEX is one of the most outspoken of the American newspapers on subjects connected with religion, and might perhaps by some (as it is, indeed, by Professor Newman) be considered too much devoted to the negative side of the religious question. There can be no doubt, however, that this remarkable paper fully vindicates its uprightness as well as its righteousness, condemning both the utilitarian and the intuitional schools as being sadly deficient, in that they make the final authority rest in the subjective; the mind or the conscience is the supreme authority. Though, says Mr. Abbot, the inseparable association of certain ideas, as well as the character of any and every institution, depend entirely upon the action of the environment reflecting its necessary relations in human intelligence.

Mr. Abbot insists, with reason, that Moral Obligation is an objective reality, and Moral Intuition the reflection of this Obligation in consciousness, while the "two combined as endless action and reaction between the mind and the Nature of Things give the clue to the Moral History of Man, which is explained only by the law of evolution" (thus furnishing a common meeting ground for the two schools already mentioned). We draw attention to this remarkable paper because it seems to us just the answer needed when the leaders of the Utilitarian and Intuitional philosophies severally claim our allegiance. Their arguments are often so plausible that it is difficult to gainsay them, though we cannot but feel the whole truth lies with neither of them.

SIASCONSET.

JULY 27, 1874.

"Say it again." "Spell it." "Where in the world is it?" Such are the greetings which meet me when I attempt to tell people of my latest discovery among sea-side resorts. "Crook your arm," I answer, "and there you have Nantucket Island; Nantucket town is inside the bend, and Siasconset is outside." If the associations were agreeable, I would call it the crazy-bone of the island. "Here we are," said one of the hardy sons of the village, as we stood together upon the bluff, looking seaward; "here we are, with no land between us and Europe." If he had offered to ferry me over in his dory, I think I should have agreed, Europe seemed so near, with nothing but the Atlantic Ocean to hinder. But what a view that was for one who would know the solitude of the ocean without crossing it! One need not have a vivid imagination to fancy himself on board ship, cutting his way eastward, as he stands on Siasconset shore and sees the waves heave, and curl, and dash into foaming ripples along the island's staunch though weather-beaten sides.

Nowhere else, excepting on the deck of the old "Africa" in mid-ocean, have I ever seen so wide and unbroken a sea view. Shifting sand-bars under the sea warn vessels of much draught to keep their distance, so that the "stately ships go on" without recognition at this point, and the scene is one vast solitude. One turns with a sense of relief from the infinity of sea and sky to the cluster of houses on the bluff, where finite man abides. Not that Siasconset folk are any more finite than other folk, but their houses certainly betray unusual limitations. They were built originally by fishermen from Nantucket, who came here in the spring and fall months to catch cod. They did not bring their families with them at first. They therefore built little, one-story houses, with peaked roofs. Afterwards wishing to have the company of wives and children, they put on sheds wherever it was convenient; and there the houses lie, like a group of barnacles on a rock, big and little all in a bunch.

Of course, with the wives came neatness, order, and taste, and these houses, once so rough and meagre, are now as pretty and homelike as you would wish to see. Honeysuckle and roses take kindly to their shingled walls, and where the vines fail paint and whitewash put in their redeeming touch. Everything is so pretty and tidy that you wonder if this really is a fishing station. Your wonder increases when you see men, women, and children flitting about from house to house, in costumes which, although relieved of display, are of unmistakable city cut and fashion. These are the summer visitors. The place is almost wholly inhabited by them at this season. They come from all parts of the Union. They hire a tiny house, all furnished, for fifty or sixty dollars a season, and either keep house or take their meals at one of the restaurants, of which there are two or three close at hand. Besides these cottages, there are two hotels, the little "Sea View House" and the larger "Atlantic House." We stayed at the latter. It is kept by Mrs. Eliza Chadwick, and exceedingly well kept. The table was by far the best we have known at any seaside hotel, and the same competent hand was visible in the neat rooms, opening on a breezy piazza and commanding fascinating views. Visitors sometimes pass this hotel, expecting pleasanter quarters nearer the shore; but I can only say that they may go farther and fare worse. When all the houses are so near the sea, there is little to choose in point of locality, and the "Atlantic" has great advantages in its food, its lodging, and its outlook. The finest houses in the settlement are clustered about it, and it looks over their heads to the blue sea beyond.

But why all this talk of Siasconset? What should one go there for?

For the purest sea air on the coast. The prevailing wind is southwest. Siasconset gets this wind fresh from the sea. Nantucket town only gets it after it has travelled across the island, and the cottages at Oak Bluffs on Martha's Vineyard are in the same relative position. Go to Siasconset to breathe. It is worth the trouble. Every breath is a delight. It is enjoyment enough to sit still and drink it in.

But active existence is not reduced, by any means, to this primitive diversion. You can bathe if you know how to hold on.

A big rope stretches from a spar on the beach to a buoy in the water, and the wise bather holds fast to that rope. If anybody thinks this a tame way of bathing, let him try it. The waves snatch you up, as a strong man might catch a child and toss him in the air. There is no danger from the undertow so long as you stick to the over-tow. Hold fast to the rope, and in spite of algæ and sand, in which the waves abound, you will have a lively, safe, and invigorating bath. They ought to have more bathing-houses. Fish houses are not an acceptable equivalent.

If neither breathing nor bathing attract you, there is always fishing to be had for the trying. Scup and blue-fish are only too willing to be caught; the latter asking no bait but a leaden drail. The only skill required in blue-fishing is expedition and care in pulling them in. It gives sailing exactly the kind of twitch it needs to relieve its monotony, to have a line out and a blue-fish on the end of it every now and then. Or one may fish from the south shore, if he likes exercise, and he will get all he wants of muscular diversion after he has thrown the drail out beyond the breakers a few hundred times; nor is this all in the way of manly sport. A ride of four miles to Quidnit, passing Sankaty Head on the way, will bring one to the favorite waters of the shark family. Fishermen will take you out in their yawls a mile or two, and give you every facility for making a close acquaintance with this interesting family. Sliced blue-fish is all the invitation they need, and they come to the surface very promptly when a stout fisherman has hold of the other end of the line and pulls steadily. A few blows on the snout reconcile them to their new element, and they are pulled over the side of the boat and soon expire.

If none of these sports attract you, you will not stir at this summons. But if fishing, bathing, sailing, or simply breathing the purest air on the coast—cool without sharpness, breezy without chill,—has a charm for you, I advise Siasconset and the "Atlantic House." The terms at this house are twelve dollars a week; washing, one dollar a dozen; riding, one to two dollars a team; boating, six to eight dollars a party. Mail every evening, and conveyance to and from Nantucket, seven miles away, for seventy-five cents. Leave Boston by Old Colony to Wood's Hole any forenoon, and you will be at Siasconset in the early evening.—G. L. C., in the "Boston Evening Transcript" of July 31.

LEGAL TREATMENT OF EMOTIONAL INSANITY.

The legal relations of morbid impulse are of vast importance to society. My own opinion in regard to the manner in which the law should deal with individuals thus affected will easily be ascertained by the following:—

1. A person aware of the existence of an impulse to commit crime, and which he fears he may not be able to resist, is bound to do everything in his power to render the accomplishment of his propensity impossible. It is his duty to immediately place himself under restraint. If he does not, he is morally and legally in no better position than a ruffian who feels an impulse to acquire other people's property, and accordingly murders the man most convenient for his purpose.

2. The individual who is clearly shown to have yielded to a previously unfelt impulse to commit crime, and who accordingly perpetrates an otherwise motiveless offence, or one which in his normal condition would evidently not have been committed, is too dangerous to society to be allowed to go at large. He ought to be placed under permanent restraint. I say permanent, because experience shows that this form of mental aberration is exceedingly apt to recur. Several of the cases I have cited are illustrations of crime committed after the discharge from confinement, and there are hundreds of similar instances on record.

3. Those morbidly constituted individuals who commit crimes because it is pleasant for them to do so, such as Helen Isgado, Dumollard, Pomeroy, and others whom I might mention, should be treated exactly like other offenders of the laws. The apparent absence of motive is apparent only. The fact that the criminal experiences pleasure from the committal of the act is as strong a motive as any other that can be alleged, and is entitled to no more extenuating force than the pleasure of revenge, acquisitiveness, or other passions. "Lord, how I do love thieving!" said a London vagabond; "if I had all the riches of the world, I would still be a thief."

4. The fact that a murder has been committed in order that the perpetrator might secure his own execution is not a palliating circumstance. Those who contend that it is—and I am sorry to find Dr. Maudsley among them—seem to be actuated by the erroneous idea that suicide is necessarily the act of an insane person. The desire to be executed may be evidence of a morbid mind, but not necessarily of an insane one; and if we are going to excuse every crime committed by jaundiced and hypochondriacal and notoriety-loving people, we might as well close our courts at once.

5. A morbid impulse to crime experienced by an insane person—and by an insane person I mean one who exhibits other evidences of insanity beside the morbid impulse, and who would be considered by competent judges to be insane, even if no such impulse existed—demands continued sequestration.

6. But the plea "I could not help it" is one which every member of the criminal classes can urge with as much force as the subject of morbid impulse, and when it stands alone in an otherwise sane individual, should be absolutely disregarded by juries and judges. —W. A. Hammond, M.D., in the "Herald of Health" for July.

MUSCULAR CHRISTIANITY was once so popular that Mr. Kingsley and his imitators presented us with a vast number of clerical heroes, each of whom was six feet high, could preach three sermons, walk twenty-five miles, administer thirty-three baptisms, visit seventeen sick persons, and thrash seventeen impenitent bargees in the course of one Sunday's work. Ritualism has altered the type; but, if the Lord's Day Rest Association has its will, pedestrian parsons may come into vogue again. Vehicles are to be discontinued on Sundays, and the sight of the Bishop of London walking from Fulham to St. Paul's—not, we hope, with peas in his shoes—is to convert a cab-driving and carriage-using generation from the error of its ways. So far as the cab-drivers themselves are concerned, we are very sorry that they have no weekly rest; but that is their own desire and their own fault. The drivers could easily organize amongst themselves a plan by which a section could have a second or third Sunday quite free, while there are in almost every London church week-day services at early morning times, which the cabmen, if really anxious for religious communion, could easily attend. Beyond these opportunities for joining their fellow-Christians in prayer and praise, it is not our business to interfere—all the rest is a matter of free, unforced, and paid-for service. A person who is weak or delicate wishes to be driven to church, and the cabman is willing to earn an honest penny to buy his Sunday dinner. No doubt, it is very hard that anybody should be obliged to lead such lives of unremitting toil, and the extra labor on Sundays, owing to the use of cabs by worshippers drawn from distant places, is deplorable enough from the point of view of all who believe that overwork is bad; but Sunday driving and Sunday toil are not, unfortunately, the only illustrations we witness of severe pressure on the industrial classes in an old and overcrowded community like ours. The sole remedy for the evil is impracticable; if we could confine every man to his own parish church, we should minimize the use of cabs; but thus to make zoöphytes of the laity would be to hand them over without redress to every freak and whim of the pastor whom money, or lay patronage, or a bishop's discretion has placed over their heads. The mischief is sometimes severe enough in country places; to extend it to London would provoke a rebellion. As things are, the Evangelical or Ritualist, disgusted by the ornate or the unadorned character of the nearest church, satisfies his soul by calling a cab and invading another parish. Can we in fairness deprive any London layman of this simple means of redress?—Leeds (Eng.) Telegraph.

THE Pall Mall Gazette reproduces from an Italian correspondent of the Neue Freie Presse the following incidents in reference to Garibaldi. Before the General resided in Caprera, it rarely happened that a ship touched at the island, while during the past three years no fewer than one hundred and fifty steamers have stopped there. Four Neapolitan vessels have been named after the General, and since 1871 he has been presented, chiefly by Americans, with agricultural implements to the value of from 14,000 to 16,000 lire. He has also received other presents, consisting of money, jewelry, etc., to the value of about 1,000,000 lire, but he has returned them all to the senders. Garibaldi is honorary citizen of ninety towns, villages, and districts, and honorary president of one hundred and twenty societies; he has twenty-one swords of honor, eleven of which have been sent him from abroad, and since 1871 he has received upwards of five thousand addresses of sympathy from various quarters. The island of Caprera brings in to the General a net income of about 3,000 lire. A lire is about nine and one half pence English.

THE ELIZABETH Herald says: "On Monday the little son of one of our citizens, while playing with his sister, a bright, sweet child of five summers, got hold of his father's gun, which had been carelessly left standing in the kitchen by the thoughtless parent, pointed the gun at his playmate, and saying, jokingly, 'I'll kill you,' pulled the trigger. What must have been that boy's feelings when he found that he had lied, that the gun was not loaded, and that his innocent little sister had knocked a portion of his nose off with a stick of wood."

Poetry.

IDLING ONE DAY IN JUNE.

BY JOHN W. CHADWICK.

Idling one day in June, my aimless feet,
Forbidden, crossed the threshold of that fane
By grateful Harvard built for her dear slain,
Whom Freedom counted for her service meet.

Above me rose the glorious sheaf of towers,
As on the snowy tablets, slow, I read
The names of all the generous-hearted dead
Who were our chivalry's most perfect flowers.

There were the names of men whom all the land
Hailed as the greatest in those dreadful days;
There, too, their names whose only meed of praise
Was the deep sense of doing God's command.

And one I read which oft I used to speak,
In loving-wise, as friend doth speak with friend:
Brave, ardent spirit! wheresoever tend
Thy restless feet, thou dost the highest seek.

And, as I gazed, with dimmer sight I saw,
Upon rude stagings high above my head,
The workmen painting words that shall be read
Through countless years of Liberty and Law;

Resounding words of that melodious tongue
Which Tully spoke and Virgil sang so well;
But nought of all their meaning could they tell,
Who on the wall their various colors flung.

And some there were who worked in sombre hues,
While others bravely did illuminate
With red and gold some word of greater weight;
But all alike the meaning all did lose.

Behold, I thought, a parable of those Whose names are graven on these tablets cold;
They did their work, yet little could have told
Of meanings vast which only Heaven knows.

Behold, I thought, a parable of all
Who do men's work upon this mortal strand;
Great meanings which they cannot understand
They paint and grave on Time's memorial wall.

There are who work in colors dull and cold;
There are who work in characters of flame:
It matters not, the glory is the same;
For only thus the tale is fitly told,

Which He can read who builds all seas above,
So strong that nothing can destroy or mar,
In every sun, in every circling star,
The everlasting temple of His love.

—Christian Union.

NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS TO INDEX STOCK.

Mrs. F. W. Christern,	New York City,	One	share,	$100
Richard B. Westbrook,	Sonman, Pa.	"	"	100
R. C. Spencer,	Milwaukee, Wis.	Two	"	200
R. W. Howes,	Boston, Mass.	One	"	100
Chas. W. Story,	Boston, Mass.	"	"	100
E. W. Meddaugh,	Detroit, Mich.	Five	"	500
Jacob Hoffner,	Cumminsville, O.	One	"	100
John Weiss,	Boston, Mass.	"	"	100
W. C. Russel,	Ithaca, N. Y.	"	"	100
A. W. Leggett,	Detroit, Mich.	"	"	100
B. F. Dyer,	Boston, Mass.	"	"	100
James Purinton,	Lynn, Mass.	"	"	100
F. A. Nichols,	Lowell, Mass.	"	"	100
J. S. Palmer,	Portland, Me.	"	"	100
Robt. Ormiston,	Brooklyn, N.Y.	"	"	100
Mrs. A. L. Richmond,	Lowell, Mass.	"	"	100
Mrs. Benj. Ireson,	Lynn, Mass.	"	"	100
J. E. Oliver,	Ithaca, N.Y.	"	"	100
E. H. Aldrich,	Providence, R.I.	"	"	100
Geo. L. Clark,	Providence, R.I.	"	"	100
W. M. Jackson,	Providence, R.I.	Two	"	200
Mrs. E. B. Chase,	Valley Falls, R.I.	"	"	100
L. F. Garvin,	Lonsdale, R.I.	One	"	100
James Damon,	Ipswich, Mass.	"	"	100
Joseph A. Barker,	Providence, R.I.	"	"	100

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING AUGUST 15.

Lewis Scott, $3; P. S. Crowell, $3; Homer Chapman, $3; J. C. Fargo, $1.25; H. S. Heberling, 75 cents; Benj. R. Tucker, $1.50; A. H. Wimbish, $1.50; R. C. Bassett, 75 cents; B. A. Ballou, $2; James Knights, $3; G. F. Barrett, $3; James G. Richardson, $3; B. F. George, $2.50; James Wood, $4; Mrs. George R. Russell, $1.50; W. C. Moore, 50 cents; Samuel Brook, 14 cents; M. Pechin, 75 cents; H. N. Spaan, 25 cents; O. G. Steele, 50 cents; G. B. Raymond, 50 cents; Charlotte R. Hoswell, 40 cents; William Willicott, 40 cents; George W. Shoch, $2; Mrs. Mary Westphal, $13; P. Stewart, $6; J. S. Lyon, $5; Mrs. W. F. Bowman, 75 cents; W. H. Allen, $3; E. W. Hooper, $3; Mrs. R. K. Switzer, $1.75; J. E. Follett, $30; George H. Foster, 80 cents; A. K. Loring, 43 cents; Charles E. Pratt, 75 cents.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—Postage on THE INDEX is five cents per quarter, dating from receipt of the first number, payable in advance at the place of delivery.

N. B.—When writing about a former remittance, always give the date of such remittance as exactly as possible.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY

BY

THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

NO. 1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

Toledo Office: No. 35 Monroe Street. Julius T. Frey, Agent and Clerk.

Francis Ellingwood Abbot, ... Editor.
Abram Walter Stevens, ... Associate Editor.
Octavius Brooks Frothingham, Thomas Wentworth Higginson, William J. Potter, Richard P. Hallowell, William H. Spencer, Mrs. E. D. Cheney, Rev. Charles Voysey (England), Prof. Francis W. Newman (England), Editorial Contributors.

BOSTON, AUGUST 20, 1874.

SUNDAY LECTURES.—The Editors of The Index will lecture occasionally on Sundays, if desired, within a convenient distance of Boston.

Communications come in much faster than they can be printed; but we do our best to give every clear-headed writer a chance to be read.

An essay on the temperance question will be found in this issue of The Index, written several years ago, but expressing our present convictions on that subject.

Senator Windom, of Minnesota, has discovered that "very few" of his constituents are in favor of inflation. A similar discovery awaits, we trust, the other inflationists of the last Congress.

A charming description of Siasconset, reprinted on another page, will show our readers where we spent several days of the vacation for which we are under such delightful obligation to our kind friends. It is written by one of our companions at the time.

Mr. Pillsbury's articles on the record of the Christian Church with reference to African slavery ought not to be overlooked by anybody. The more facts, dates, quotations, and exact references he gives on this subject, the greater will be the obligation he lays on the readers of The Index and its editor.

Mr. C. E. Norton, of Cambridge, has set a useful example by publicly cautioning everybody against the railroad between Shelburne Falls and the Hoosac Tunnel, on account of the bad condition of the road, which has led to several accidents of late, and nearly cost him his own life recently. If every person who escapes from a railroad accident would do the same, and so prevent the hushing-up policy that too largely prevails, the railroad companies would soon be taught to exercise less economy at the expense of human life.

Soon after his return from America to England, Mr. Bradlaugh, in describing this country, fell into some mistakes not to be wondered at in consideration of his short stay and necessarily hasty observations. We wish, for instance, that he drew a true picture when he says: "There the Bible cannot be thrust by force down the throats of the school children." "The Americans, at present, have positively refused to allow the Catholic priesthood to tamper with their school system." The day will come when we shall have earned this commendation.

A letter from New Orleans, recently received by Mr. Underwood from the Secretary of the Liberal League in that city, states that there is a "very large liberal element in Louisiana," but (as elsewhere) it is very hard to unite them for vigorous work. The Catholics are numerous and strong; the negroes are nearly all Protestants, but "superstitious in the extreme." Thus far the New Orleans League has "worked silently," for the purpose of getting themselves accustomed to combined action before undertaking public meetings. "Please see Mr. Abbot for me," says the writer, "and let him know that the Demands of Liberalism will not be likely to take with the negro population. The word Liberal will kill it at once in their estimation throughout the South. As a whole they can be made to understand only the first Demand. It must be borne in mind that they are now citizens and voters, but very ignorant and superstitious. Nothing will go down with them unless the names 'Republican' and 'Union' are ingredients in it. . . . I am trying to persuade Mr. ——, editor of the ——, to place the first Demand of Liberalism at the head of his columns, as a plank in his future platform. . . . My advice is that you at once organize a colored Liberal League in Boston, prepare suitable circulars showing that Lincoln, Sumner, etc., were in favor of the movement, and get them to circulate these among the leading negroes all over the South."

"THE STRENGTH OF UNBELIEF."

In another column will be found an article with the above caption copied from the New York Independent of August 6. Some characteristic criticisms by this paper on "unbelief in Boston" drew out, it seems, a courteous remonstrance from Colonel Higginson, to which the editor courteously replies by clinching his former misrepresentations as well as he is able, though not with as much success as determination. It may not be a waste of ink to print a little more on the subject than was contained in our casual mention of these misrepresentations in The Index of the same date. But we have not the ghost of a suspicion that the infallible Independent will curtail a comma of its published misstatements; for we notice that, whenever it has cyphered that two times two are seventeen, it invariably sticks to its cyphering in the face of all the Arithmetics in the country, and justifies its name by being gloriously "independent" of the multiplication table.

1. This heroic "defender of the faith" of Henry C. Bowen (who is the only editor the public is permitted to know) institutes a comparison between the Boston of Theodore Parker's time and the Boston of to-day, with reference to their relative "strength of unbelief." As is well known, Parker stood almost absolutely alone in New England, as the representative of religious radicalism, and was cast out with horror by the Unitarians; to-day he ranks side by side with Channing in the saints' calendar of that denomination, and speaks through the lips of a large proportion of its ministers. His "three thousand" hearers have become many times three thousand admirers and co-believers; and his type of "unbelief" is to-day comparative conservatism. The Parker Memorial Hall is finished and occupied by a fine audience; the Paine Hall will soon be so likewise. The Free Religious Association hold their largely attended conventions not only in Boston, but in many other leading cities, New York itself not excepted; they sustain every winter a course of lectures in Horticultural Hall which is one of the established institutions of the city; and they are making a fair beginning as a publishing association. The Radical Club has been for years one of the most famous features of Boston, exerting a wide and incalculable influence; and the Second Radical Club bids fair to become equally influential, if its future career is not to fall behind its past. The Liberal League has made itself quietly but most powerfully felt in Boston the past year on the question of church taxation, and intends to resume its peculiar work of "unbelief" (we forbear to criticise this nickname for strong, positive convictions) with redoubled energy. The Spiritualists have several flourishing organizations, and have just been holding successful camp-meetings very largely attended; and Hospitaller Hall has its own stout corps of sappers and miners, which will by no means disband in order to accommodate the Independent. The Investigator and the Banner of Light are both thriving and doing excellent service in what its critic considers so "weak" a cause; and The Index has been already published a year in Boston. This is enough to show that Rev. Mr. Baker was not far out of the way when he styled Boston a "camp of unbelief;" and if the Independent is not sagacious enough to recognize the Cassandra of Orthodoxy in its at present somewhat discredited Blauvelt, experience will come in by and by to supplement its sagacity and secure for that genuine seer a modicum of honor in his own country. Dr. Blauvelt is right: Christianity was never in such danger as it is to-day; and our happy New York ostrich may be left to get the sand out of its eyes at its leisure. Even so far as organization alone is concerned, the "unbelievers" (that is, those who believe too much truth to believe in the half-truths of the Independent) were never so strong in Boston as they are to-day.

2. But the fact is that this penetrating critic, in its anxiety to prove the "unbelievers" a very "feeble folk," measures them by the only yardstick it understands—denominational statistics; and the result is what might be expected. It practically confesses that it knows nothing of social and intellectual forces which it cannot do up in pound packages and peddle out at retail; it stares bewildered at all forms of belief which do not run a parish, build a three hundred thousand dollar meeting-house, and point triumphantly to the religious pyrotechnics of sensational ministers and operatic choirs. There is but meagre intelligence in the attempt to reckon the "strength of unbelief" by the table of avoirdupois weight, or to estimate the influence of radical ideas by means of the grocer's scales. Dr. Blauvelt falls into no such blunder. He knows that the Christianity is "weak" which cannot command the respect of the trained modern intellect, and beholds with alarm the Church's neglect of intellectual self-protection. The Independent runs through a list of radical speakers and writers who were once ministers and are now something else, and concludes that radicalism is "weak" in proportion as it abandons methods fitted only for the uses of conservatism—that the religion is dead which does not "preach." Perhaps it is; but it is a lively corpse. "We cannot see any great gain of Free Religion," says the Independent, "within the past ten or twenty years." Ten years ago the very name was unknown: what now makes it used so constantly and conspicuously? Do such names come up without a cause or justification in existing facts? It is sometimes convenient not to "see;" but those who have eyes and use them see that there are great multitudes of the best educated and most earnestly humanitarian people of our time who are coming to recognize in religion a mighty and indispensable force for good, yet are driven by intellectual honesty to seek it outside of Christianity. That this movement has not yet taken any decided, organized form, we are the first to admit; but whoever argues that the movement is "weak" because it sports no sectarian Year Book excites the quiet mirth of the well-informed.

3. We cannot help wondering whether Colonel Higginson's good opinion of the Independent's "candor" will receive any modification from its statement with reference to the Horticultural Hall meetings of last winter, that "news of them did not reach our ears." Several of the lectures there delivered were printed in The Index, which also frequently mentioned them; The Index has exchanged for several years with the Independent; and that the Independent read The Index last winter was proved by its own columns. Considering the other sources of knowledge of those meetings, which were sufficiently abundant in other journals, it must be reluctantly conceded either that the Independent remembers more than it chooses to acknowledge or else that something was the matter with its "ears."

4. The sneers of the Independent at the intellectual character of our associates and contributors are beneath contempt. That we are ever tempted to feel "shamed by their company," or that they confer anything but honor upon us, we deny with as much indignation as such irresponsible, petty, and guess-work slander is capable of exciting—which is not much. The fact that we have come to know hundreds of our subscribers personally, and thousands of them by letter, justifies us in saying that for culture, education, native vigor of mind, purity and earnestness of aspiration, private and public worth, and honorable standing in the communities where they reside, we believe them to be the peers of the constituency of any paper in the land—the Independent most certainly not excepted. Nothing but the intensest and densest ignorance, aiming a shaft at random, could have originated a calumny so absurd. We have to thank The Index for bringing us into relation with some of the finest, sweetest, purest, and most thoroughly cultivated people of the nation, some occupying high and responsible positions and others moving quietly in the retired places of life. If we were ashamed of our company, we should have cause to be ashamed indeed.

5. We have but a brief word to say respecting the "influence" of The Index, and the class over which it is assumed by the Independent to be exercised; and this is to acknowledge the chivalry of Colonel Higginson's defence of it. Certainly the influence of The Index on such a man must be very slight; and he would probably have thought little of it, were it not that, being constitutionally impelled to thrust himself between any injustice and its victim, he was eager to make the most of this little under the circumstances. Further than to hint our gratitude for this generous defence, we have nothing to say of the charge that prompted it. What, or how great, or over whom exercised, is the influence of The Index, we do not know; let others determine. It will take a great deal more "influence" than the Independent can exert to tempt us into any foolishness on that point. It is our business to speak what we believe, with a conscience towards man and towards our own soul; but it is none of our business to be looking after our shadow, or standing up to be measured with other people. Of course we hope to exert a real influence, and for good; else we should not work so hard for The Index. But the looker-on sees most of the game, and we by no means assume that we accomplish what we seek. Nor is it of much moment, after all. Life is short, but humanity lives on; and the best that the best can do is to lay one stone of the rising temple of Truth. It is the empty-headed only who gets conceited or testy about his "influence"; and it is the empty-hearted only who cares more for it than for doing some needed service for his fellow-men. Of one thing we are sure: that a man's best influence is precisely that which he knows least about. So be it. The moral for us all is that there is a great deal of genuine religion in minding our own business, and not feeling our own pulse too tenderly or too much.

6. It only remains to say that THE INDEX is not our private "organ," but the organ of all who write in it, and above all the organ of ideas held by thousands of earnest minds.

VACATION JOTTINGS.

I hope that every reader of THE INDEX has had, is having, or is going to have a vacation during this delicious summer-time. Whether you live in town or country, whether you work with hand or brain, you need a season of rest, in which to think a calm thought, to experience an utterly peaceful feeling, to breathe a deep, free breath, to get an attitude of repose towards Nature and all the world. For a few weeks, or at least for a few days, you men must stop money-making, you women must stop house-keeping, you care-takers and laborers must stop worrying and working, and each and all seek a new scene, a new environment, and a new vocation. Go to the mountains or the sea; go to the sweet, clean country; go to the farm-house on the hill-side, or to that one situate in the broad, open valley, in the cool shadow of trees, near the deep-flowing stream,—go anywhere away from noise, away from haste, away from work and care, away from business and fashion, where the wonderful pure eye of Nature may look you through and through; where the breath of her love may infuse your whole being, soften, warm, and kindle your soul; where her grandeur, majesty, strength, and great repose may impress you, and where all her simple, charming, rural sights and sounds may interest, amuse, and instruct you, and make you, too, simple and natural, full of delightful self-unconsciousness, innocent, artless, and winsome as in childhood.

The kind fortune which unexpectedly brought to me a week's vacation has appointed that I should spend it by the sea; and thoroughly blessed am I in such appointment,—for, though I love the mountains, I am an equal lover of the ocean, and am "perfectly happy with either, when t'other dear charmer's away." The place where I am is an old one to Nature, but a new one to man; and, as yet, Nature has it as she likes it,—man has not succeeded in spoiling it. I do not propose, either, to write it up now in the interest of any company or association, or solicit for it the favor of the public; for I fear it is destined all too fast and too soon to become popular, and, alas, fashionable. But at present it is a quiet, beautiful, and very pleasant retreat, the resort only of those who used to camp here in vacation time, and of such of their friends and acquaintances as have gradually been invited and attracted to the spot. Only, now, instead of the score or so of white tents that formerly glistened in a picturesque semi-circle near the shore, as many modest summer cottages dot the cleared lawn that slopes from the wide woods to the wider sea, and one large hotel spreads its ample roof and porch, inviting to its low-priced hospitality all such as do not wish to "sleep and eat themselves." Here, on the west shore of Buzzard's Bay, in plain sight of Martha's Vineyard, Penikese, Cuttyhunk, and numerous other islands, with a fine bay and ocean view —view from beetling bluff and sandy beach and grassy upland and tide-washed rock,—shone on at night by seven beacon lights that are eyes to the mariner in the darkness, and which from different distant points send tremulous shafts of light across the water to our very door,—all day warmed by the sun and fanned by ocean breeze, which are so kindly mutual as to produce a temperature that all enjoy, and which the doctor of this little community professionally recommends,—here the kind fates have led me; here in this lovely spot, and in a life that is simple, natural, free, jolly, and deliciously idle, my vacation days are delightfully and all too rapidly passing, but leaving for me results which I gratefully feel to be enriching to body, mind, and spirit.

The art of taking, or rather spending, vacations is truly worth learning. I have seen many a vacation spent and utterly frittered away by those who did not know how to use them when they had got them. Sometimes circumstances conspire to defeat the real object of a vacation. That is truly unfortunate. But one soon learns how to avoid or take advantage of such circumstances. It does not require much money to have a good vacation. It does require good sense, good judgment, and good company. One of the best vacations I ever had was spent in "camping out" with a friend; and that, too, when I was half sick. Nature is both physician and nurse, and to those who love her and trust her she is wonderfully kind. On that occasion I gave myself to her in weakness, and she made me strong. Now again I have given myself to her in loving confidence, and I find she is blessing me every hour of the day and the night. Plain food, easy dressing, outdoor living, an unfretting soul, pleasant companions who know how to combine fun with sense, hilarity with intellectuality,—it is astonishing how invigorating and recreative all these are!

The life I am living here is the next best thing to camp life. The doors and windows of our cottage are continually open, and at all hours of the night and day the whole premises are searched through and through, and swept clean of every impure breath, by the saline air of the sea and the soft, sweet breezes from the woods. Nobody can resist the constant invitation into the open weather. The children hardly can be coaxed to bed, or won to sit long enough at table to eat their food. As soon as possible after sleeping and eating, the house is deserted by man and woman, child and servant; and Nature, whose children we all are, overcomes us with her sweet seduction, and leads us whithersoever she will,—now to this haunt and sport and then to that, we not knowing in which we find most delight.

All this day, for instance, I have been reclining on the grass, under a red-cedar tree, close to the brow of the cliff, reading, writing, talking, dreaming, idly gazing, and getting thoroughly permeated with the spiritual-sensuous influence of all these surroundings. What a variety of sights I have seen, and sounds I have heard, and emotions I have experienced, since I sought this delightful spot this morning! "The sea is His, and He made it!" Yes, and all this blessed day He has spread the sea out before my eyes, and I have feasted soul and sense on its beauty, its versatility, its sublimity, its mystery. This morning, only the faintest breath of wind stirred its surface, and scarce any noise came from it but the low, monotonous, yet pleasant "swash" of the waves on the rocks below me. In a little while, a boat glided out from the shore, filled with some ambitious juvenile fishermen accompanied by one older head for a sort of ballast, whose voices I heard as they went coasting about for the best "ground" for fishing. All at once, there crossed the line of my vision a noble ship, with all sails set, bearing out to sea. A long voyage is before her. She is a whaler, and is just started on a cruise that may last two, three, or four years. Where bound? Round Cape Horn,—for the Pacific Ocean,—Behring Straits. My eyes and my heart followed her as far as the one could see, and the other imagine. What partings have been said by those on board; what histories they carry, and what they leave behind! What possible tragedies of hearts and fortunes depend upon the voyage which this ship is now beginning! Not all who go out in her may live to return; and even if they should, some of those at home who bade them good-by may not be there to say them welcome. And yet, who knows? All may go well and prosperously. At any rate, here's to the safe voyage of this noble ship, and her sure return!

She is hardly gone out of sight before the bathers appear, men and women, boys and girls. What a merry making is now! Splashing and dashing, diving and ducking, bobbing up and down so comically, tearing of mad-caps round the beach, screaming, shouting, laughing, talking, chattering! All sorts of costumes appear, whole ones and semi-ones,—the boys wearing the latter, and looking like so many plump little cupids without wings. Here is one girl who goes boldly off in a boat into deep water, and dives, coming up to the surface and striking off with a swimmer's good stroke. She is quite pretty, too, which makes her accomplishment all the more interesting.

At last the bathers are gone, and all is still again. Only, the wind has risen now, and the red cedar sighs sonorously, and the sea has deep wrinkles over all its broad face. The terns fly anxiously about, piping to one another, every now and then dashing into the water and bearing off their prey. They are better fishers than we are, for they were brought up to the business. Many a craft comes and goes over the bay, and clusters of afternoon strollers begin to appear on the rocks, and roam along the shore, watching the sails, listening to the surf, and getting infinite enjoyment from doing much of nothing and a little of everything.

Thus the day wears to a close, and the sun has gone back from the sea, across to the woods, and soon will touch with his last glory the clouds in the western sky. Then the night will come down, as I have seen it every time this week, bringing the great darkness over the great deep—the deep below answering to the deep above—and the stars will come out, and the beacon lights will shine. And then, as so many times before, I shall be impressed anew with the mighty mystery of the ocean, because its mystery will be doubled by the marriage thereof to the mighty mystery of the night!

The nights here are even more irresistible than the days. We stay out in them until sheer sleepiness drives us to bed. How deeper grows the stillness, how more impressive becomes the calm! We sit or lie on the rocks, sometimes, in long spells of silence, too religiously reverent in the great cathedral of the night to speak a word. At other times we sing hymns, and try to chime in with the grand music of the sea. Then again, the influence of the night is exhilarating and exciting to us, and we dance about and frolic like weird spirits in the darkness. And, when at last we repair to our couches, the waves sing to us their lullaby, and we fall asleep with the low, musical rote of the shore sounding in our ears.

There is a great deal of natural religion in this way of passing our vacation days and nights. This little community of Nonquitt is probably prayerless, as the Church would term it. Perhaps we get through with our vacation without thinking of Christ. We know no difference here between Sunday and any other day. And yet I have never met men more truly religious than some of these right-down radicals that congregate here from year to year. They know truth and goodness when they see them embodied in character, and reverence them in the unostentatious life. They are sensitive to all the fine influences of these beautiful surroundings, and give gentle heed to all the holy ministries of Nature. I have passed hours here in their company, as filled with worshipful thoughts and feelings as any I ever spent in church; and I shall leave this place, feeling that it has been good for me to be here in every true sense. Natural religion teaches us to be natural; to believe in Nature and our human nature; and to find our enjoyment and our duty in all those ways wherein our being seeks spontaneous and natural action. A. W. S.

Literary Notices.

BOOKS FOR CHILDREN AND YOUNG PERSONS. Book X. The Sight of Hell. By the Rev. I. Furniss, C. S. S. R. Dublin. 1871. Price one penny.

Many persons who have won for themselves, or been so blessed as to receive by inheritance, religious views untainted by the horrible superstitions which disgrace the Christian as well as all other dogmatic churches excuse themselves from taking any active part in the work of promoting enlightened views of theology and religion, by laying "the flattering unction to their souls" that these old beliefs are already dead, and are not now active agents for evil in our community. Because they can attend a Catholic mass and only feel the beauty of the music, or listen to an Orthodox sermon as they would to an Eastern legend, they do not realize that the fearful visions of sin and hell are terrible realities to many souls, and work upon the sensitive nerves of timid men, women, and children, to torture and blast their whole lives.

Many a physician can tell of the baleful influence of the revival excitement on his young and sensitive patients, and many a man can look back and see how his youthful energies have been wasted in the struggle to escape from the chains which have been bound around him in youth.

The Roman Catholics have suffered such cruel persecutions and unjust restrictions in England and Ireland, that our sympathies go with them in their efforts after political rights; but this fact should not blind our eyes to the real nature of the doctrines that they teach. When we remember that it is that church which specially claims that religious instruction is to be the only basis of public education, it behooves us to see what it is that they propose to teach to "children and young persons." This little book is a specimen. It professes to get authority from the Bible for its statements, and so may show our "liberal" Bible worshippers what lessons the teacher may draw from its pages.

The whole book is a picture, painted in the liveliest colors which exaggeration can use, of the horrors of hell. After saying that hell is in the middle of the earth, and describing how St. Gregory looked down the burning mountain of Stromboli and saw the Emperor Theodoric going into the fire, the writer computes the actual distance to hell as four thousand miles, and enjoins it as a duty to go down and look at it while yet alive, that we may escape it after death.

Now imagine the effect of this teaching upon the child! It is no shadowy realm, but an actual place measured by miles, which will become more real to his imagination than Paris or Rome. The fire, the darkness, the smoke, the noise, and the smell are there described with every accompaniment that can intensify their effect; and, to crown all, the devil is painted in minute detail, with every possible horror. It ends: "One of the saints who saw the devil said she would rather be burned for a thousand years than look at the devil for one moment."

Then the business of this devil consists in tempting souls, and there are enumerated as among the sins for which men will be condemned to this fearful torture: "Blaspheming, or impurity, or stealing, or drunkenness, or not hearing mass on Sundays, or not going to the sacraments," etc. "Now the devil opens his mouth. He gives out the tremendous sentence on the soul. All hear the sentence, and hell rings with shouts of spiteful joy and mockeries at the unfortunate soul." Again: "Little child, if you go to hell there will be a devil at your side to strike you. He will go on striking you every minute forever and ever, without ever stopping. The first stroke will make your body as bad as the body of Job, covered from head to foot with sores and ulcers. The second stroke will make your body twice as bad as the body of Job, etc. How then will your body be, when the devil has been striking it every moment for a hundred millions of years without stopping?" To this is added: "The mocking devil, a bed of fire, worms, fright, the pain of loss, the dungeons of hell, a dress of fire, the boiling kettle," etc., etc. We will not go through the whole sickening list. Then with the same coarse but impressive rhetoric the everlasting nature of the punishment is dwelt upon. "Think of a great solid iron ball, larger than the heavens and the earth. A bird comes once in a hundred millions of years and just touches the great iron ball with a feather of its wing. Think that you have to burn in a fire till the bird has worn the great iron ball away with its feather. Is this eternity? No! The only escape from these horrors is by calling upon Jesus and Mary to help keep you from temptation."

Texts of Scripture are quoted to justify each of these horrible statements.

Now this book is not a translation of an old Eastern saga, or an exhumed tradition of Moloch; it is printed in the year of our Lord eighteen hundred and seventy-one, by the authority of that portion of the Christian Church which still has the widest influence over the minds of the mass of the people, even in our own land. "Parents are strongly recommended to read these books to their children;" and they are specially divided into sections, one or two of which might be read aloud in Sunday-school each Sunday. What intelligent parent would suffer a child to be exposed to such influences as these, alike pernicious to physical health, intellectual growth, and happiness? And yet how many liberal people suffer their children to go to an Orthodox or Catholic school or Sunday-school, where they are liable to instruction such as this! Is it not as sacred a duty to use our talents, time, and influence to spread abroad more enlightened views of theology, as it is to study physiology and enforce the importance of sanitary conditions upon the community? E. D. C.

Communications.

"NATURAL MORALITY" AND SPIRITUALISM.

There is no idea which THE INDEX has labored harder to inculcate than the supremacy of "natural morality" over "Christian" or any other morality. When, therefore, an eminent scientist comes forward, and, ignoring the abuse which has attended many who have preceded him, bravely challenges the whole scientific world to examine an accumulation of evidence regarding phenomena which, if true, as he tells us, "constitute a great moral agency in harmony with the whole order of Nature," shall we not expect a kindly word from THE INDEX in his behalf? At least, this is what I thought, when I laid down Wallace's Defence of Modern Spiritualism.

But, so far, I have been somewhat disappointed; for THE INDEX has, as yet, had very little to say about it. Mr. Stevens, in his "Notes and Comments," thinks that Spiritualists may well congratulate themselves in gaining such a champion as Wallace; but the hosts of liberals which, THE INDEX claims, exist outside the ranks of Spiritualists receive no congratulation that an eminent scientist has given his valuable testimony in favor of a system of "natural morality," as against all "arbitrary systems set forth by dogmatic religions."

I was more disappointed, however, in the short review of "W.C.G.," in THE INDEX of July 16. "Does Wallace think the essential moral feature of this theory of a future life new, or peculiar to Spiritualism?" he asks. Supposing it is not new in theory, which we all know, it is the proof from the "scientific method" which now brings it specially to notice, and, new or old, the entire interest that attaches to Wallace's paper lies in those proofs; for every well-informed Spiritualist knows that nothing is there added to the claims made by them for years. It was the lack of these very proofs, or rather the failure to get them attested by the scientific world, which has made the work of THE INDEX (and all journals whose object has been the emancipation of the masses from bigotry and superstition) an up-hill work.

If, then, the testimony comes at last in a way especially adapted to arrest the attention of the thoughtless and indifferent, or even those "in bonds," shall we stop to question the name on the banners of its advocates, or banter with them about their tardy arrival? If they do but come to help us fight the common enemy that is enough.

I can well understand and appreciate "W. C. G.'s" hostility to any claim for a superior system based upon other than well attested facts, or to any claim for a supernatural or special revelation; but was the hint that Wallace was not strictly logical, and the implication that the argument was, "Behold how noble a doctrine: therefore it must be a divine revelation"—quite fair? Where has Wallace so much as hinted that the claims he makes rest upon anything higher than a rational conception, or a "natural selection" of "the fittest" in morals; that which seems most in harmony with Nature, and that which has universal corroborative testimony? There may be something divine in such a rational course as this. I am inclined to think there is, if the word divine is to be of any further use to this generation. I hope the expression "Nature's divine revelations" will never become unfashionable.

But note Wallace's express denial of the supernatural and miraculous. It is because he finds this "theory of a future state" so "in harmony with the whole order of Nature" that he regards it as reliable, aside from "the long series of demonstrative facts" which he has given. He says: "Contrast this system of natural and inevitable reward and retribution with the arbitrary system of rewards and punishments dependent on stated acts and beliefs only, as set forth in all dogmatic religions." Is it not the latter (the arbitrary and dogmatic), clashing against the beautiful order of Nature, which points to "delusion and imposture"? And does not the former, by its very harmony with so much of natural law as we know, offer an argument in its favor, even if it does not negative the objection?

Why, then, suggest the old idea of a revelation of divine authority, when it seems to be the object of Wallace to present the claims of a natural revelation, coming to us through the scientific method?

Of the demonstrative facts themselves he says: "When it is considered that the mediums of all grades, whether intelligent or ignorant, and having communications given through them in various direct and indirect ways, are absolutely in accord as to the main features of this theory, what becomes of the gross misstatement that nothing is given through mediums but what they know and believe themselves? The mediums have, almost all, been brought up in some of the usual Orthodox beliefs. How is it, then, that the usual Orthodox notions of heaven are never confirmed through them?" "In the scores of volumes and pamphlets of spiritual literature I have read, I have found no statement of a spirit describing 'winged angels,' or 'golden harps,' or the 'throne of God,' to which the humblest Orthodox Christian thinks he will be introduced if he goes to heaven at all. There is no more startling and radical opposition to be found between the most diverse religious creeds than that between the beliefs in which the majority of mediums have been brought up and the doctrines as to a future life that are delivered through them; there is nothing more marvellous in the history of the human mind than the fact that, whether in the backwoods of America or in the country towns of England, ignorant men and women, having almost all been brought up in the usual sectarian notions of heaven and hell, should, the moment they become seized by the strange power of mediumship, give forth teachings on this subject which are philosophical rather than religious, and which differ wholly from what had been so deeply ingrained into their minds."

If "unconscious cerebration" is compelled to father all this unsettling of religious beliefs, then has it indeed a fearful responsibility. Of what use is any conscious religious instruction if some "unconscious" action steps in to negative it all? However, the clergy, to save their pet idea of the devil, will never favor the idea of "unconscious cerebration." A very conscious devil will alone satisfy them, while science is hard at work solving the question, How much of this is the result of an intelligence other than our own?

A movement so universal as Spiritualism should, I sincerely believe, have larger notice in the columns of THE INDEX. It is not simply an "ism," or a religion, but a science. That portion of humanity emancipated by it, true to the instinct of "natural morality," feels a debt of gratitude, and cannot forget the friend who opened the prison doors and bade them go hence. Spiritualism represents to them certain claims and principles which they do not find inculcated with the same emphasis outside of their own organizations. Hence they make that which is a science a religion, and they will continue to do so until the truths of this science are absorbed by the old religious bodies.

The Free Religious movement I have looked upon as a basis broad enough for Spiritualists; and many Free Religionists, as well as some of the officers of that Association, are Spiritualists. Yet, until some larger recognition is made of the special claims of Spiritualists, they will, I believe, continue to organize outside the Free Religious movement. What are these special as well as general claims?

More than twenty years ago, Mr. A. E. Newton, of Boston, drew up a paper "defining modern Spiritualism, theoretically and practically."*

Two years ago, the Spiritualists of this city drew up a "Declaration of Principles" from this paper, with some slight alterations. I believe the readers of THE INDEX can get no better idea of the claims of Spiritualism than from this Declaration, and hence I offer it for publication. The main points in it are corroborated by Wallace in his summing up, under the head of "Moral Teachings," the language in some places being almost identical. This is a striking proof that the teachings of Spiritualism have not varied in twenty years. Time has simply brought it round to the arbitrament of science.

Then let the readers of THE INDEX decide whether Spiritualism is in harmony with "natural morality."

WM. F. PERKINS.

NEW ORLEANS, La., July 22, 1874.

DECLARATION OF PRINCIPLES.

I. THEORETICAL.

1. That man has a spiritual as well as a corporeal nature; in other words, that the real man is a spirit, which spirit has an organized form, composed of spiritual substance, with parts and organs corresponding to those of the corporeal body.

2. That man as a spirit is immortal. Being found to survive that change called physical death, it may be reasonably supposed that he will survive all future vicissitudes.

3. That there is a spirit world, or state, with its substantial realities, objective as well as subjective.

4. That the process of physical death in no way essentially transforms the mental constitution or the moral character of those who experience it.

5. That happiness or suffering in the spirit world, as in this, depends not on arbitrary decree or special provision, but on character, aspirations, and degree of harmonization, or of personal conformity to universal and divine law.

6. Hence that the experiences and attainments of the present life lay the foundation on which the next commences.

7. That since growth is the law of the human being in the present life, and since the process called death is in fact but a birth into another condition of life, retaining all the advantages gained in the experiences of this life, it may be inferred that growth, development, expansion, or progression is the endless destiny of the human spirit.

8. That the spirit world is in close proximity to us, and hence that we are constantly under the cognizance of spiritual beings.

9. That as individuals are passing from this to the spirit world in all stages of mental and moral growth, that world includes all grades of character, from the lowest to the highest.

10. That communications from the spirit world, whether by mental impression, inspiration, or any other mode of transmission, are not necessarily infallible truth; but, on the contrary, partake unavoidably of the imperfection of the minds from which they emanate and of the channels through which they come, and are, moreover, liable to misinterpretation by those to whom they are addressed.

11. That inspiration, or influx of ideas and promptings from the spirit realm, is not a miracle of a past age, but a perpetual fact—the ceaseless method of the divine economy for human elevation.

12. That the causes of all phenomena—the sources of all power, life, and intelligence—are to be sought for in the internal or spiritual realm, not in the external or material.

13. That the chain of causation leads inevitably to a Formative Spirit, and that man is in some sense the image or finite embodiment as well as the offspring of this Infinite Parent; and that, by virtue of this parentage, each human being is, or has in his inmost, a germ of divinity, an incorruptible offshoot of the Divine Essence, which is ever prompting to good and right, and which, in time, will free itself from all imperfections incident to a rudimental or earthly condition, and will finally triumph over evil.

14. That all evil is disharmony, greater or less, with this divine principle; and hence, whatever prompts and aids man to bring his external nature into subjection to and harmony with the divine in him, in whatever religious system or formula it may be embodied, is a "means of salvation" from evil.

II. PRACTICAL.

The hearty and intelligent conviction of these truths, with a realization of spirit communion, tends—

1. To enkindle lofty desires and spiritual aspirations. To deliver from painful fears of death, and dread of imaginary evils consequent thereupon, as well as to prevent inordinate sorrow and mourning for deceased friends.

2. To give a rational and inviting conception of the after-life to those who use the present worthily.

3. To stimulate to the highest and worthiest possible employment of the present life, in view of its momentous relations to the future.

4. To energize the soul in all that is good and elevating, and to restrain the passions from all that is evil and impure. This must result, according to the laws of moral influences, from a knowledge of the constant presence or cognizance of the loved and pure.

5. To prompt our earnest endeavors by purity of life, by unselfishness, and by loftiness of aspiration, to live constantly en rapport with the highest conditions of spirit life and thought.

6. To stimulate the mind to the largest investigation and the freest thought on all subjects, especially on the vital questions of truth and duty, that we may be qualified to judge for ourselves what is right and true.

7. To cultivate self-reliance and careful investigation by taking away the support of authorities and leaving each mind to exercise its own truth-determining powers.

8. To quicken all philanthropic impulses by emphasizing the truth of Universal Brotherhood, and the duty of living for the good of all, under the encouraging assurance that the redeemed and exalted spirits of our race, instead of retiring to idle away an eternity of inglorious ease, are encompassing us about as a great cloud of witnesses, inspiring us to the work, and aiding it forward to a certain and glorious issue.

—

[Mr. Perkins' articles are always welcome to the pages of THE INDEX, none the less so when he administers a kindly rebuke for its supposed shortcomings; and we know he will read our present remarks in the same friendly spirit with which they are written.

1. The very essence of "Natural Morality" is its absolute independence of all that relates to the past or to the future, since it results necessarily from the actually existing relations of the present. Given intelligent beings in a state of society, the laws of ethics are involved necessarily in the mere existence of their mutual moral relations. These laws are precisely the same in fact, whether understood or not—whether taught or mistaught—whether sanctioned by this system or that, or repudiated by all systems. Unless this is fully comprehended, there is no comprehension of Natural Morality; and it shows that Natural Morality has absolutely no connection whatever with Christianity, or Spiritualism, or any other system of belief. These systems may teach their own peculiar morality, which, however, is nothing but an imperfect reflection of natural ethical law, and must be measured by it at last. All that concerns the scientific moralist is to get at the real relations of human life and the real laws that govern them: it is his chief endeavor to disentangle these realities from all theories of past revelation or future modes of existence, and get rid of the confusing and darkening effects of all such theories, which, whether true or false, have nothing whatever to do with his science. We must frankly say that Mr. Wallace's chapter on the "Moral Teachings of Spiritualism," whether true or false, has as little to do with Natural Morality as it has with astronomy. It unfolds a metaphysical theory of human nature and destiny, and its supposed influence on human conduct; but it has nothing to say concerning the determination of rights and duties, in which all morality consists. His work is of value only as bearing on the truth or error of the

*Published by the American Liberal Tract Society. Tract 18.

Spiritualist hypothesis; it has no value as bearing on the science of Natural Morality, and indeed no connection with it.

2. As to the claims of Spiritualism to be a true philosophy and a demonstration of immortality, we have no motive for controverting them, but still less for urging them. Spiritualists are usually warm-hearted and liberal-minded people, and enter heartily into liberal movements; and we count many valued friends among them. Their belief is not bigoted, because not based on infallible authority; and so we have not the slightest wish to oppose it. But we do not share it, and recognize no obligation, after many very unrewarding attempts, to abandon positive duties in order to hunt up "convincing proofs." So far as Spiritualists sympathize with the effort to free the human mind from the bondage of dogma and church, they are our natural allies; but surely they themselves would little relish a disposition to conciliate them by feigning a belief we have not. Let us cheerfully differ, and work earnestly together for such ends as we have in common.

3. As to "some larger recognition of the special claims of Spiritualism" in THE INDEX, our files will show great multitudes of articles advocating them in these columns. We let Spiritualism urge its own claims for itself: what more can we do? We cannot urge them, surely, when we do not believe them. Our whole work is to hold up the universal claims of freedom, truth, justice, intelligence, virtue, brotherhood; we have nothing to do with any special claims whatever. If Mr. Perkins has the will to do so, he could doubtless write most excellent articles in promotion of his belief, which we should be very glad to print, if of reasonable length. We wish and mean to be fair to all phases of liberal thought; but this seems to be acccomplished by giving a fair and courteous hearing to each.—ED.]

"WHAT WAS AMERICAN SLAVERY?"

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

My last letter showed how and to what extent the Church and clergy were actually breeders, as well as owners and possessors, of slaves as church or parish property. I did not say—do not positively know—that such property was exempt from taxation as other church property; but I think there need be no doubt about it. Slavery was called the "Peculiar Institution."

It would take long to answer the question, What was slavery—that slavery upheld, defended, sanctified, and perpetuated by the Presbyterian, Baptist, Methodist, Episcopal, Congregational, and other Christian denominations, their ministers, deacons, church-members, women and men?

The eminent Dr. Priestley once wrote: "No people were ever yet found who were better than their laws, though many have been known to be worse." But are nations ever worse than their religion?

The language of the slave codes is as follows:—

South Carolina read: "Slaves shall be deemed, sold, taken, reputed, and adjudged in law to be chattels personal, in the hands of their owners and possessors, and their executors, administrators, and assigns, to all intents, constructions, and purposes whatsoever."

Louisiana declared: "A slave is one who is in the power of a master to whom he belongs. The master may sell him, dispose of his person, his industry, and his labor. He can do nothing, possess nothing, nor acquire anything but what must belong to his master."

Such was substantially the law in every slave State as to property, or ownership in slaves. Some readers of THE INDEX will readily recall the words of Henry Clay, once used on this subject in the Senate of the United States:—

"I know," he said, "there is a visionary dogma which holds that negro slaves cannot be the subject of property. I shall not dwell on the speculative abstraction. That is property which the law declares to be property. Two hundred years of legislation have sanctioned and sanctified negro slaves as property."

And, being property, the masters and claimants proceeded to treat them in all possible respects as such; as "goods and chattels." And legislation and religion shaped themselves accordingly.

Slaves must be kept in ignorance; and so laws were made punishing as a high crime teaching slaves to read, or even free colored people, in some States; or to sell or give to either class any book or tract—Bible or catechism not excepted. And when, in some instances, the Bible Society "resolved" to place a copy of the Scriptures in every family in a given county or State in a given time, not a slave family was ever included when the subsequent report boasted that the work was fully accomplished.

Of course, the marriage and family relation went down in the general maelstrom of sin and shame, cruelty and crime. In 1831, Mr. Gholson, in the Virginia Legislature, in a speech published in the Richmond Whig, replying to some antislavery arguments, said: "Why, I really have been under the impression that I owned my slaves. I lately purchased four women and ten children in whom I thought I obtained a great bargain; for I really supposed that they were my property, as were my brood mares."

By all the laws of all the slave States, District of Columbia included, marriage among slaves was just as nugatory, just as impossible, as among Mr. Gholson's "mares." And here again the Church sanctified what the State sanctioned and supported.

For instance: In 1835, some pious persons in the Georgia Baptist churches were exercised in mind about this wholesale havoc of the marriage institution, and brought the question before the Savannah River Baptist Association in this form:—

"Whether, in a case of involuntary separation, of such a character as to preclude all prospect of future intercourse, the parties ought to be allowed to marry again?"

Answer:—

"That such a separation, among persons situated as our slaves are, is civilly a separation by death, and they believe that, in the sight of God, it would be so viewed. To forbid second marriages in such cases would be to expose the parties, not only to stronger hardships, and strong temptation, but to church censure, for acting in obedience to their masters, who cannot be expected to acquiesce in a regulation at variance with justice to the slaves and to the spirit of that command which regulates marriage among Christians. The slaves are not free agents, and a dissolution by death is not more entirely without their consent, and beyond their control, than by such separation."

And what was true of the Baptist churches of Georgia was true of all the churches there; and what was true of Georgia was true of all the Southern States. And the churches and pulpits of the Northern States were participants and accomplices in whatever abomination was enacted, perpetrated, or sanctified at the South. They were of one Lord, one Faith, one Practice.

And this was and is Christianity; the religion we are combating with arguments! Let us not forget, at the same time, to tell the world what the Christian religion has done in our day, in our nation, and, from all that has yet appeared, would gladly do again.

PARKER PILLSBURY.

CONCORD, N. H., August, 1874.

"FREE LOVE OR ENFORCED LUST."

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

Free love may be defined as meaning the abolition of marriage, so far as any civil or religious ceremony is required by law or public opinion to sanction the union of two individuals of different sexes. The advocates of this theory, in order to make it effective, must first prove to the general satisfaction of society that marriage, as it exists among civilized nations at present, is more of an evil than a good to humanity. This proof, it is quite unnecessary to say, it is impossible for them to present.

Passing over the many millions of obscure but authentic instances of reasonable conjugal felicity among the lower or middle classes, the advocates of free love confine their attention, and exercise their imagination, almost exclusively upon the too frequent cases of marriages which occur among the upper or wealthier grades of society. From this inadequate, partial, and entirely unscientific and unphilosophical stand-point, a few sincere sentimentalists, and a much larger number of mercenary charlatans, or thoroughly vicious and depraved characters of both sexes, unite in an absurd assault of indecent invective against the experience of past ages, the lessons of history, the facts of physiology, the dictates of reason, the elements of human nature, and the wisdom of God.

The principle involved in this question is not merely "the right of a woman to self-ownership,"—that point is conceded by the most bigoted and old-fashioned believer in permanent, indissoluble, and monogamous marriage. The true theory of marriage necessitates the assumption that no woman ought to marry until she finds an unmarried man to whom she desires to give herself; and assumes likewise that such a man exists. Now (without reference to religious belief, or existing customs, habits, laws, or institutions) accepting only the greatest good of the greatest number of human beings, past, present, and to come, as the ultimate test by which marriage must stand or fall, what facts can be advanced to invalidate the assertion that more happiness than misery, more pleasure than pain, and thus more good than evil, result to society at large as the net aggregate of the institution of marriage? The only statistics of much account on this subject must be found either in the proportional number of divorces to marriages, or in the comparative amount of criminal cases of a certain class,—as adultery, cruelty, infanticide, abortion, murder, etc.,—which can be traced either directly or indirectly to the permanent and binding nature of the marriage contract, and would not probably have occurred if no obligation had existed for more than a transient union.

Selecting the Roman Catholics as one large class of our American communities among whom, divorce being almost impossible, marriage is most rigid in its bonds, we find the number of crimes mentioned above, and perpetrated as the result of matrimony, to be immensely less than among the Protestants, who have more frequent recourse to divorce. Not many Catholic wives and mothers can be justly charged with the crimes of infanticide or abortion, for instance. Crossing over to Europe, let us select the Jews of the various nations, and contrast them with the English Protestants in the same particulars, and again we find similar results. Wherever we examine the question narrowly, it will be found that, in proportion as the bonds of wedlock are relaxed, the sense of mutual dependence and consequent responsibility becomes weakened, and immorality increases. The remedy for the various vices and crimes which form the staple of the free lover's abuse of marriage would thus appear to be in making the escape from a marriage once duly solemnized so nearly impossible that few people would dare enter upon so grand an obligation, until well assured of their future peace and happiness. And indeed this is precisely what we might reasonably expect would be the case, when we consider the matter from a purely theoretical position. What more natural than that the very first misunderstanding or disagreement, the most trivial cause of dispute, might result in complete alienation between two persons who held themselves under no obligation to one another, except the selfish object of realizing more happiness from their union than they could obtain from another partnership? Those who have experienced how much more blessed it is to give than to receive can never be convinced that men and women would be happier and better, if they could be made less dependent upon each other for their happiness. Men are almost universally alike in certain characteristics. The poorest day-laborer as much as the proudest aristocrat, the ignorant African as well as the educated Anglo-Saxon, desire alike to perpetuate their name and personality by founding a family, which they can only do "in lawful wedlock" through the children born to them by a true wife. It is indeed difficult "to write with becoming patience" concerning a theory of existence which would leave out of sight all the romance and sentiment, the tender affection and beautiful sacrifices, belonging to a wedded life. There is no place for "love" in the free-lover's life. Between love and "free" love (so called) there is the same difference that exists between a man and a "dead" man! That "love" which can include the possibility of another love is a counterfeit which will not pass the most trivial examination. And herein consists the antidote to the bane proffered by Woodhull, Claflin & Co. So long as literature exists,—so long as Tennyson, Muloch, Trollope, Owen Meredith, George Eliot, and Victor Hugo are read by the rising generation, not to speak of Dickens, Thackeray, and Bulwer Lytton, or of the poets and essayists of earlier days,—so long as men admire Dante, Tasso, and Petrarch, and women sigh over Héloïse,—there is small danger of the taste for Dead Sea apples taking possession of the young men and maidens of the United States. For the essence of love is its desire to monopolize or engross its object. As well talk about free slaves as free loves or free lovers!

Mrs. Woodhull speaks and writes as though the youth of the country thought only of improving their species, and were versed in all the mysteries of stirpiculture; but by-and-by her words and writings will be as impotent as the Social Contract of Jean Jacques Rousseau, while "the old, old story" will be told in the future as it has been told in the past, and possible divorce will be as far from the thought of either youth or maiden as death itself.

Let us but attempt to picture to ourselves the position of a young girl, educated to believe that she has a perfect right to bestow herself without special form or ceremony, not only upon whatever single man she fancies, but, as soon as she meets other men more pleasing to her, to withdraw herself from the first favored individual, and mate, again and again, if she desires, with new favorites. Of course, an equal license cannot be refused to the men; and, since it will not be denied that such a wish must exist in the minds of some, to give birth to this monstrous doctrine now under consideration, it follows that we are justified in assuming that frequent separations would occur. Now, since the great majority of womankind are born to labor for a living, our average female must not be supposed to be wealthy; hence she would find it altogether impossible, without assistance, to support several children by different fathers. To obviate this difficulty, Mrs. Woodhull proposes that the care of the children should be devolved upon the State in such cases; the cost of the undertaking to be defrayed by general taxation of the community. But what about those natural maternal instincts which make many women more willing to bury their children than to yield them up to stranger-hands? Will Mrs. Woodhull please explain how she expects to eradicate that love of one's offspring which a woman feels in common with the birds of the air and the very beasts of the field?

ALBERT WARREN KELSEY.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., May 20, 1874.

MY FIRST VIEW OF A FARO BANK.—I was a pious youth in search of knowledge. Any bad places? Yes, there is a faro bank over there. I was educated to look upon a gambler as a thief, a blackleg, a pimp, an informer. How little my grandmother knew what was respectable and what was not. Noble old lady! She was as innocent of crime as a babe; she did not know that the first people of the land kept their mistresses better dressed than their wives, and gambled till late in the morning. I expected to find a rat-hole of low persons. Imagine how wide I opened my eyes to see the élite round that brilliantly lighted den. There was a young man who that night lost $60,000. I looked on and wondered. I only get $56 a year as a grocer's boy. My grandmother said it was wrong for me to play fox and geese with Frank Kittredge, and here were the chiefs of finance, politics, and fashion gambling all night long. Gambling is respectable now. The man who gets drunk, and swears the hardest, and runs away with another man's wife, and can play well at faro, will grow up as a proud example to the young men, a good Christian and reformer, and a hundred carriages will follow him to the grave, for he is a prince in trade, and gave to charities.—Exchange.

THE PENAL LAWS are sadly deficient if they provide no remedy for an eating-house keeper against the fiend in human form who evinces his enmity to his kind by scraping the label off a tomato catsup bottle, leaving it to read, in its mutilated form, thus: "Tom Cats."—Independent.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12	Insertions,	10c	per	line.
" 13 " 25	"	8	"	"
" 26 " 51	"	6	"	"
" 52	"	5	"	"

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

CIRCULATE! Circulate!! Circulate THOSE PETITIONS. Don't feel satisfied when your petition is a yard long, unless you have asked every one to sign it. Get good, influential names.

GET EVERYBODY.

Don't neglect to show the petition to any one, because he is a stockholder in some church, or other exempted property, as many such persons admit the justice of the demand; and those who will not should be made to take the responsibility of refusing to sign it.

Don't delay! We want the petitions returned early.

Per order of EXEC. COMM. of the BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,

has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, assisted by ABRAM W. STEVENS, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
THOMAS W. HIGGINSON, Newport, R.I.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 4.

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

ASSOCIATE EDITOR:

ABRAM WALTER STEVENS.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
T. W. HIGGINSON, Newport, R.I.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
F. W. NEWMAN, England.
CHARLES VOYSEY, England.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS,

OF THE

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott! Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. Abbot, D. A. Wasson, T. W. Higginson, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. Wasson on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. Abbot, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. Wasson on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. Abbot on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age;" an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. Higginson on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potier on "Religion Old and New in India;" also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Sympathy of Religions, by T. W. Higginson. 25 cents.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 10 cents, singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

Price.

ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets 1.50
Concord Days 1.50
Records of a School. A new edition 1.50

ALCOTT (LOUISA M). Little Women. Two vols 3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories 1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl 1.50
Little Men 1.50
My Boys, &c 1.00
Shawl-Straps 1.00
Work; A Story of Experience 1.75

ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS. 1.50

ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism 2.00
New Poems 2.00
Literature and Dogma 1.50

AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. 1.50
Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine 2.00
Edelweiss 1.00
German Tales 1.00

BACON'S Essays 1.00

BAGEHOT on the English Constitution 2.25
Physics and Politics 1.50

BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy 1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol 1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol 5.00

BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms. 2.50

BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations 3.00

BARTOL (REV. C. A). Radical Problems ... 2.00
The Rising Faith 2.00

BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols 5.00

BIBLE in the Public Schools.
Records, Arguments, and Decision in the case of John D. Minor et al. vs. the Board of Education of the city of Cincinnati: et al. in the Supreme Court of the City of Cincinnati 2.00
Arguments of Ramsey, Sage and King in favor of the use of the Bible ..... .50
Arguments of Stallo, Hoadley and Mathews against the use of the Bible ..... .50
The Opinion and Decision of the Supreme Court of Ohio in the above case ..... .25

BRACKETT (ANNA C.) The Education of American Girls .....

BROOKS' (CHARLES T.) Translations. The Layman's Breviary 2.25
The World-Priest 2.25
The Tall Student ..... .75

BUECHNER'S Force and Matter 3.25

BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols 6.00

CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol ..... .80

CARPENTER (DR. W. B.) The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions 3.00

CERVANTES' Don Quixote 1.50

CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing 1.50

CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet Naturalist. With Memorial Verse. 2.00

CHENEY (MRS. E. D). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside 1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience 1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated 1.50

CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions 3.00
Common-Sense in Religion 2.00

CLARKE (Dr. E. H.) Sex in Education 1.25

CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World ..... .75

COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. 3.00
Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays 5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age ..... .20

CONWAY (MONCURE D.) The Earthward Pilgrimage 1.75

CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol 2.00

CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE; Its True Aims and Requirements A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans 2.00

DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship 2.50

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies" 1.50
The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor" 1.00

DARWIN'S Origin of Species 2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols 4.00
Journal of Researches 2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals 3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated 6.00

DESCARTES (RENE.) Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences 2.25

DICKENS' Child's History of England 1.50

DUHRING (JULIA.) Philosophers and Fools. A Study 2.00

ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each 1.00
Comprising—
Adam Bede.
Romola.
The Mill on the Floss.
Felix Holt.
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life.
The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols 3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols 3.50
Wit and Wisdom of 1.25
The Spanish Gypsy 1.50
How Lisa Loved the King ..... .50

EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.. 2.00
Essays. Second Series 2.00
Miscellanies 2.00
Representative Men 2.00
English Traits 2.00
Conduct of Life 2.00
Poems. With Portrait 2.00
May-day and Other Pieces 2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold 1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold 1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols 5.00
Society and Solitude 2.00

EVANS (E. P., Ph. D). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanase Coquerel the Younger 1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols 5.00

FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion 2.00

FEUERBACH (LUDWIG.) The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation. 3.00

FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.. 2.00

FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity 1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers ..... .20
Child's Book of Religion 1.00
Life of Theodore Parker 3.00

FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols 9.00

GALTON (FRANCIS.) Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences 2.00

GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol 5.00
Elective Affinities 1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols 3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham 1.00

GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life 2.00
Literary and Social Judgments 2.00
Creed of Christendom 3.25

GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait 5.00

HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France 1.50
Thoughts about Art 2.00
The Unknown River 6.00
The Intellectual Life 2.00
Chapters on Animals 4.00

HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second 1.00
Child World. Part First 1.50

HAMILTON'S Lectures.
1. Metaphysical Lectures 3.50
2. Logical Lectures 3.50

HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol 2.00
Twice-Told Tales.
Mosses from an Old Manse.
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.
The Marble Faun.
The English Note-Books.
The American Note-Books.
The French and Italian Note-Books.
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.

HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers ... 1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance 1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment 1.50
Atlantic Essays 2.00
Oldport Days 2.50

HOWELLS'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey 2.00
Suburban Sketches 2.00
Venetian Life 2.00
Italian Journeys 2.00
A Chance Acquaintance 1.50

HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "'Ninety-Three".. 1.75

HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits 10.50

HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life 1.75

HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses 1.25
Bits of Travel 1.50

HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature 1.25
On the Origin of Species 1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism ..... .50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals 2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews 1.75

INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems 2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen 1.50
Songs of Seven 2.50

INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skelligs 1.75
Studies for Stories 1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series 1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours 1.25
Mopsa the Fairy: A Story 1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect ..... .60

INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures 2.00

INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES.
No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall 1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot. 1.50
III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith 1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain 1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq 1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr 2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine 1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew. 1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D 1.50

JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers. 1.50

JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India 5.00

JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian 2.50

JOWETT. The Dialognes of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols 12.00

KERR (ORPHEUS C). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous 2.00

LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols 4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols 6.00

LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings 4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics 2.00

LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham 1.50

LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. 3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols 4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed 3.00

LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life. 1.50

LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D'C). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews 1.00

LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols 4.00
Prose Works. Portrait 4.00

LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols 4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series 1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series 1.50
Among my Books 2.00
My Study Windows 2.00

LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Posies for Children. .75

LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man.. 2.00
Pre-historic Times 5.00

LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols 8.00
Elements of Geology 3.50

MACDONALD (GEORGE.) The Vicar's Daughter 1.50

MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife 3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. 3.00
Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848 ..... 3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann 1.25

MARTINEAU (JAMES.) Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol 2.50
The New Affinities of Faith ..... .25

MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind ..... .75

MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire 1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations 1.50

MILL (JOHN STUART.) Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each 2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each 2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. 1.50
Political Economy. New and revised edition 2.50
The Subjection of Women 1.25
Essay on Liberty 1.25
Representative Government 1.50
Autobiography 2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works ... 1.0

MILLER (JOAQUIN.) Songs of the Sierras. 1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands 1.50

MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species 1.75

MORLEY (PROF. JOHN.) Voltaire 2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols 5.00

MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-Time Stories 1.50

MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series 2.50
The Same. Second Series 3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume 2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion 2.00

NASBY (PETROLEUM V). Swingin' Round the Cirkle 1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky 1.50

NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy 4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed 2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations. 2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy 1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical 4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism. .25
Against Hero-Making in Religion ..... .25

PARKER (THEODORE.) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion 1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols 4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols 3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings 1.50
Historic Americans.—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.. 1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence... 1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations.—A.D. I. and MDCCCLV. A Christmas Story ..... .60

PARSONS (THEOPHILUS.) The Infinite and the Finite 1.00

PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar 1.50
The Trotty Book 1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts 1.50
Hedged In 1.50
The Silent Partner 1.50
What to Wear? 1.00

PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition 2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates 2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena 1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts 4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc 5.00
The Expanse of Heaven 2.00

ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante 2.50

SCHELLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies 6.00

SCIENCE PRIMERS:
1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S... .50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe ..... .50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With illustrations ..... .50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth ..... .50

SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols 31.25

SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition 2.00

SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help 1.50

SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical 1.25
First Principles 2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Æsthetic 2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers 2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed 2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols 5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols 5.00
Philosophy of Style ..... .50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.. 2.00
Sociology 2.00

SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus ..... .25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics 9.00

STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny 1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin ..... .00

STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New 2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols 12.00

TAINE'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols 7.50
The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske 2.50

TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems 1.75

THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.. 1.25
Vanity Fair.
The Newcomes.
Adventures of Philip.
Pendennis.
The Virginians.
Esmond, and Lovel the Widower.
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol. 1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.
1. Barry Lyndon, Hoggarty Diamond, &c.
2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.
3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c.
4. Four Georges, Humorists, &c.
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unreprinted Pieces.

THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals 1.50

THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods 2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.. 2.00
The Maine Woods 2.00
Cape Cod 2.0
Letters 2.00
A Yankee in Canada 2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimac Rivers 2.00

TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind 2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols 5.00

TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer 1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People 2.00
Light and Electricity 1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps 2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion 2.00
On Sound 2.00
Radiant Heat 5.00
Forms of Water 1.50
Lectures on Light 1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall ..... .50

TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures 1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings 1.50

VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each 3.00
Vols III. IV. and VI., each 3.75
The Voysey Appeal ..... .50
Voysey's Defence at York ..... .50

WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden 1.00
Saunterings 1.50
Back-Log Studies 2.00

WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion 1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols 6.00

WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life 1.50
Essays and Reviews 3.00
Character and Characteristic Men 1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.... 1.50
Success and its Conditions 1.50
Washington and the Revolution ..... .30

WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life 1.50
We Girls: A Home Story 1.50
Real Folks 1.50
The Other Girls 2.00
Pansies. A volume of Poems 1.50

WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols 4.00
Child Life 3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A FEW COPIES ONLY

Of an excellent Photograph (Cabinet Size) of Rev. MONCURE D. CONWAY, of London, can be had at the office of THE INDEX. Price 50 cents.

CHARLES SUMNER.

A fine likeness of Massachusetts' great Senator, the copy of a recent Photograph by Black, is for sale at THE INDEX office, and will be sent by mail to any address on receipt of the price—fifty cents.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE BOUND INDEX FOR 1873.

The bound volume of THE INDEX for 1873 (Volume 4) will be promptly forwarded to any address on receipt of $3, by express, at the purchaser's expense. A complete file for the year can be furnished in no other form.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A CHEAP OFFER!

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 14 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 75 CENTS.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.

To THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston.

CHARLES SUMNER'S GREAT WORK.

PROPHETIC VOICES

CONCERNING AMERICA.

By CHARLES SUMNER.

Fine Edition, Tinted Paper, with Steel Portrait, Crown 8vo., Cloth extra, $2.

Aside from its literary and historical merits, this volume has a special interest, from the fact that it was the last work on which r. Sumner was engaged before his death.

"PROPHETIC VOICES" will be found of great value to all who take an interest in the history of our country, so full is it of passages in which the unexampled prosperity of our land has been foretold by philosophers, poets, statesmen, and orators, of whom the lamented author has also given interesting sketches.

Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

BUST OF THEODORE PARKER,

BY

SIDNEY H. MORSE.

Dignity, reverence, sweetness, vigor, equipoise, breathe through the clay; the artist has so filled his own heart with appreciation of that noble life that he has been able cunningly to mould it into those delicate lines which the character had wrought on the living fibre. We are tempted to exclaim, as we stand beside it, as the old artist did to his perfected work, "Speak then!"—Hannah E. Stevenson.

All the characteristics of my husband are in the bust,—his greatness, his goodness, his tenderness, his love. You cannot give life to clay or marble; but you can represent it, and this Mr. Morse has done.—Lydia D. Parker to Hannah E. Stevenson.

The eyes, though but of clay, are gleaming with possible indignation, with possible tears; the lips are set firm with the resolution of him who, like Paul, could "fight a good fight" as well as "give a reason."—Samuel Longfellow.

The first time I have seen Theodore Parker since he died.—Wm. Sparrell.

The best representation of Mr. Parker ever executed in clay.—Boston Daily Globe.

The face is strong and noble as it should be. The likeness is good.—Boston Daily Advertiser.

Nothing appears for beauty alone, or finish, or to show the vanity of the artist. All is forgotten in the man—the true, real, Yankee man, Theodore Parker.—L. S. H. in the Golden Age.

Copies of this Bust, finely finished n plaster, $10 each. Boxing for transportation, $1 extra. Freight or expressage paid by party sending order. Weight of box about fifty pounds. Orders may be sent to

S. H. MORSE,
Room 13, 25 Bromfield St., Boston, Mass.

STUDENTS FITTED for any College.

Please address
EMILY J. LEONARD,
Meriden, Conn.

CONSTANT EMPLOYMENT.—

At home, male or female, $30 a week warranted. No capital required. Particulars and valuable sample sent free. Address, with six-cent return stamp. C. ROSS,
Williamsburg, N. Y.

FREE DISCUSSION

is held at HOSPITALLER HALL, 593 Washington Street, Boston, every Sunday, at 10½ A.M., 2½ and 7½ P.M. All that relates to the Religious, Political, and Social interests of mankind constitute the subjects for discussion. THE INDEX and Index Tracts are for sale every Sunday at Hospitaller Hall.

WEST NEWTON ENGLISH AND CLASSICAL SCHOOL.—

The twenty-first school year of this Family and Day School, FOR BOTH SEXES, will begin Wednesday, September 16, 1874.

For particulars address
NATH'L T. ALLEN, Principal,
West Newton, Mass.

At home Saturdays.

TO NEWSPAPER PUBLISHERS.

Having conveniences for doing the best of newspaper printing at reasonable prices, I should like to contract for composition alone, or for composition, press-work, and mailing, for one or more weekly papers.

Best of references given, and satisfactory work guaranteed. GEO. H. ELLIS,
7 Tremont Place, Boston.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c., of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing

THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX.

Bound volumes of THE INDEX for 1871, 1872, and 1873, will be sent by express (at the purchaser's expense) on receipt of $2.50, $2.50, and $3.00 respectively. These volumes are exceedingly valuable singly, irrespective of each other; for the important essays and other articles they contain are of permanent interest, and will furnish as instructive reading twenty years hence as to-day. No more valuable present could be made to a friend struggling out of Orthodoxy than one of these volumes.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

WARREN'S TRUE CIVILIZATION.

Price 50 cents.

PRACTICAL DETAILS,

showing the workings of the

COST PRINCIPLE.

Price 25 cents.

For sale by

S. H. MORSE,
25 Bromfield St., Boston.

FOR SINGING CLASSES!

THE

SONG MONARCH!!

By H. R. PALMER, assisted by L. O. EMERSON.

A book admirably fitted for the use of Singing School Teachers, having, in addition to a compact theoretical course, more than 180 pages filled with Glees, Quartettes, Airs, Tunes, &c., &c., pleasant to sing anywhere, and constituting a most agreeable course of study. A good book also for College Choirs, for Seminaries, and Social Sings.

Price 75 cts., or $7.50 per dozen.

FOR CHOIRS AND CONVENTIONS.

THE LEADER!!

is the Leader of all Church Music Books for 1874 and 1875, being the first in the field, and of a character that cannot be excelled.

By H. R. PALMER, of Chicago, assisted by L. O. EMERSON, of Boston, containing also compositions from the hands of large numbers of American Music writers.

For CONVENTIONS, CHOIRS and SINGING CLASSES.

The LEADER has 86 pages of Singing School Music, the same as that in the Song Monarch, and large numbers of new Tunes and Anthems, all by the best composers.

Price $1.38, or $12.00 per dozen.

Specimen copies of the above book mailed, post-paid, for retail price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO.,

BOSTON.

CHAS. H. DITSON & CO.,
711 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE.

Our organization some time since decided to direct its efforts for the present towards securing the

Repeal of the Laws

whereby church and other corporate property is unjustly exempted from its share of the burden of taxation.

As a means to this end, we have published for general circulation several thousand copies of a

TRACT

on Church Exemption, being the article by Mr. Abbot which appeared in THE INDEX of Nov. 27.

We have already issued three editions, the last of which is nearly exhausted.

We desire soon to issue

Another Large Edition

of this and other tracts on the subject, so that we can place a copy in the hands of

EVERY VOTER IN THE STATE,

and generously to supply the calls for them in other States.

To do this, we need funds; for, although we have made arrangements for printing the Tract at very low cost, it is impossible for the Boston League, with its various other expenses, to bear the entire expense alone.

Will not, then,

All Friends of the Movement

come forward and help us with liberal donations?

We frequently receive communications from parties wishing tracts to distribute, asking how much they shall pay. To such we reply that the cost to us is about $2.50 per thousand, and we shall be pleased to furnish them at this price per thousand, or 30 cents per hundred, to all who will circulate them. But all additional donations will be gratefully received for the purpose of circulating them gratuitously throughout the country.

Last winter this subject was brought before the Legislature of the State, and many petitions were presented asking a repeal of these unjust laws.

The matter is still in their hands, and at the next session will undoubtedly be acted upon. Meanwhile the

Voice of the People,

favoring justice and equity, should be distinctly heard.

We shall soon be ready to send out

BLANK PETITIONS AGAIN,

thus giving an opportunity to those who have not already done so, to protest against this continued wrong.

Let us make it

THE LARGEST PETITION

ever presented to our legislative body.

Will those willing to assist in circulating these petitions please

SEND IN THEIR NAMES?

We would say, also that we feel deeply the need of

Other Organizations

in this State, to coöperate with us in securing equality and justice, by pressing the "Demands of Liberalism." If, in any locality, there are those who are inclined to

Form a Liberal League,

we are ready to render such assistance as lies in our power.

LIBERALS!

If all will unite and work, the results sought can be accomplished

Address

BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE,

NO. 1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

Per order of the
EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

NONPAREIL Farm Feed, Bone,

Drug, and Hand-grinding MILLS. Ten Sizes. Also Cotton-Seed Hullers. Illustrated pamphlets free. Address

SEDGEBEER, SHEPARD & MILLER,
181 East Front Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

THE AMERICAN EDITION

OF

MONCURE D. CONWAY'S

SACRED ANTHOLOGY,

A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES,

has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.

Address THE INDEX,
1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,

BANKERS,

LEROY, MINN.

Money invested on short time, or for a term of years, on unincumbered improved farms, at 12 per cent. interest per annum, payable semi-annually. Perfect title and ample security guaranteed. All expenses for abstract of title and recording mortgage paid by borrower. We collect and remit to any part of the United States free of charge.

REFERENCES.—First National Bank, McGregor, Iowa; First National Bank, Austin Minn.; Milwaukee National Bank, Milwaukee, Wis.; City National Bank, Chicago, Ill.; Allen, Stevens & Co., Bankers, New York City; Morris Altman.

REAL ESTATE SECURITIES, paying 8 to 10 per cent. interest, or

Investments in Real Estate in Chicago and vicinity,

if judiciously made, are the best and safest modes of employing capital. The old

Real Estate and Loan Agency

OF

ERNST PRUSSING, 143 RANDOLPH STREET,
Chicago (Established 1853),

Guarantees perfect title and ample security in all its Real Estate Loans.

Firstclass securities always on hand. Interest and principal collected without charge. Real Estate Investments made on commission or on shares; taxes paid, &c.

Orders of capitalists and real estate owners respectfully solicited.

REASONS FOR USING THE

EUREKA SPOOL SILK.

It is full length. It is full size. It is smooth and elastic, and is equally adapted to hand or machine use.

Many kinds of spool silk are a perfect fraud, being not only shorter in length, but a much finer size than they are represented to be, and of so poor a quality as to be unfit for use. The ladies will always find the Eureka Silk exactly as represented. Every spool is warranted, and the manufacturer's name indelibly branded on every spool. Call for it.

RADICAL AND LITERARY LECTURES

BY

JOHN WEISS,

RADICAL LECTURES.

The Idea of Hereafter.
An Act of Faith.
Intelligence in Religion.
Religion and Science.
Heart in Religion.

SHAKSPEARIAN LECTURES.

FIRST SERIES.

1. Cause of Laughter.
2. Irony and Humor.
3. Dogberry, Malvolio, Bottom, Touchstone.
4. Ajax in Troilus and Cressida: The Porter in Macbeth: The Fool in Lear.
5. Falstaff.
6. Hamlet.

SECOND SERIES.

1. The Women of Shakspeare.
2. Portia.
3. Ophelia.
4. Macbeth and Lady Macbeth.
5. " " " "
6. Contrast in Shakspeare's Characters.

Address JOHN WEISS,
32 E. Brookline St., Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year. LIBERTY AND LIGHT. Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 5. BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, AUGUST 27, 1874. WHOLE NO. 244.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF ——.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in ——:

Also, as soon as five hundred such Liberal Leagues shall have been formed in different places, to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be hereafter called, in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the needed reforms.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the National Convention of Liberal Leagues when called together.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

So far as I am concerned, the above is the platform of THE INDEX. I believe in it without reserve; I believe that it will yet be accepted universally by the American people, as the only platform consistent with religious liberty. A Liberal League ought to be formed to carry out its principles wherever half a dozen earnest and resolute Liberals can be got together. Being convinced that the movement to secure compliance with these just "Demands" must surely, even if slowly, spread, I hope to make THE INDEX a means of furthering it; and I ask the assistance and active co-operation of every man and every woman who believes in it. Multiply Liberal Leagues everywhere, and report promptly the names of their Presidents and Secretaries. Intolerance and bigotry will tremble in proportion as that list grows. If freedom, justice, and reason are right, let their organized voice be heard like the sound of many waters.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

BOSTON, Sept. 1, 1873.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State; and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation.

GLIMPSES.

BY F. E. A.

THE GOVERNOR of South Carolina has won fame as "the robber Moses" and "the great South Carolina thief." Can human ambition soar higher than that?

THE NEW YORK Independent recently styled you the "unlettered sceptics of the West;" while the Brooklyn Catholic Review compliments you as the "Sacred Congregation of The Index." Brooklyn is at least three lengths ahead.

AN ANONYMOUS correspondent of the Golden Age says that "patient study and thought" are "precisely what the Free Religionists lack." The inference we draw from this dictum is that we are not a "Free Religionist." The results of our "study and thought" may not be valuable, but their patience we would modestly testify to.

HON. H. C. ROBINSON said at Hartford, in his welcoming address to the American Association for the Advancement of Science: "We would not underrate metaphysical studies; but it requires no deep insight to see that speculative philosophy has been forced to step down from her throne and yield to science." This merely means that philosophy must be reformed by the scientific method.

IT IS ASSERTED by the Cleveland Herald that "there is no doubt the Roman Catholic manifesto of last Sunday defeated the new constitution" of Ohio. It says: "The priests told their followers to vote against the constitution. The Roman Catholics could do that, and still vote for license. They unquestionably, if not forbidden by their priests, would have voted for the new constitution." Such statements as these may well awaken uneasiness in all who love free institutions.

THE SONNEBERG LUTHER FESTIVAL must have been a quaint occasion. Tetzel and his Dominicans selling indulgences, Luther and his comrades driving them off and capturing their money-chest, and monks, reformers, peasants, and soldiers all reproduced in the style of three and a half centuries ago,—it was a curious revival of the old struggle on the old spot. Meanwhile the same contest goes on the world over, and will see no end till Christianity has faded away to make room for the religion of humanity.

A LAWYER in Keokuk, Iowa, writes: "Unitarianism is in a flourishing condition here, the society having just completed a fine church edifice; but there are hundreds of other liberals who have what may be called private liberal views—who live within themselves for fear of public opinion, and who for reasons of business policy hide their light under a bushel." Private liberal views! Commend us to the men who have red blood in their arteries, and refuse to be blackmailed into support of the church, even by silence. Truth, once known, conscripts every gallant spirit into her service. Noblesse oblige!

PROFESSOR HUXLEY'S address at the unveiling of the Priestley statue at Birmingham was a fine production. All true reformers must applaud the sentiments he expressed, when he said that he "could entirely sympathize with him [Priestley], if he held the duties of his manhood and of his citizenship to be vastly superior to his philosophership, and if he thought that the securing of that freedom which is the essential condition of the progress of science and the progress of the human race was a vastly more important matter than advancing knowledge in this direction or that direction—vast as was the importance of that progress itself."

A CORRESPONDENT of the London Daily News tells a story of petty bigotry which it would be pleasant to disbelieve. Some years ago John Stuart Mill ascended the Ventoux, a mountain in the Vaudois country. In descending he was caught in a violent storm, and applied for shelter to the curé of Brantes, a village on the northern slope of the mountain. "Who's there?" called the master of the house. "An excursionist seeking shelter," said Mr. Mill in good French, but with an English accent. "Oh," responded the curé, "you're an Englishman, and therefore a Protestant. Get along with you, for I'm not going to let you in." This story is told by the curé's successor.

THE Golden Age, referring to a supposed desire on the part of some to repeal certain phrases in the Preamble of the constitution of the Unitarian Conference, to be held in Saratoga on September 15, says: "Mr. Abbot and his anti-Christian sympathizers, if we rightly understand them, do not so much object to the Christian name as to the Christian thing the name stands for and represents." True! And we are glad that at last somebody has found this out. We object above all things to rallying about a person instead of a principle, a man instead of an idea. The Christian name means always and everywhere this Christian thing; and we disown the name simply because it means the thing.

THE CHICAGO Interior is commended by the Christian Statesman, because on the question of the salvation of moral heathens it "declined discussion on the abstract question, and challenged debate on the facts." When Socrates and Seneca were instanced, it fell upon these poor pagans tooth and nail, until (in the language of the vigorously-minded) neither "hide nor hair" could be found of either. And this Jesuitism is held up as deserving the "thanks of all believers in the Christian religion"! We respectfully submit that the whole question is an "abstract" one, and can be put into a nutshell thus: Is faith in Christ as the Savior necessary to salvation? Will the Statesman venture to say that this question cannot be answered yes or no? And will it refuse to give an honest yes or no answer to it? We "pause for a reply."

IT IS anxiously to be hoped that the white people of the South, in their efforts to secure "honest government," will accept more sincerely than hitherto the principle of equal human rights before the law, and give convincing proof of this by treating all well-behaved negroes as fellow-citizens on equal terms. Honest administration is vitally important; but honest political principles are even more so. Stealing money is bad enough; but stealing rights is worse. In vain will the whites of the South look to the North for sympathy, until they drop the infernal cry of a "white man's government," and stop the present alarming efforts to array the races against each other. All talk of "reconciliation" and "clasping hands" is sheerest buncombe, until this stern lesson of the war is learned by heart; and the sooner it is learned, the sooner will true reconciliation be effected. Justice first, and sentiment afterwards.

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walters; Secretary, E. M. Bridgman.
WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—President, J. B. Bassett; Secretary, Anton Grethen.
NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
BALBEC, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
SAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

Society a Factor in the Development of Man.

A DISCOURSE PREACHED IN CHARLESTON, SOUTH CAROLINA, JANUARY 19, 1873.

BY JAMES BOYD.

"And the Lord God said, It is not good that the man should be alone."—GEN. ii., 18.

Where, when, and how God first fashioned the human form are questions which science is now engaged in the endeavor to solve, and on which, until she definitely pronounce a verdict, it would be improper to dogmatize. The outcry which, in the name of religion, was raised against her first attempts to move in this direction is now rapidly dying away, and will soon be altogether one of the voices of the past; while religious faith, which no doubt received a shock from the unsettlement of preconceived opinions, is already assimilating, and constructing out of the new truths presented to her, a more glorious and more enduring body of intellectual convictions respecting the Divinity and his manifestation in his works. And in truth is it not a lurking, latent scepticism in regard to the truth of his own teaching, when he tells his child that God made him, which leads the parent to turn round with such an indignant denial of the (shall we say) suspicion of science that it was in an exactly similar way—that is, through the instrumentality of means—that God first introduced man into the world? On a point that is still under investigation, it is permitted, if not required, to reserve the expression of opinions which are necessarily based on uncertain and insufficient data, while we discharge in full the claims which these inquiries have upon us when we keep our minds free from prejudice, and open to receive whatever conclusion shall hereafter be established as indisputable truth.

But, however his introduction upon this scene may have been accomplished, all research tends to show that man's primal condition was of the rudest kind imaginable. I know of no reason for assuming that since his first appearance man has acquired any new faculties either of body or mind, although we see him every day discovering new uses for the application of what faculties he has; but this very observation suggests that, if we go far enough back on the line, we shall reach a time when he had not yet discovered any use, at least beyond the animal one of self-preservation, to which he might apply the powers of which he was possessed. And as there is only one way in which a capability can either be in the first instance evoked, or afterwards developed, or, when it is developed, kept up to the mark which it has attained, namely, by constant and unremitting use, and just as by disuse we have lost many of the bodily capabilities of the savage, so, prior to all use, the intellectual and moral faculties of the aborigines of the race can have existed only in germ, and must have been to all intents and purposes as though they were not. So that, whether it be a mistake or not to suppose that God turned out the human form, so to speak, ready made, it is assuredly a mistake to say that in that act he had finished the creation of man. God is creating the man in each one of us NOW—from day to day and from hour to hour. We may not feel it, nor be able to see it, nor find it easy to believe it; consciously or unconsciously, we may be helping on the work by our coöperation, or retarding it by our opposition, in which case we are only heating sevenfold the furnace of purification through which we must all pass; but indisputably, spite of our ignorance, or indifference, or infidelity, he who worketh in secret is shaping through various means and instrumentalities, silently but unceasingly, in each of us the man that we shall be, the "Christ in us, the hope of glory."

Last Sunday I attempted to show how the system of outward Nature conduces to the education of man; to-day I wish to suggest to you, by a few hints thrown out in that direction, THE EDUCATING INFLUENCES OF SOCIETY UPON THE INDIVIDUAL.

And, to begin at the lowest point, we may observe that, except in and by means of society, civilization would have been impossible: alone, man would have remained a savage forever. It will help us to some conception of this truth if we consider for a moment, in regard to the mechanical appliances or artificial products which on all sides around us minister to our wants or comforts, the protracted and complicated development through which they have passed before they could assume their present shape—the thousand additions of here a little and there a little, from this inventor or that improver, by which the familiar things, which familiarity leads us to value too lightly, have grown into being and been adapted to use. Take a well-appointed modern dwelling-house, and trace back the many thoughts of many minds which have gone towards elaborating such a product to replace the caves of the earth, which even now afford their only shelter to some of the low races of mankind. Think of the widely separated countries whence have been derived the materials of which it is composed—the wood, the iron, the stone, the glass; think of the labor, the skill, the tools and engines by which these are procured and prepared; think of all that preceded the possibility of the introduction of the water, the gas, the heated air with which every room is supplied; of all the ingenuity that has been expended upon the manufacture of the carpets which we spread beneath our feet, of the elegance of design which renders the necessary articles of furniture objects not merely of use but of ornament, of the intensity and severity of brainwork which has been put into the masterpieces of coloring that adorn our walls, or the books that line our shelves; think even of the innumerable inventions, and discoveries, and processes of manufacture, apart from the author's labor, which are involved in the production of every single volume, and then say when would a solitary savage have risen even to the conception of such a world as we each of us possess within the four walls of our homes?

And we do not need to draw on our imagination for an answer. We have only to look at those tribes which have been deprived of, or which disdain, intercourse with others, to see what stagnation of progress and of ideas soiitude produces. We have in many parts of the globe nations which for centuries, probably millenniums, have scarcely advanced a single step beyond the brute. Naked, dwelling in holes of the earth, subsisting on the roots and fruits which Nature spontaneously yields, idling through the days of peace and plenty, and dying, like beasts, by hundreds in times of famine,—such are thousands of our fellow-men, such but for society should we have been. Even a civilized nation cannot in the pride of its superiority, like the Chinese, hold itself aloof from the commerce of mankind without dropping out of the race and lagging behind in the never-ceasing march of social improvement.

But civilization implies something more than an abundance of material products. It implies a change and an improvement in the inward as well as in the outward condition of man. It implies softened manners, more refined pleasures, and more dignified pursuits; the culture of man's higher qualities, whether of sense, or intellect, or will, and the harmonious blending of all these in one whole, which presents to us dignity mollified by suavity, courage clothed in gentleness, and knowledge and power allied with modesty. I feel that it is scarcely necessary to point out to you that society is the medium, and the only medium, through which this union of gifts and graces can be acquired. The harshness and rudeness of the misanthrope; the awkwardness and bashfulness of the bookworm; the conceit and obstinacy of the self-educated man; the foolish assumption of superiority on the part of those who do not admit of any equal, whether it be the pampered scion of a royal house or the dogmatic priest of an infallible church, are all defects of character which arise from want of social intercourse. We can only remedy or avoid them by mingling with our fellows.

If, again, we pass into the world of thought, we shall find on analysis that it owes, not its existence indeed, but all its complexity and fertility, to the stimulating influences of society. How much of our reflection is excited by our observation of the actions of others, similar actions when performed by ourselves wholly eluding our notice, or at least not arresting our attention; how many thoughts and views and doctrines spring up and develop themselves from some chance word dropped by a casual acquaintance; how constantly are we obliged to modify, sometimes to abandon, the prepossessions and opinions which we cherish as being peculiarly our own, in consequence of the mistakes, and omissions, and objections which others discover in them, but which most likely ever would have remained undetected by ourselves. What are all the mechanical inventions and scientific discoveries with which our age abounds but improvements on and deductions from results previously obtained. And if we now, inheriting all this vast possession of thoughts and words and works of millions of minds through thousands of years, feel, as we do feel, that we are only standing on the skirts of a civilization whose greater glory will throw a pall of utter darkness over the civilization of the present, what, we may ask, could the most highly gifted man have accomplished left to himself alone?

Again, we note speech as another of the gifts for which we are indebted to society. Alone, man would have been a mute, or would have given expression only to inarticulate sounds. There are a few cases on record of individuals who in early childhood have been lost in the woods, and who have grown up to maturity in the solitude of Nature's wilds before they were discovered, whose utter inability to express any coherent sounds, and whose entire want of anything resembling language might be cited as proofs of the statement I have made. But as one or two instances may be accounted insufficient to establish a general principle, let us consider the rationale of the matter. By Nature man is averse from all exertion, and will make no effort except under the influence of some powerful stimulus. We may not be ready to admit the truth of this assertion if we confine our observation to the civilized races of men. We see again and again that men who in their youth looked forward to a time when they would be enabled to retire from business, and spend the declining years of life in quiet and repose, go on even after that time has come working and accumulating wealth, for which they have neither desire nor use, simply because they find that enforced inactivity is supreme misery. But then we must remember that these men are not in a state of nature, but have had their original inclinations greatly modified, if not completely changed, by life-long habits. If we would know what man is by nature we must study him where his nature is least sophisticated, and there we shall find abundant illustrations of his disinclination to any effort that is not compulsory, as any one may easily satisfy himself who will consult the narratives of travellers who have studied the characters and habits of barbarians.

Now it will not be doubted by any who have paid some consideration to the subject, or who have closely watched a child while learning to speak, that the acquisition of language involves severe and painful efforts. How much greater a mental strain would be required to invent a language! And although we cannot doubt that, wherever two human beings are thrown together, so strong is the desire for communion and sympathy and interchange of thought and feeling, there a language will be invented; yet we are equally sure that in solitude, where this stimulus is wanting (and we can imagine none other which might take its place), the difficulty of the undertaking, and man's natural aversion to cope with difficulties, would keep him forever dumb.

And do we know how much this involves? Many philosophers have maintained that without words man could not think. What is certain is that we always carry on our mental trains of thought by means of words, and that our thoughts are never fully and clearly ours until we have expressed them in concise and definite terms. Clear thinking and clear speaking are inseparably allied; without the one it is impossible to secure the other. The sensations man receives from the outward world could not fail, we think, even in solitude, to give rise to some dim and obscure reflections, which would find symbols of some sort to embody themselves in, by means of which the mind might be capable of sustaining for a short time a train of thought; but here again the difficulty would be so immense, the means for overcoming it so clumsy, and the motives for attempting it so weak, that we do not think we depreciate his natural powers when we say that, without language, which only the society of his fellows can develop, man would never have grown into what we imply by the phrase, "a rational creature."

Lastly, that power in virtue of the possession of which man claims to tower above the animal, and to ally his nature even with that of the Supreme, that power which he denominates, and truly, the divinity within—conscience—is a social product. There is probably no subject in the world on which people in general entertain more erroneous conceptions than this of conscience, and but few which, from the earliest times, have more exercised or divided philosophers themselves. Most people seem to fancy that it is an intuitive power, implanted in the human breast from infancy in all its full-blown maturity and splendor, and capable, without reflection and without experience, in any set of circumstances, however complicated, of deciding, at once and infallibly, what course is right and what actions are wrong. Such an opinion inevitably hurls the man who holds it into the blankest and most utter scepticism, when he goes abroad in the world, and makes himself acquainted with the varying sentiments and opinions of different races and nations of mankind, and finds that the same action is sternly denounced and disallowed here, tolerated with indifference there, and warmly commended and approved elsewhere. With his views of conscience, in presence of such totally opposite and contradictory deliverances, he is forced to believe that it is a misleading guide—an ignis fatuus—a will-o'-the-wisp,—while he comes insensibly to think that things are right or wrong just as men choose to call them so. Every man is bound, indeed, to do what he conscientiously believes to be right; but it does not follow that what, as he believes, his conscience tells him to be right, is right—let it suffice only to quote the Spanish Inquisition as an instance. There is no power in man, neither conscience nor any other, which can tell him beforehand what things are right and what wrong. He has to learn that by a slow, and generally a painful, experience under God's own teaching. It is only by the consequences of our actions on others and ourselves that we can learn whether they be right or not. A man's intentions may be good enough, and if so of course his conscience approves; but, without knowledge and experience, that does not ensure that his actions will be right. The consequences of actions are God's unmistakable handwriting regarding their real character; but it takes a long time for man to decipher and to understand the lesson; and to every one who has pondered the question deeply, the conviction must have come home that we are living now, without fear and without reproach, in the habitual practice of customs which our more enlightened descendants shall look back upon with the same abhorrence that we do upon the custom that obtained as a duty among the ancients, of exposing their deformed infants to death, or of burying their aged parents alive, which some savages of the present day regard as a sacred and religious obligation.

What conscience really gives us is the ideas of right and wrong, with the feeling of approval or the reverse, according as we obey or violate her one injunction, to do always what, as far as we can ascertain it, is, under the circumstances, right. Now we were all indoctrinated into this discrimination between right and wrong, and into the sense of duty which springs from it, of practising the right and avoiding the wrong, at a time previous to that to which memory can reach back. Our observation leads us to believe that, even before the child can speak, he has acquired some dim sense of being wrong, from the mother's uplifted finger and contracted brow and reproving tone. And, acquired at such an early period, it is quite natural for those who have never thought upon or examined the subject to believe that this power of discrimination was born with us at our birth, even as it strengthens with our growth. But let us conceive a human being who had never known a mother's watchful, tender training, who had never spoken to, whose eye had never lighted on, another human being, and then ask at what time or in what manner there would spring up within his breast this sense of right and wrong? We do not hesitate to answer, Never at all. For what is there to educe it in the life which such a being must lead? In the course of his experience he would learn that some actions are painful while others are pleasant in their fruits. And how much would he infer from that? The very highest lesson he could derive from his experience would be that some actions are imprudent and inexpedient, while others are profitable and agreeable—a very different thing from judging them to be right or wrong. Not until a being of the same mould as himself is given him for a companion, and he begins to suffer inconvenience from the free and unrestrained exercise of that companion's will, will the reflection dawn upon him that society brings with it a law, and an obligation to obey the law, that "we should do to others as we would have others do to us." But how or when could this conception have arisen, if there had been no "others" to whom anything could be done, or from whom anything could be suffered?

When, then, we regard any favorable specimen of mankind of the present day, remembering that even yet man has not attained unto, but is only aiming at, perfection, and contrast him with what he would have been without civilization, without speech, without a conscience—in other words, an atheist, devoid of reason and unconscious of morals,—does it not come home to each of us that it was in very deed the voice of the Lord God himself which said, "It is not good that man should be alone"?

[For The Index.]

THE OXYGEN CENTENNIAL AT NORTHUMBERLAND.

BY REV. DAVID H. CLARK.

The readers of The Index will doubtless have read reports of the recent scientific gathering at Northumberland, Pennsylvania, before this reaches them. Its rare significance and interest, nevertheless, will justify this additional notice in its columns, even at the risk of some repetition. While the ecclesiastical world is just now endeavoring to revive the superstitious custom of pilgrimages to fabulous shrines, it is pleasant to record this visitation of the devotees of science to the tomb of one of that long line of worthies whose memory the Church has ever sought to make infamous, but whose practical service to mankind has been greater than any or all of the saints in the calendar.

A very interesting circumstance in connection with the event was the intelligence of a simultaneous demonstration, including the dedication of a statue to Priestley, at Birmingham, England, whence, eighty years before, he had fled, escaping from persecution, a furious and fanatical mob, and his burning dwelling, to find refuge amidst the wilds of Pennsylvania. Such is human life, its strange ingratitude and inconsistency. We spurn our benefactors and cover them with ignominy in their day; but when they have passed beyond the reach of our cruelty we celebrate their merits and achievements, and lavish upon their graves our eminent honors. Well did President Coppie observe, in his eloquent address in the little hill-side cemetery at Priestley's grave, that if it is permitted those who have departed this life to know what is transpiring here, his martyr soul must be gladdened by this scene and commemoration of his labors and virtues.

It came to light in the course of the meeting that the original suggestion from which the celebration sprung into effect came from a woman, Professor Rachel L. Bodley, of the Woman's College of Philadelphia, now on a tour of scientific exploration in the West, a lady who has gained some distinction through her enthusiasm in such pursuits. It was the cause of unfavorable comment that her letter of regret for absence, which was pronounced by those who saw it to be eminently worthy of the occasion, should not have been read with others of the same character. Why was it not? Was it because it is much easier for scientists to analyze the properties of matter, and decompose their compound gases, than it is to understand their own mental characteristics, or free their own minds from prejudice and intolerance? The credit of elaborating and carrying forward the plan to the admirable and delightful success in which it eventually culminated belongs chiefly, however, to Professor H. Carrington Bolton, of the School of Mines, Columbia College. In a communication to the American Chemist, from this gentleman, some two or three months since, the year 1774 was mentioned as memorable for a number of important discoveries in chemistry, especially that of oxygen gas, by Dr. Joseph Priestley; and the practicability of an appropriate commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the latter event was urged for the first of August, the present summer. It was intimated that it might partake of the nature of a centennial celebration of progress in the branch of science with which the name of Priestley is imperishably associated; and, moreover, as there has been a feeling of late years among the chemists of the country that their special pursuit did not secure the interest or recognition it is entitled to among the general and necessarily somewhat hasty consideration of subjects at the meetings of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, it was thought that the occasion might afford an opportunity for the better exchange of ideas among chemists, besides increasing the spirit of coöperation and fraternity among them. The suggestion met with a very favorable reception, and a circular containing a more direct appeal in regard to it received at once the signatures of many of the most distinguished chemists of the country, including upwards of fifty professors of colleges, as an assurance of their hearty interest and sympathy.

Priestley was born in England, and, as is well known, passed the greater portion of his life there; but was forced through persecution in old age to flee to this country. He spent his last years at Northumberland, Pennsylvania, the place of his burial. It seemed, therefore, very natural and fitting that the proposed commemoraiton should occur on the spot that is thus identified with his illustrious name and labors. The selection, apart from these considerations, was admirable in itself. The town, which contains a population of about two thousand five hundred, is charmingly situated on the west branch of the Susquehanna, in Central Pennsylvania, amid scenery that in picturesqueness and beauty is scarcely surpassed anywhere. It presents a staid and comfortable appearance to the eye of the visitor, without anything particularly calculated externally to arrest his attention, or remind him of the great man whose heroic and brilliant career here came to its mortal close. It has been noted for the persons of distinction who have lived in it, and still compares favorably with neighboring towns in culture and intelligence.

The house which Priestley occupied is in a good state of preservation. It stands on a gradual slope towards the river, and is a substantial, commodious, yellow-painted brick dwelling of the old style. A one-story wing at the end was used as his study, and an observatory upon the central roof, removed a few years since, showed where he was accustomed to make his nocturnal astronomical observations. The telescope, with numerous other relics of his scientific pursuits, are in the possession of his descendants, who are among the residents of the town. The relentless encroachments of modern progress have intersected the grounds on one side of the house by a canal, and on the other have run a railroad before the front door, thus marring very materially the attractiveness of the place, causing a depreciation in the value of the property, and an air of neglect which is unpleasant to contemplate.

The public meetings were held in the central schoolhouse of the town, beginning on Friday morning, July 31, and closing on Saturday noon. It seemed a little like the style of the gentlemen who are asking for the acknowledgment of God in the Constitution, when, at the introductory session, the chairman announced that the exercises would be opened by prayer; and the Rev. Dr. Pynchon, of Trinity College, stepped forward to read one of the stereotyped selections from the Episcopal liturgy, which, so far as any special adaptation to the circumstances of its utterance was concerned, seemed better fitted to an assembly of High Church ecclesiastics than a body of simple truth-seekers and students of Nature. When will men learn to spare others the effects of their perverted mental training at such times, and through enlarged knowledge become so conscious of the mystery of existence as to realize that silence may be sometimes better than formal utterance, and the legitimate use of human faculties a better recognition of our relation to the Author of our existence than any other?

The address of welcome from Col. David Laggart, late Paymaster of the United States Army, and well known among the public men of Pennsylvania, was a noble and hearty greeting. It accords so well in temper with The Index that I venture to quote it in full, though some of your readers may have seen it before:—

"I have been chosen by my fellow-citizens to offer to the learned and distinguished men and women, who have gathered here to commemorate a grand discovery, a brief but earnest welcome. We cannot follow you through the wide realms of science, nor explore very deeply the mysteries of Nature, for we know more about oxen than oxygen, and more about the whey of milk than the milky way; but we can move with equal step in paying a tribute of respect and reverence to the illustrious man who eighty years ago found among the rude forefathers of this hamlet a quiet home, and seventy years ago an honored grave. While in the lapse of everlasting time all human names must be forgotten, many ages will have come and gone, and left their silent footmarks on the earth, before the name of Priestley will pass from the memories and the records of his fellow-men. He has written it in letters of light and glory upon the highest and broadest pillar of the universe. By the right of genius and labor he takes rank with the dead but sceptred sovereigns whose spirits still rule us from their urns. Like the eagle, he built his eyrie upon the mountain's top, inaccessible to vulgar intrusions. In that pure atmosphere he dwelt not above human spite, jealousy, and detraction; for it is easier to get below than above their annoyances. The shafts of bigots and fools were aimed at him, but they could not penetrate the triple armor which enthusiasm, philosophy, and truth had thrown around him. Like you, gentlemen, he made science his mistress, and with a pure heart and an untiring mind he worshipped her 'through long days of labor and nights devoid of ease;' and to-day he stands with Galileo, Newton, Harvey, Franklin, Faraday, and Humboldt, grand, colossal, and enduring, one of the great high priests in the boundless and beautiful temple of Nature.

"A brutal English mob could burn his dwelling, and in an hour of political madness and religious frenzy destroy the work of years; but it could not stay the indomitable energy of his genius, nor dim the lustre of his well-earned renown. While the miserable wretches who composed that mob have long ago given back to the great element which he discovered seventy-five per cent. of their worthless carcases, more than eighty years afterwards his name is a talisman to draw to this quiet village many of the most renowned knowledge-gatherers of the nation, and from Canada and New Jersey an aristocracy of learning and intellect that can afford to look down from its high citadels of thought and achievement with pity, if not contempt, upon the more vulgar aristocracy of blind accident, the painted caterpillars of illiterate wealth.

"In conclusion, I would merely reiterate to you, men and women of sense and science, in behalf of all my neighbors, a very sincere and unfeigned welcome to our homes and hearts; and let me assure you most earnestly that we are not only willing, but anxious, to do all things possible to make you remember with pleasure your well-timed pilgrimage to the home and grave of the greatest discoverer of his time."

Among the particularly interesting occurrences of the first day's proceedings was the exchange of the following telegrams by ocean cable:—

"To the American Chemists assembled at Northumberland, Pa.: Our marble statue, representing Priestley discovering oxygen, will be unveiled tomorrow, presented by the subscribers, through Professor Huxley, to the town, and accepted by the mayor. We greet you as colleagues in honoring the memory of a great and good man."

This was signed by the Priestley Memorial Committee, Birmingham, England.

The salutation from Northumberland was in these words:—

"The brother chemists at the grave, to their brothers at the home, of Priestley send greeting on this centennial anniversary of the birth of chemistry."

The first paper read was "A Sketch of the Life and Labors of Dr. Joseph Priestley," by Professor Henry Croft, of Toronto, Canada. It showed a thorough appreciation of the subject of the sketch, and exhaustive research, not only among English but also French and German sources. It described Priestley as the keen-eyed, diligent observer of Nature, ever prying into her secrets, and with but little special education and few external appliances continually making discoveries of the greatest importance, which stamped him as one of the most remarkable men of his time. The son of an humble tradesman, and brought up under Calvinistic influence, his early predilection was for the Presbyterian ministry, which profession he entered after teaching some time as a village schoolmaster. But he could not remain fixed in his theological position, and passed through a succession of different religious beliefs, becoming at length a Unitarian—the most radical phase of religious belief of his day. It was said of him that he was always on the heterodox side of every question, and that he believed nothing on authority. His writings are very voluminous and varied. A large portion of them are of a controversial character. They comprise treatises on grammar, history, philosophy, theology, and other subjects, to the number of over one hundred volumes. Like all whose lives have been prolific in great results, he was a marvel of industry and perseverance. Though of very exceptional purity and uprightness of life, his fearless and uncompromising attacks on what he conceived to be error subjected him to continual abuse and persecution, and deprived him of preferments and honors which he would otherwise have secured. Nevertheless, his name became widely known and respected among the intellectual classes of his time.

The popular aversion to his democratic political principles, and a suspicion of his being in league with the French revolutionists, caused an excited and ignorant mob to gather about his dwelling, throw his library and laboratory apparatus into the street, and set the house on fire. Priestley barely escaped with his life, and subsequently came to this country, where his ultra principles still subjected him to enmity and persecution. In this country he became the correspondent of Franklin, Jefferson, and other eminent men. The subjoined specimens of this correspondence, prefaced by some pertinent and pleasant remarks, were read by Professor Horsford, of Cambridge, Mass.:—

NORTHUMBERLAND, Dec. 20, 1797.

DEAR SIR:—

I am glad to find that you have returned to Philadelphia, and that you are not afraid to correspond with so dangerous a politician as I am; and as I have no correspondence with any other member of Congress I shall, perhaps, be troublesome to you.

I have employed myself this summer very much in my laboratory, and have sent several articles of a chemical nature to the Chemical Repository, printed at New York. Four of them, I hear, will be published in their next two numbers, and I have one more to send. The object of them all is to show the fallacy (as it appears to me) of the French theory. But I want to hear from the French chemists themselves, and when we shall have any intercourse with that abominable country you Federalists can tell better than I can. I suffer much in various ways for want of it. Who are the gainers I cannot tell.

NORTHUMBERLAND, Jan. 7, 1799.

DEAR SIR:—

You say you wish I were as zealous a friend of America as Mr. Hone is of France. Both Mr. Hone and myself, as well as Dr. Price and many others, were as zealous in the cause of America as he now is in that of France. If I had not been so, I should not have come hither; nor am I changed at all. I like the country and the Constitution of your government as much as ever. The change, dear sir, is in you. It is clear to me that you have violated your Constitution in several essential articles, and act upon maxims by which you may defeat the whole object of it. Mr. Adams openly disapproves the most fundamental article of it; namely, the election of the Executive. But, as you say, we cannot see our own prejudices, and cherish them as truths.

I may be doing wrong in writing so freely, and I have been desired to be cautious with respect to what I write to you. But I am not used to secrecy and caution, and I cannot adopt a new system of conduct now. There is no person in this country to whom I write on the subject of politics besides yourself, nor do I recollect what I have written; but I do not care who sees what I write or knows what I think on any subject. You may, if you please, show all my letters to Mr. Adams himself. I like his address on the opening of the Congress, and I much approve of his conduct in several respects. I like him better than your late President. He is more undisguised. We easily know what he thinks and what he would do; but I think his answers to several of the addresses are mere intemperate railing, unworthy of a statesman.

My general maxims of policy are, I believe, peculiar to myself. When I mentioned them to Mr. Adams he was pleased to say that "if any nation could govern itself by them it would command the world." Of this I am fully persuaded; but he has departed very far from them. All that I can expect is the fate of the poet Lee, who, when he was confined in a mad-house, and was asked by some stranger why he was sent thither, replied, "I said the world was mad, and the world said I was mad, and they outvoted me." My plan would prevent all war and almost all taxes. But if the calamities of war, heavy taxation, the pestilence, etc., or any other evil, be required for the discipline of nations, as I believe that in the present state of things they are, they will be introduced from some cause or other. This country, as well as others, wants a scourge, and you are preparing one for yourselves.

With every good wish to you and your country, I am, dear sir (though an alien), yours sincerely,

J. PRIESTLEY.

NORTHUMBERLAND, Dec. 12, 1799.

DEAR SIR:—

Your letter was peculiarly welcome, for, in truth, I was afraid you would have revolted at my politics, as you were so violent a Federalist and I such a democrat. Since, however, you could bear the first part of my letter, I will venture to send you the second by this post, and then you will know the worst of me.

Though Porcupine's abuse had no effect on you, it had on many others; and even in this part of the country I was generally regarded as a dangerous person. For in this country it is not one person in a hundred that knows anything of my writings or my history. I was frequently called an atheist. Porcupine's paper was taken by all the most respectable Federalists in these parts, and many, I believe, propagated suspicions of me that they did not entertain themselves.

I have now completed my notes on all the books of Scripture, without omitting even Solomon's Song, which at first I did not intend to meddle with, as there is nothing of religion in it. My Church History was finished long before; but these, I believe, must remain to be disposed of by my executor.

I have completed my experience in defence of the doctrine of phlogiston, and having now heard all that has been, and I believe can be, advanced against it, I begin next week to print my defensive treatise on the subject; and I pretend to nothing less than a demonstration of the fallacy of the opposite new theory, though supported by almost all the chemists in Europe, and in this country, too.

If you dare trust me with any political information, I shall be glad to receive it. Yours sincerely,

J. PRIESTLEY.

DEAR SIR:—

Looking into my Institutes, I find I have said all that I know, and I believe all that is known, about the devil; and, in the way of argument, I should now only say that I believe with Mr. Palmer (now in Botany Bay) that the fallen angels of Peter and Jude were the descendants of Seth, who perished in the deluge. (See the Theological Repository, vol. 5, p. 166.) As to an historical article, I could not find material for one....

I am, dear sir, yours sincerely,

J. PRIESTLEY.

NORTHUMBERLAND, March 1, 1799.

NORTHUMBERLAND, Feb. 20, 1800.

...I lately sent to Mr. Smith, by Mr. Campbell, some copies of a chemical tract in defence of the doctrine of phlogiston. Though you are not a chemist, you may, perhaps, find something to amuse and I hope to please you in the preface, etc.

I am writing a dissertation on the knowledge of a future state among the ancient Hebrews. I have been used to think there were no traces of it in the Old Testament, but I now think it furnishes me a demonstration of it. I wish I could submit it to your inspection. I shall transcribe it in a few days, and if I have a good opportunity I will send it to you.

NORTHUMBERLAND, Jan. 7, 1800.

...I often wish I could see you in my shed, as it is called. But it is too much out of your way in going or returning from Congress, and besides we have not yet any stage-coach to this place. With every good wish, etc.

JANUARY 23, 1800.

...I have just printed, except the preface, a philosophical work, which I entitled The Doctrine of Phlogiston Established, and that of the Composition of Water Refuted. You will wonder at my confidence when almost all the world is against me. But I have cautiously examined the ground, and think I stand very firm. I do not think the Allied Powers have now the same confidence in the contest with France.

MARCH 6, 1800.

...I am engaged in a promising train of experiment, and everything in this way is much more expensive than in England. But I cannot be idle. You see that, rather than do nothing, I write on politics, of which you Federalists will say I know nothing at all.

MARCH 20, 1800.

...I wish you could read the dedication and preface to my last tract on phlogiston.... Were you here, I should not despair of exciting your attention to other things besides theology or metaphysics, though these are certainly of the first consequence, and I give most of my time to them.

The "Loan Exhibition," as it was called, was a peculiarly attractive feature of the celebration. It consisted of a large collection of philosophical and chemical apparatus, books, manuscripts, engravings, paintings, etc., that belonged to Priestley or were of interest in connection with the history of chemical science, some being supplied by the town, and some temporarily loaned for this purpose. Many of these afforded curious illustrations of the disadvantages which the earlier experimenters labored under, and the changes which science has undergone even in modern times in the appliances of these pursuits.

At the afternoon session on Friday, Professor T. Sterry Hunt, of Boston, gave an address entitled, "A Review of the Century's Progress in Theoretical Chemistry." The latter part of the eighteenth century was characterized by wonderful chemical activity. Dr. Black had discovered the composition of carbonic acid or "fixed air," and the behavior of inflammable air, or hydrogen, had been studied long before by Cavendish. Oxygen, nevertheless, was the starting point of a new system of chemistry. Soon after this, the philosophers Watt and Cavendish followed up the experiments of Priestley, and determined the chemical composition of water, which was the second great step in the progress of chemistry. The properties of air and water being accurately determined, "experiment, reason, and analogy" have done the rest, and in about ninety years of indefatigable labor brought the science to its present grand and wonderful position. "Not to be too limited in my remarks," said the speaker, "I must add that all the other sister sciences advanced with it, arm in arm, to the abode of truth and sunshine. Chemistry is not separated by a strong line of demarcation from the other sciences, but preëminently correlated to them, being as it were some of the meshes of the great web of Nature. Black, Cavendish, Watt, Priestley, Bergman, and Scheele were the laborers in the dawn of chemistry. Lavoisier stands as one of the most accurate and brilliant investigators of his age; he pursued his researches in France at the same time that Priestley and Cavendish were engaged in England. He possessed a wonderful power of generalization, and great acuteness in distinguishing between the essential and the accidental phenomena which came before him, in his accurate repetition of the experiments of others, which gave him great distinction. Lavoisier was the first to point out the elementary nature of the metals, and show clearly the nature of the metallic oxides, and the constitution of a great many salts. He was the first to employ quantitative research in his experiments, which led him on brilliantly through his career, so that we can well call him the 'Nestor of Chemistry.' On the list of great and good men stand Wenzel, Richter, Dalton, Sir Humphrey Davy, Dr. Wollaston, and, above all others, that name which is a household word—Berzelius. He is justly called the patriarch of analytical chemistry."

The address of President Coppie, of Lehigh University, who had hastily prepared himself to fulfil this part of the programme, in the absence of Prof. Henry, was perhaps the most eloquent and impressive of the occasion. The sun was gradually sinking in the western sky. A large crowd of persons, including strangers and townspeople, were present; and as the fine presence of the speaker made the central figure, and riveted the attention of every listener, the scene was one which no one who shared in it will ever forget. Dr. Coppie, though a Trinitarian divine, spoke in earnest confidence of the sincerity of Priestley in whatever he advocated or believed. It was impossible for him to be a trimmer. He felt himself bound to defend and proclaim whatever he conceived to be the truth. Priestley's essay on education contained many suggestions which are now being carried out. Though unpopular in his day, they are singularly good in ours. It was his fortune to possess a wife who was of invaluable aid to him in his intellectual pursuits.

At a later hour in the evening, Professor I. Lawrence Smith, of Louisville, Ky., delivered an address at the School Building upon "The Century's Progress in Industrial Chemistry." The uses of soda, sulphuric acid, coal, etc., were shown as marked examples of the benefits reaped from the labors of chemistry.

The concluding paper was read by Professor Benjamin Silliman, of Yale College. It was an essay on "American Contributions to Chemistry," and contained succinct references to all those who have been specially conspicuous in chemical science in this country, with an account of their achievements.

On Sunday, John Fretwell, Jr., of England, gave a discourse on Priestley from the European standpoint, in the Unitarian church of the town which he founded. A number of visitors who had remained over were present. It is not improbable that some of these would have felt themselves less in sympathy with the place, if they had known that this same body of worshippers, descendants of the brave iconoclast to whom they had come to render their honors, not two years before had subjected their own minister to the same experience as that of their great ancestor, and cast him out of their pulpit, after four years of faithful service, because, like him, he was unwilling to suppress at their bidding the declaration of his honest convictions.

HUXLEY ON PRIESTLEY.

A BOLD AND CLEAR ESTIMATE OF DR. PRIESTLEY AND HIS WORK.

The centenary of the discovery of oxygen by Dr. Priestley was celebrated at Birmingham, on Saturday, by the unveiling of a statue of the great chemist. Eighty-three years ago, Joseph Priestley, then the minister of the principal Unitarian congregation in Birmingham, was ignominiously driven from the town, amid the execrations of a mob who saw in him only the theological controversialist and the apologist of the French revolutionists. The statue, which is the work of Mr. F. J. Williamson, a pupil of Foley, is executed in white (so-called) Sicilian marble, and is eight feet six inches in height. The Doctor, habited in the costume of his period, with wig, ruffles, knee-breeches, buckled shoes, and large-cuffed and lappeted coat, is represented in the act of making the experiment which resulted in the discovery of oxygen gas. In his right hand is a lens, or burning-glass, the focus of which is directed upon a little tube and dish resting upon a rustic pedestal at his left hand, and containing presumably the red precipitate of mercury, from which he first succeeded in evolving "dephlogisticated air." The attitude is graceful, easy, and expressive, and the face, modelled from an authentic portrait, is considered by members of the Priestley family an excellent likeness.

The unveiling ceremony was held at one o'clock on Saturday, in the presence of a large assembly, when Professor Huxley, in the name of the subscribers, formally and briefly presented the statue to the town, amid the cheers of the spectators. The mayor (Alderman Chamberlain) having acknowledged the gift on the part of the corporation, the party adjourned to the town hall, for the purpose of hearing an address from Professor Huxley on the life and labors of Dr. Priestley. Letters of apology for non-attendance from the borough members, Professors Tyndall and Morley, Sir Bartle Frere, Dr. B. Richardson, and others, were then read by the honorable secretary, Mr. Samuel Timmins.

Professor Huxley said they had just received at his hands the memorial which had been erected to Dr. Priestley in this town. He learned from Leeds that like honor was being paid to Priestley's memory in that great and important city, and he knew that in the United States large preparations had been making for the celebration of that anniversary. It might be proper, therefore, to ask their patience for a short time while he laid before them the grounds and considerations which had led the fellow-countrymen of Priestley, after a lapse of seventy years from the time of his death, to do this honor to a man who was neither a prince nor a statesman nor a general, and was not in fact one of those to whom mankind generally delighted to erect statues either before or after their death. He imagined if they could have asked Priestley himself what he considered to be his best claim—if, indeed, he had any, for the man was modest—to the recognition of posterity, he would have said that it was because he had been the champion and the defender and propagator, in season and out of season, of that particular hypothesis respecting the divine essence which was called Unitarianism. To that object Dr. Priestley devoted all his energies. In favor of carrying out that end he sacrificed those vulgar rewards which assuredly were within easy reach of a man of his eminent and versatile abilities and great energies. In order to propagate these views he sacrificed that consideration for his philosophical labors which he loved so well, and that zealous pursuit of them which would have been justified by his eminent success. He honored the man who having found a religious ideal sacrificed everything that most men esteemed in life to carry it out, and his honor was paid without the slightest reference to any belief which he himself might entertain as to the objective value of the particular doctrines of which Priestley was the apostle.

But they were not there that day to honor Priestley the Unitarian divine [hear, hear], but to do honor to the memory of a philosophic thinker. [Applause.] They were there to do honor to a man every one of whose political writings had in it the true ring of freedom. [Cheers.] They were, he thought, to honor Priestley as one of those who were called by a great poet of antiquity "that band of men who are the swift bearers of the lamp of life,"—that lamp which was lighted in the childhood of mankind at the Promethean altar of science, and which had been handed down by him and such as he from generation to generation. He would not detain the audience at any great length by dwelling upon the details of a life which was or should be familiar to every citizen of Birmingham; he would merely remind them that Priestley was born in the year 1733, that he was educated in the straightest sect of Calvinistic Orthodoxy, and that the singular abilities of the boy led to his being early sent to an academy for dissenters at Daventry. In that academy every question was thrown open, the leading professors took opposite sides, everything was discussed, and Priestley even then showed the bent of his young mind, and, as he stated in his autobiography, generally found himself on the unorthodox side. As age increased, as his faculties reached maturity, that tendency did not seem to have undergone any diminution; but passing through various degrees, upwards or downwards as they liked to say, he passed from Calvinism to Arianism, and finally in the middle of his life was landed in that Unitarianism of which he remained through life the great champion.

Side by side with those tendencies, however, had awakened a scientific proclivity. Undoubtedly what germ of scientific taste lay in him was fostered and encouraged to a very great degree by his meeting with Benjamin Franklin [cheers], who was at that time resident in this country. Stimulated by him, Priestley wrote his history of electric discovery, and being launched in that course of inquiry while resident at Leeds, he commenced his researches upon the nature of air. Those researches grew; circumstances became more favorable to his scientific pursuits. He became an honored and cherished inmate of the house of Lord Shelburne, and remained there for seven years, during which time he made some of his most important discoveries, and particularly that of which to-day they were celebrating the centenary anniversary. After that, Priestley migrated to Birmingham, and there he carried on his philosophical investigations. Professor Huxley then referred to the Birmingham riots and Priestley's flight for his life. Priestley, in the first place, went to London, but there, he was sorry to say, met with the cold shoulder, even from those who should have been his best friends in distress—the fellows of the learned societies to which he belonged. Discovering then that England was no longer a place in which he could pursue his philosophical occupations, he migrated to America, and spent the rest of his useful existence at Northumberland, in the United States. He died in 1804.

Having made this brief summary of the conditions under which Priestley worked, Professor Huxley said he wished briefly to put before the meeting what was the value of his life's work to those who look upon it from outside the region of the particular denomination to which he belonged. [Hear.] Priestley was a man of almost endless energy and versatility. He was a vigorous controversialist, and in the midst of all his chemical, philosophical, and political sparks flying away from his anvil, he was constantly raining a shower of blows on priest or bishop. [Laughter.] Professor Huxley was, however, convinced that the good doctor struck those blows with the same entire absence of passion as the blacksmith when he was smiting his iron. But if the iron could speak it would probably take a different view of the matter not quite so devoid of fact [laughter], and his hearers must recollect that the bishops whom Priestley attacked could speak, and had very loud voices. [Renewed laughter.] Priestley had been constantly reproached for not confining himself to his philosophical work. They said, "Here you are, a man of science, capable of increasing knowledge to any extent —why didn't you confine yourself to that pursuit for which all men will reverence you, and in which you can certainly add to the sum of human knowledge and happiness, without awakening this hatred and jealousy?" But he took it that Priestley was of opinion that before he was a man of science he was a man in the first place, and a citizen in the second place; and Professor Huxley could himself entirely sympathize with him if he held the duties of his manhood and of his citizenship to be vastly superior to those of his philosophership, and if he thought that the securing of that freedom which is the essential condition of the progress of science and the progress of the human race was a vastly more important matter than advancing knowledge in this direction or that direction—vast as was the importance of that progress itself.

Priestley's principal lines of activity might be divided into three. In the first place he was a man of science and a chemist; in the second place he was a philosopher and a writer; and in the third place he was a politician. But he proposed to put before them those considerations that struck him in each of these directions. In order to estimate what Priestley did for chemistry, he must carry them back to the last century and show them what was then the condition of chemical science. There was no one who believed, and hardly any one who suspected, that the doctrines of the ancients that air, water, and fire are elements was other than true. The researches of Boyle and Hales had tended to define the qualities of air, had tended to show that there were different kinds; but that there was anything like the multiplicity and diversity of elementary bodies which we now comprehend under the name of gases was entirely unsuspected. But immediately at the commencement of the second half of the last century, about the year 1755, a most remarkable man, a young Scotch doctor —Dr. Black,—had made investigations into the nature of what was called fixed air; and he had shown that this substance could be combined with such matter as limes, and such as alkalies, and could be got out again from them by combustion; that it was an acid substance, capable of neutralizing the strongest alkali, and that this paved the way for an air-like body, an aëriform, elastic substance, which would play the part of an independent existence totally distinct from common air. Then a little later, in 1766, Cavendish, one of the most remarkable men who adorned the science of this or any other country, in a series of researches, showed the nature of sundry other gases. Shortly after Cavendish worked, Priestley commenced his inquiries, and if we look upon those as contributions to our knowledge of chemical fact, they were something surprising, not only in themselves, but still more when we remember that he was a man devoid of academical training; that he had not the means and appliances at his disposal that Cavendish had. In fact, he scaled the walls of science without preparation and from the outside. The number of discoveries he made was something marvellous and without limit. He trebled the number of gases known before his time, and gave a precision and definition to our knowledge of their character of which no one before had any knowledge. It was on the 1st of August, 1774, that he made that discovery with which his name is more especially connected—the discovery of that which at the present day is known as oxygen gas. He was then resident at Caine with Lord Shelburne. Professor Huxley now passed on to describe, at some length, the manner in which the gas was discovered and the different chemicals used for the purpose, quoting extracts from Priestley's own words in support of his arguments. It was not, however, the speaker continued, until six months afterwards that the discoverer knew the real nature of his discovery. His discovery was taken up and enlarged by other persons—notably Lavoisier, the French chemist, who shabbily ignored Priestley's discovery.

The speaker then passed on to consider Priestley's philosophical work. It was impossible to say whether the doctor brought more odium upon himself by his theological, his philosophical, or his political writings; but Professor Huxley rather thought the palm must be awarded to his philosophical writings. Priestley, in fact, in the book Professor Huxley held in his hand, argued out with remarkable acuteness that in the nature of a man there was but one substance, and that a material substance; that the so-called freedom or self-determination of the will in man had no reality, but that he was subject to necessity like other things in the universe,—and his corollary from that, plainly expressed, was that there was no such thing as the immortality of the soul. Yet, at the same time, Priestley held the immortality of the soul with singular force; but he believed that that immortality did not adhere to man in his natural state, but was a fresh and miraculous gift conferred upon him by the Creator at the resurrection. Professor Huxley then proceeded to argue that Priestley was not deserving of the odium which had been cast upon him for expressing these opinions. He pointed to the fact that several dignitaries of the Church of England had expressed opinions precisely the same in substance, and the same thesis as Priestley's—notably Archbishop Whately and Bishop Courtenay,—yet they had lived in peace and quietness. Then, in the name of common sense, if it was not blamable in a dignitary of the Church, why should it be blamable in a dissenter? [Applause.]

After saying that there were many things he should have liked to speak about, he referred to Priestley's contributions to politics, which he said were in themselves exceedingly remarkable. He afterwards went on to say that if he were to read passages which he had marked respecting Priestley's views upon the Established Church, which he professed to be always an opponent of, they would find that they were marked —he said it advisedly—by a moderation and a good sense, by what he would venture to say was a conservatism, which he was afraid, were Priestley to present himself at this time for their suffrages for a member of Parliament, might lead him to be regarded by the advanced liberals of Birmingham as a conservative thinker. He constantly found the observation made by English political writers that the French were persons necessarily incompetent to govern themselves, because ever since the year 1789 they had been in a state of chronic revolution. But those Englishmen who would recollect that the Long Parliament began in 1640, and that the last Stuart rebellion was in 1745—that was one hundred and five years—might be inclined to doubt whether even a much longer period of political vicissitude and political struggle than that which had been passed through by France was the slightest indication that people were not able to govern themselves efficiently. In the early part of the last century they had, in fact, but just got rid of their Bourbons and all they represented. Society was in a state of corruption which could only be compared to that of the second empire in France. Bribery was the means of government, and peculation was its reward. Four-fifths of the seats in the House of Commons were notoriously for sale in one shape or another. The minister required to know the state of the vote market more than any other, and even the king, at a later day, occupied himself in subsiding the king's friends, and allotting to them subsidies proportionate to their merits and services, with a retail rather than a royal sagacity. [Laughter.] The condition of the Church was either torpidity or scandal. [Hear, hear.] The position of dissenters was a scandal to a civilized country. Priestley and the men who believed with him had, if the law were put in force, no civil rights, or at least none that were worth having by any men who valued civil rights. His preaching was a crime, and every Sunday during which he abstained from going to a service which he abhorred he could have been visited by fine and imprisonment. As to the material condition of the country, he need not tell them it was a time when no man dare make a journey without being armed; when it took several days to get from here to London; when canals were an invention whose utility was greatly doubted, and whose revolutionary tendencies were strongly suspected. [Laughter.] And when they thought that all that was only a hundred years ago, the great amount of change which had been effected in that period of time was something astonishing, even though it might not perhaps be that they had yet entered into an earthly paradise, and although they might have a certain difficulty in holding, as Priestley did, the ultimate perfectibility of mankind.

Now, looking at the present state of affairs in this nineteenth century, as compared with the eighteenth century, he did not think it could be denied that this state of things was distinctly, in many obvious respects, far better than that. [Hear, hear.] It would be absurd, at present, to speak of bribery and corruption as being dominant in the government. Members of Parliament assuredly were not to be bought by money bribes, and even constituents now were getting some serious lessons, and were told to look upon rabbits, tea, and cake with suspicion, which certainly never would have entered the minds of contemporaries of Priestley.

In conclusion, Professor Huxley proceeded to point out where Priestley's value lay. It lay, he said, exactly in this: that he was the exponent of all those tendencies which had brought about the present state of things; that in all respects, on all occasions, he was the champion of free thought. In theology he was the champion of the restrictions on ecclesiastical encroachments, the champion of political freedom, and the champion and great advancer of physical science. Indeed, it was to him, and to such men as he, the speaker fearlessly asserted, that this great and undoubtedly beneficent change [hear, hear] which had passed over the face of the world since the eighteenth century was due.—London Times, Aug. 3.

THE PITTSBURG Leader, in an article entitled "Does the Explanation Explain?" says one of the popular clergymen of that city has been "improving the occasion" of the temperance crusade to expound to his flock the true exposition of the elements used at the first Lord's Supper. It was not fermented, that is, intoxicating, wine which our Savior used on that occasion, but only the "freshly-pressed juice of the grape." The reverend gentleman, says our contemporary, should have pushed his exegesis a little further, and told us where the "fresh grapes" came from that were just "pressed" in the season of Easter. Were they miraculously preserved from the vintage of the previous autumn, or were there hot-houses in Palestine in those days?

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

AT MEETING.

BY C. APLIN.

I see afar the city's spires;
And, as the light winds dally,
The distant music of the bells
Comes floating down the valley.
Here on the hillside as I lie
I see the flower-bells swaying,
And through the rustling forest leaves
The soft June breath is playing.

There, pillared arch and spreading dome,
And faces thronging under,
The sound of anthem and of psalm,
The organ's mellow thunder:
Here, song of bird and hum of bee,
The wild-flowers' iridescence,
The golden light, and over all
God's still, all-hallowing presence.

I wist not that the Father's love
Knows aught of times or places,
Or that one reverent soul that seeks
Through Nature's myriad faces
Shall miss His love. More grateful hymn
No temple-choir upraises,
Then here goes up among the birds,
The grass-culms, and the daisies.

Here all is truth: no hollow form
Calm Nature's thought perplexes;
No mazy creed, no tangled text,
Distorts her fine reflexes.
God's love and peace fill all the air
With sermon, song, and story;
Silent I rest and share awhile
The gladness and the glory.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS TO INDEX STOCK.

Mrs. F. W. Christern,	New York City,	One	share,	$100
Richard B. Westbrook,	Sonman, Pa.	"	"	100
R. C. Spencer,	Milwaukee, Wis.	Two	"	200
R. W. Howes,	Boston, Mass.	One	"	100
Chas. W. Story,	Boston, Mass.	"	"	100
E. W. Meddaugh,	Detroit, Mich.	Five	"	500
Jacob Hoffner,	Cumminsville, O.	One	"	100
John Weiss,	Boston, Mass.	"	"	100
W. C. Russel,	Ithaca, N. Y.	"	"	100
A. W. Leggett,	Detroit, Mich.	"	"	100
B. F. Dyer,	Boston, Mass.	"	"	100
James Purinton,	Lynn, Mass.	"	"	100
F. A. Nichols,	Lowell, Mass.	"	"	100
J. S. Palmer,	Portland, Me.	"	"	100
Robt. Ormiston,	Brooklyn, N.Y.	"	"	100
Mrs. A. L. Richmond,	Lowell, Mass.	"	"	100
Mrs. Benj. Ireson,	Lynn, Mass.	"	"	100
J. E. Oliver,	Ithaca, N.Y.	"	"	100
E. H. Aldrich,	Providence, R.I.	"	"	100
Geo. L. Clark,	Providence, R.I.	"	"	100
W. M. Jackson,	Providence, R.I.	Two	"	200
Mrs. E. B. Chase,	Valley Falls, R.I.	"	"	100
L. F. Garvin,	Lonsdale, R.I.	One	"	100
James Damon,	Ipswich, Mass.	"	"	100
Joseph A. Barker,	Providence, R.I.	"	"	100

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING AUGUST 22.

Arthur M. Lee, 10 cents; Mrs. J. R. Walker, 50 cents; Abram Young, 25 cents; L. T. Powers, 10 cents; Harriet C. Griffin, 40 cents; G. H. Foster, 60 cents; P. B. Sibley, $2; Mrs. C. Howard, $1.50; Thomas Sharpe, $3; C. W. Fillmore, $3; Amos Eldredge, $2; W. C. Macdonald, $3; E. M. Stevenson, $3; T. W. Robbins, 75 cents; A. A. Bell, $2; Mrs. C. G. Atherton, 25 cents; Jas. L. Munyan, $3; C. H. Wheeler, $3; S. R. Filley, $3; W. A. Bates, $3; Rowland Connor, $2; D. Ayers, $70; G. H. Foster, 76 cents; A. W. Kelsey, 50 cents; A. K. Loring, 40 cents; Miss Hedge, $3; O. F. Harris, $5; James Lyons, $4; R. Wilkin, $3; Ann A. Chapman, $1.25; John Stevenson, $3; Harvey Brown, $3; W. C. Fuller, $3; Jonathan Heistand, $1; J. F. Wilson, $1.25.

RECEIVED.

Books.

WILD FLOWERS OF THE WEST, or, Gleanings from the Stubble by an Old Prairie Hen. Chicago: H. H. Frary. 1874.

Pamphlets and Periodicals.

NATURAL RELIGION VERSUS REVEALED RELIGION. By Mrs. A. Besant.—ORTHODOX THEORIES OF PRAYER. By a Barrister.—THE NEED OF DOGMAS IN RELIGION. A Letter to Thomas Scott by Sara S. Hennell.—ON RESPONSIBILITY. By the late Rev. James Cranbrook.—THE TWO THEISMS. By Professor F. W. Newman. [Copied without acknowledgment from THE INDEX, with slight alterations.]—SIGNS OF THE TIMES.—All published by Thomas Scott, Esq., 11, The Terrace, Farquhar Road, Upper Norwood, London, S.E.

SERMONS by the Rev. Charles Voysey, at St. George's Hall, London. "Patience": July 5.—"Idolatry in Christendom": July 12.—"The Peace of God": July 19.—"Mediation and Intercession": July 26.

MEMORIAL DAY EXERCISES of Charles Russell Lowell Encampment, Post 7, G. A. R., May, 1874. Sermon by C. A. Bartol. Oration by J. L. Stackpole. Boston: J. A. Cummings & Co. 1874.

PROTECTION OF ANIMALS. By George T. Angell. Boston: American Social Science Association. 1874.

THE QUAKER DOCTRINE OF THE INNER LIGHT VINDICATED. By Charles E. Pratt. Lynn, Mass.: Geo. C. Herbert. 1874.

REPORT OF THE LIBEL SUIT, Llewellyn Powers vs. Theodore Cury. Houlton, Me.: 1874.

HALF-HOUR RECREATIONS IN POPULAR SCIENCE. No. 12. Circulation of the Waters, by H. W. Dove. What is Actinism? Boston: Estes & Lauriat. 1874.

AN EXPOSITION OF "SOCIAL FREEDOM." By the author of Magnetic Vital Cure, etc. Boston: 1874.

ATLANTIC MONTHLY for September. Boston: H. O. Houghton.

UNITARIAN REVIEW for August. Boston: L. C. Bowles.

OLD AND NEW for September. Boston: Roberts Brothers.

MEDICAL MIRROR for August. New York: A. K. Butts & Co.

PENN MONTHLY for September. Philadelphia: 506 Walnut Street.

SANITARIAN for September. New York: 234 Broadway.

The Index.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY

BY

THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

NO. 1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

Toledo Office: No. 35 Monroe Street. Julius T. Frey, Agent and Clerk.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

Francis Ellingwood Abbot, ... Editor.
Abram Walter Stevens, ... Associate Editor.
Octavius Brooks Frothingham, Thomas Wentworth Higginson, William J. Potter, Richard P. Hallowell, William H. Spencer, Mrs. E. D. Cheney, Rev. Charles Voysey (England), Prof. Francis W. Newman (England), Editorial Contributors.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

BOSTON, AUGUST 27, 1874.

SUNDAY LECTURES.—The Editors of The Index will lecture occasionally on Sundays, if desired, within a convenient distance of Boston.

Brevity is a great recommendation in articles for the press. Don't send us communications which are four hours in passing a given "point"!

Many distinguished astronomers were absent from the Hartford scientific reunion, in order to observe the transit of Venus, the great astronomical event of the year.

One luxury is within the reach of every man who is not afraid of poverty—the luxury of speaking his own thought instead of echoing another's. It is the only luxury that enriches.

The prohibitionist clergyman of Pittsfield, Maine, who sends us a communication in which he exclaims, "Please tells us if you are such a fool as to be sincere when you say, etc., etc.," and has no argument but similar expressions, is reminded that any cause is weak which is forced to resort to ungentlemanly language in self-defence. We forbear to publish an article which would tend to bring his profession into disrepute with sensible persons, and even with most of those who are not sensible.

It is necessary to say that we cannot undertake to return any unused manuscripts, and must request all correspondents either to retain copies of their communications (if they wish to preserve them) or else to withhold them altogether. This is from no unwillingness to oblige, but solely on account of the trouble caused by the request to return them. It is impossible in most cases to decide in advance whether a given article will be printed or not, and we wish to be spared the necessity of burdening our memory, which is usually overtaxed, with such commissions.

Mr. Aaron M. Powell, formerly editor of the Anti-Slavery Standard, is to edit the Northampton Journal, beginning September 12. The paper is to be a weekly of eight pages, at two dollars a year, and will discuss politics, reform, etc., besides the local interests of Western Massachusetts. Mr. Powell is well and very favorably known to the "original abolitionists"—that is, to those that have not become "original" since the war; and his many friends will doubtless combine to give him a handsome subscription list to start with. We shall look with interest for his first issue, and hope that his enterprise will abundantly prosper.

When the Golden Age says that "no change in the phraseology of a Preamble will draw them [the anti-Christians] back into the fellowship of the [Unitarian] denomination, so long as its whole substance and spirit are profoundly and characteristically Christian," we are constrained, notwithstanding our high regard for the individual members of that fellowship, to assent without qualification. There was a time when such a change as is alluded to would have retained us in that denomination, perhaps permanently; but going back is quite another thing. We have learned too much since 1866. Liberal Unitarianism will yet come forward to Free Religion; but Free Religion will not go back to Unitarianism, no matter how "liberal" it may be. If Unitarianism is bound to be Christian, let it keep its Preamble; if it is bound to be free, let it do a great deal more than to repeal that. The issue has at last been made before the world, and compromise is henceforth impossible.

JUDGING CHARACTER BY OPINIONS.

Two letters came to us very recently, and by a singular coincidence on the same day, which teach a lesson so serious and so grave that it ought not to be buried in our own heart. For the sake of one of the profoundest and most needed truths of Free Religion, we must repeat it here.

1. One of these letters says: "Your remarks in The Index of August 13 on the Woodhull miscreant are almost good. What is wonderful is that you 'know nothing against her,' and that she 'may be an angel of purity, and spotless as the driven snow,' after showing that she exultingly points to adultery as intrinsically 'divine.'" This is quite as much as we can quote; it would be more than we could quote, were it not that we have something to say which would be unintelligible without it.

The attacks on Mrs. Woodhull's personal character which the writer of this letter subsequently alludes to, and indorses, are perfectly well known to us. What we do not know is whether they are true; and we suspect that the writer knows just as little as we. When we said that "we know nothing against her," we meant just what we said; for every reader of the daily papers, not to mention the particular attacks referred to, must have heard a great deal against her. But we have also heard a great deal in her favor, and know that some of the purest people of the land have been her enthusiastic encomiasts. Who are we to sit in judgment on any one, in the absence of all certified facts of actual conduct? Is it so easy a thing to detect the calm, low voice of truth in the deafening noises of conflicting rumors? Is it so easy to be omniscient, to penetrate the secret motives of the heart, to fathom the inner purposes and read the hidden depths of any human soul? Especially in the case of a character which, be it good or bad, has stimulated assault and defence in a remarkable degree, it is the barest justice to express no opinion except on the basis of knowledge beyond dispute. We must repeat it more deliberately and emphatically than ever, that we know nothing against Mrs. Woodhull's personal character, and make no attack upon it. Further, we declare that she has uttered some of the finest, noblest, and truest things about human love that can anywhere be found. But nevertheless we consider her theory of "free love" in the main as false in principle, demoralizing in practice, and absolutely infernal in its certain effects upon society, if it should be carried out in social and legislative form. Between the woman and her words, we insist that distinction should be made—the one to be judged by the laws of morals, and the other to be judged by the laws of thought. Others may do as they please; but we refuse to strike an opponent, above all a woman, until the last ounce of brain shall have oozed out of our empty skull, and left us no argument but a blow.

"But she pronounces adultery divine! Is not that enough?"

No!

Two pictures seem to be before us: one of a vile woman seeking to drag her whole sex down to her own level, and gifted with intellect enough to seek it by propagating a theory sufficiently sophistical and plausible to delude many acute and well-intentioned followers,—the other of a wronged wife stung by her own sufferings to advocate the cause of women by passionately and enthusiastically pleading an extreme theory of their rights, however exaggerated it may be, however extravagant, however sure to be ruinous to their happiness, however sure to make them at last worse slaves than even in the days of barbarism; a woman so exasperated by the too numerous infidelities of husbands as to lose out of sight the sanctity of the marriage bond itself, and see no shame in the total denial of an obligation which sits so lightly on the consciences of men. Which of these two pictures is the life-likeness, if either, we do not know; nor is it at all necessary to determine. Our concern is with ideas, not with persons. We have lived long enough to learn that truth suffers a deplorable obscuration whenever the personality of any one attracts all eyes. The free-love theory will be neither more nor less true, whether Victoria C. Woodhull proves to be the Satan or the Christ of womankind. They who have outgrown equally the Satans and the Christs must come back at last to principles; and it is high time that radicals should prove themselves superior to the temptation to seek victory by dodging the question at issue and assailing the personal characters of the disputants. Victories so valueless are not worth the winning.

2. The other of the two letters we must quote at greater length. It is from one against whom we have no armor—from an Evangelical Christian whose wounding injustice is but proof of the depth, strength, and honesty of his religion, and could never have proceeded from his unperverted nature. Whatever might betray the authorship is carefully withheld. The letter is as follows: ". . . You are very wide of the mark in supposing I desire to repulse any affection; I need it enough, God knows. But it is right that you should understand that your course necessarily forfeits the respect of your friends; and without respect no hearty and cordial intimate intercourse is possible. It is a great sorrow to me, as it has been to your other friends, both living and dead, that you have not yet in all your changes and theories perceived—what common sense teaches the majority of mankind—that man has not infinite knowledge and infinite powers of appreciating the infinite universe; in other words, that without faith a man is as truly blind mentally, as he is physically without eyes. Certain truths, and those the greatest, can only be perceived in the attitude of a little child. I wish I could make you see how you are allowing a few bad men to play you off (as they would pull the wires of a jumping-jack) into supporting views and opinions which only lead to such developments as have lately come to light in Brooklyn, when practically adopted by the average of mankind. Thank God, you are safe yourself from such results, from the remaining effects of your early instruction and from the influences of your home; but you are unwittingly allowing yourself to throw your influence on that side. Few things would give me more pleasure than to have you wake up to this, as —— always believed would ultimately be the case, as you grow older. You may think this an unkind letter, but it is not so intended. I believe it reflects truly the feeling of your best friends, although many of them hesitate to tell you so openly. . . . Can you reconcile it to your conscience to put such a paper as The Index into the hands of your fine boys to corrupt their whole future life?"

We have not quoted these extracts to make any defence or reply. What needs defence is the spirit, fostered by the Christian religion, that prompts to such cruelty of injustice. But the injustice is not the writer's. Where faith is the supreme grace and virtue, want of it is the chief sin; and no consistent Christian who is imbued with the real spirit of the New Testament could hold a different opinion of any free thinker than the above. None the less drearily and sadly false is it, and none the less painfully unjust, to hold that the free thinker "necessarily forfeits respect." The new and better religion renders impossible such wretched, though conscientious, pharisaism. Respect belongs to every one whose life is nobly obedient to its own highest ideal, however imperfect it may be; and we are guilty of a great and grievous wrong to impute as sin to any one, man or woman, the inferences we draw from mere belief, as if they were actual deeds of evil. Christianity always does this—always assumes a bad moral or spiritual state as the necessary cause of "religious error," i. e. rational belief. But could there be a greater blunder or a more monstrous injustice? To teach the innocence and virtuousness of the love of truth, no matter whether it leads to "Reason or Rome,"—to teach that the ground of respect lies in the fidelity with which truth, however apprehended, is daily and hourly applied to the conduct of life,—to teach that man can commit no more heinous outrage against his brother than to hold him guilty for following in singleness of heart the best light that may be in him, and that, if there be a "sin against the Holy Ghost," it is verily this sin against human charity and fraternity,—these teachings have been ours from the beginning; and if they bring loss of respect, even so must it be. The injustice, having no remedy, must be endured. Nevertheless, while carrying a sense of being deeply wronged by one dearly loved, it is suddenly suggested that we turn about and inflict the same great wrong upon another! Shall we justify the pharisaic judgment passed upon us solely because of our belief, by passing a similar judgment upon Mrs. Woodhull solely because of hers? Or shall the radicals justify the course of the Church from time immemorial in branding them as vile and wicked on account of their opinions, by branding Mrs. Woodhull as such for no better reason? If there is direct evidence of immoral conduct on her part, that is a very different thing; we would interpose no shield between any one and the consequences of his own acts, and we have no squeamishness or sentimentality that would soften deserved retribution in the case of proved misconduct. But if there is no stronger evidence against Mrs. Woodhull than her published opinions, then to condemn her for those is to destroy the very corner-stone of radicalism. Condemn the opinions as much as you please, if they are false; but to make them the ground of personal censure is a great crime against freedom of thought and universal humanity. By this principle must we abide, as the only principle that will for a moment protect any one in the utterance of unpopular views—the principle that character must be judged by deeds alone, or by words that are themselves deeds. Opinion must be free, and without blame; and because we have had too much reason to feel keenly the injustice of an opposite principle, we refuse to be guilty of this injustice towards another.

F. R. A. ANNUAL REPORT.

The Report of the Proceedings of the last Annual Meeting of the Free Religious Association (1874) has been printed in pamphlet form, and is now ready for distribution.

It contains the annual report of the Secretary, and verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonneschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes with regard to Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian."

Members of the Association are entitled to the tract gratis. Price to others, single copy, 35 cents; package of four or more, 25 cents each. It can be obtained in Boston at A. Williams & Co.'s, and at the office of the Association, No. 1 Tremont Place. Applications for it from abroad may be sent to the office in Boston, or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER, Secretary.

LONDON LETTER.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Sir,—It is not very encouraging to take up the pen on board an Edinburgh steamboat, and to have to contend more with idle and restless thoughts than with the difficulties incident to literary pursuits carried on at sea.

But I must write now or I know not when, and ask your readers to show me some indulgence under the circumstances.

An event of great public importance enabled me to leave London with a lighter heart, and, being full of it, I must say something about it.

The Public Worship Regulation Bill has passed through the Committee of the House of Commons, and cannot again be tampered with.

Various kinds of tactics were in vain tried to overthrow it or defeat its principle.

For the benefit of those who are too ignorant of, or to indiffent to what is passing in the English Church, I may explain that the object of the bill is to give greater facility for the enforcement of the law, especially those laws which regulate, or are supposed to regulate, the conduct of divine worship in our churches.

By this measure the tediousness, uncertainty, and expense of the older machinery will be greatly modified, if not altogether obviated.

The immediate purpose of the bill is to restrain the illegal innovations of the ritualist party in the Church; and it was in a large measure owing to Mr. Disraeli's bold avowal that it was intended to "put down ritualism" that the crowded House carried the second reading of the bill by acclamation.

Among the most useful and determined supporters of the measure were Mr. Russell Gurney and Sir William Vernon Harcourt (known also as "Historicus" of the Times newspaper). Driving his adversaries back with their own weapons, he "smote them hip and thigh with a great slaughter," and made Englishmen feel that this was not a mere question of vestments and candles and incense, but of the supremacy of Church over State. "That fetched them," as the author of Hans Breitmann would have said. The representatives in Parliament have risen like one man to declare that priestcraft shall not reign over them. And this it is which makes my heart glad today.

Now I think it is due to liberals to justify this exultation at the crippling of the liberties of those who do not agree with us. At first sight, it seems to be only a new form of bigotry, an unpardonable inconsistency in one who has himself suffered a kind of persecution, to be advocating the exercise of legal restraints upon others.

And I fully grant that, were it merely a question of tolerating elaborate ritual, and all sorts of fantastic mummeries in religious worship, even when those mummeries symbolize a set of doctrines against which it was the very constitution of the English Church to protest,—even then, I say, it would be contrary to all the axioms of religious liberty to interfere with them, or to put them under pains and penalties.

Be it remembered, however, that this is not the head and front of the ritualists' offending. They are in league to overthrow and to supersede the civil power, or to reduce it to a state of complete subordination to what they please to call "the Church."

I had grave fears that the people of this country had sunk into a complete torpor on this vital point. I saw with increasing alarm the spread of that doctrine of laissez-faire in matters of religion and ecclesiasticism, which was giving so vast an opportunity to the boldness and arrogance of these priestlings. But the success of this bill and the overwhelming expression of downright Protestantism by the House of Commons have once more reassured me that England is not going to be sold back into Romanism, ancient or modern, genuine or spurious.

Mr. Gladstone, I also rejoice to say, took a step in favor of ritualism and sacerdotalism which has cost him his proud position as leader of the liberals in this country. I have more than once in your columns expressed my distrust of that very slow man on all points connected with religion; and, in an evil hour for himself, he showed his true colors and got what he deserved—the prompt desertion of the best and the most of his deluded followers.

Sacerdotalism in the Established Church of England is a much more serious and dangerous foe to liberty than the same thing is outside its borders. We are not afraid of Rome, whose priests and hierarchy are fearlessly tolerated among us, and allowed to practise their propagandism to the utmost of their power. We permit them to remain amongst us on the condition of behaving as if they believed that the State is above the Church. On that tenure they are unmolested, and rightly so. But for us to erect by our own carelessness or indifference an imperium in imperio, and suffer the great wealth and prestige of our clergy and churches to be used in undermining our Protestantism, and in efforts to place the Crown beneath the feet of the Church, would have been an act of surpassing folly and self-destruction. While we have a Church we must, for very life and liberty, put a curb into the mouths of the priests, and ride them with a strong hand. Meanwhile, all our other energies must be directed to the repeated exposure of the priestly fallacies, and to the elevation of the people who are still under their influence to a position of independence which they are entitled to assume.

I am, sir, very truly yours,

CHARLES VOYSEY.

JULY 30, 1874.

CHURCH TAXATION IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

It was stated a few months ago by a Washington correspondent of the press that a poor man in that city, owning a small brick house valued at $5,000 on G street, between Eighth and Ninth streets, was obliged to see it sold to pay the tax of $6,000 for street improvements, while the Catholic society which owned all the rest of the street escaped paying anything in consequence of church exemption from taxation. A more grievous case of injustice could not be imagined; and Mr. Ranney wrote to the Secretary of the Liberal League in Washington to learn if the statement was correct. The Secretary, Mr. Wood, replied that he could not ascertain that the story was true, but he added: "In the case of the special assessments levied here for street improvements the injustice of exempting church property was so manifest that the local press unanimously took ground for its taxation; and during the discussion of the question reference was made, I recollect, to cases like the one mentioned in the paragraph you enclose."

Mr. Wood also gives the following information on the same subject: "You will see by the Congressional Record that the bill (H. R. 3680) introduced by Mr. Wilson, of Indiana, on Wednesday, June 17, which passed the Senate on the 18th, provides for the taxation of all real estate, including church property, in the District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875. On the 19th, in the Senate (see Record dated 20th) a motion to reconsider was made by Mr. Boreman, because the bill included church property, which Mr. B. said was not generally understood at the time of the passage of the bill; but the motion was defeated. Church property in the District is therefore taxed during the current fiscal year, at least."

It will be remembered by our readers that, on May 18, Hon. George F. Hoar, of Massachusetts, presented in the House of Representatives a petition of 5,481 names, collected and forwarded by THE INDEX in response to blank petitions which it had disseminated at its own expense throughout the country, in favor of the repeal of the Act of June 17, 1870,—the Act which has exempted church property in the District since that date. This petition was printed in full at the time in the Congressional Record; and it is reasonable to suppose that this petition had some influence in producing the legislation above described by Mr. Wood. Such, at least, is the obvious suggestion of the facts themselves; and it ought to encourage all who are willing to work, and not merely to talk, to make renewed exertions for the abolition of the great injustice of tax-exemption.

THE BRUTE BALLOT AGAINST THE TRUTH.

You say that, in this phrase, I call certain intelligent and conscientious ministers and laymen "brutal." I am amazed at your construction, and do not wonder at your indignation. Every Latin and English dictionary, and our common tongue, teach, however, that in such a connection this is not the meaning of brute, whether the epithet be applied to a vote or a thunderbolt. Brute is indiscriminate, in the rough or mass, unreflective, gross, unwise, vain, or without proper effect. It were wide at least of my purpose or sense to consider it bestial in any fierce or cruel intent, as though the agents were brutes, as that word is coarsely and commonly flung; and I believe every scholar and thoughtful reader will understand this interpretation of my use of the term as patent and palpable, not over-refined or nice. To do a thing with brute force is not to do it with brutal ferocity, but as it were with main strength. Philology is morality, and accuracy neighbor to veracity; both of course as training, not conscious intent. I am quite enough excommunicated already not to covet more than my proper share of the proverbial theologic hate, impotent and superfluous drug as that is getting to be.

Perhaps some individuals may judge that the procedure of the Unitarian Association was brutal, in the full meaning of the adjective; and such the verdict of history, which does not much mind our little sensitiveness, may possibly decide it to be. There are critics, too, who will not hesitate to confound or identify the actors with their act, which I did not and should be slow and loth to do. I shall be hard to be convinced that the weight of the vote went with its count; for I rejoice to think highly of my fellows, of none more than my Unitarian brothers and friends. If the same question should be up at Saratoga, I hope the ballot will be thrown, with public knowledge of those to answer for their declaration whether a man is to be shut out because he no longer calls himself a Christian.

I hope, my friend, you are not going to be afraid to come through "Chestnut street." You will find plenty of Orthodoxy there to neutralize my heresy. Ivy, or dogwood, or sumach, does not poison some persons; and I do not think you would contract any disease in my house or study, where you are welcome to the best we can set before you, in our humble fare for body or mind. As to infallibility of the Pope, which you suspect me of pretending to, let me quietly rest under the imputed guilt of assuming it for myself, so far as it is indeed implied in presuming to have and express an opinion that some things are really against the truth! But whoever takes part in that duel fights with an enemy "not subject to casualty;" and, with all my zeal, I have no anxious concern for the result.

To my phrase, therefore, brute ballot against the truth, with its application, despite your last advices, I feel bound to adhere. I trust in the Conference what it refers to may be modified or revised. If by those whom in religion I have loved and honored that should be confirmed, I shall be unable to respect their course, however not doubting their honesty, and still prizing their good-will. We shall have come to a parting of the ways! At whatever cost of being accused of arrogance, I am obliged to characterize such a conclusion as was come to in Bulfinch Street Chapel as illustrating the general evil of unenlightened suffrage in this land, and not a true "ministry at large." None will regret more than I to have the Unitarian prestige become, if I may invent a word, postige—a back track. Cromwell says his soldiers, putting, as he bade, conscience into what they did, were afterwards never beat. We cannot settle truth by voting; yet let us put both conscience and science into our conduct and speech.

With alike hearty ecclesiastical dissent and personal regard, praying not to be compelled to trespass further on your columns, I am (not technically your's but) your —Christian Register.

C. A. BARTOL.

THE BIBLE IS VERY hard to digest for most stomachs. Even a codfish has tried it in vain. A copy of the book, bound in calf, according to the Edinburgh Scotsman, was lately found in the stomach of a codfish, and bore the name of William Sim, and the date 1830. It has been learned that Sim was a sailor of Dundee, who went to sea in 1834 and has not been heard from since. The supposition is that everything appertaining to him was devoured by this fish which had been tormented for forty years with an indigestible Bible in its stomach.—Globe.

IT HAS BEEN decided by an Iowa judge that it is necessary to health to chop wood on Sunday—if a family has any to chop.

Communications.

"THE MAN AFTER GOD'S OWN HEART."

MAPLEVILLE, R. I., Aug. 10, 1874.

MR. ABBOT:

Dear Sir,—On reading your article on the "Great Preacher's Ordeal," nearly every word of which I approve, I could not but object to the way in which you allude to the "man after God's own heart." I think a good many of your anti-Christian readers, and not a few of your Christian readers, will have a different feeling from that of "disgust or contempt," when the atrocities of the psalm-singing monarch of Israel are pointed out. Taking the narratives as they stand, I find David represented in the Old Testament as a ruthless, blood-thirsty, lustful villain, and at the same time a sound churchman and execrable hypocrite. His death was worthy of his life. Wickedness was in his mind, and cursing and bitterness were on his tongue. How it is that you can find anything to admire in such a type of fanaticism and immorality is what puzzles me.

Yours respectfully, JAMES RUDDLE.

[King David must be judged by the moral ideas of his own times, not of ours. He was only a barbarian of genius. But Mr. Ruddle has mistaken our meaning to some extent. We made no general eulogium on this Captain Jack of the Old Testament; though his crimes do not wipe out the beauty of his friendship for Jonathan, the magnanimity with which he spared Saul when in his power, or the noble dignity with which he refused to drink the water brought to him from the well of Bethlehem at the peril of his followers' lives. What we commended was the intensity and depth of his sorrow over his own wickedness, which showed that he was better than his deeds. Every generous man forgives the crime that is repented of; and he will be ashamed to reproach the Church for prizing the poems in which David pours out his penitence and aspiration for a nobler life. We are no friend to the Church, believing that it is the implacable foe of free thought; but we are incapable of blaming it for accepting the contrition of one whose atrocities it condemns as much as we.—ED.]

SETTLING PREMISES.

MR. ABBOT:—

It would be pleasant, now that the discussion of prohibition in your columns is coming to a focus, if the right of the State to forbid the sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage could be settled to the satisfaction of all the rational minds among your readers.

The first step in the direction of so happy an event is agreement upon premises. To this end I contribute the following thoughts suggested by an editorial note which appeared in THE INDEX of August 6, and closed with this summary: "The right of society to coerce the individual for its own protection, but for nothing else." This means, I suppose, that if the Legislature deems that the safety of society is threatened by ignorance in its citizens, and that the necessary means of removing that ignorance is the maintenance of schools by taxation, then "compulsory education" is allowable. Now, if it is also proved that the traffic in alcoholic beverages injures society, why may not, on the same principle, a law be made for its suppression? It certainly cannot be shown that every ignorant man inflicts injury upon his neighbors, any more than that every person who partakes of wine thereby becomes a criminal. The simple question is: Are, or are not, drinking saloons, however restricted, a nuisance, and can the evil be reduced to its minimum by any other means than prohibition?

It may be well, also, to pursue the argument to its legitimate result, so that if it be adopted we may see what radical changes will be required in the statute book. Does it not equally apply to the prohibition of prize-fighting, gambling, lotteries, prostitution, houses of ill-fame, the manufacture and sale of obscene literature and pictures, none of which injure society in any other manner than does the liquor traffic?

L. F. C. G.

[This proposal to settle premises is a "word fitly spoken."

1. The "protection of society" should first of all be understood to mean simply the protection of all the rights of all the members of society; and this universal protection of individual rights should be subject only to the limitations involved in their necessary coexistence. So considered, the greatest freedom of each compatible with the equal freedom of all would be the realization of the end sought. We must carefully avoid treating "society" as an entity distinct from the individuals that compose it; and we must remember that these individuals are "protected" in the only true sense when they are freed from unnecessary interference with their freedom.

2. The "legislature" usurps power, and becomes the chief assailant of private liberty, if it presumes to do more than to enact such laws as shall secure the unimpeded enjoyment of the maximum of private liberty. Its action should be strictly guided by the principles of Scientific Ethics, or it will become a nuisance to be abated. It would not do to concede to it the right to carry out the whims of its own members, irrespective of this universal standard. In short, it is only an agent, a tool, and not a sovereign power; and it is entitled to do nothing which conflicts with the right of each individual to be unmeddled with in his private life, unless he first meddles with others. This jealousy for the individual is the corner-stone of republicanism.

3. In its full meaning, "society" includes children as well as adults; and no adjudication of rights is equitable which ignores them. "Compulsory education" is simply a recognition of the rights of children, as entitled to full protection; and it means that the most vital interests of children shall not be sacrificed to the selfishness or ignorance of their parents.

4. No individual should be deprived of his rights who has not forfeited them by crime of some sort. The majority have no just authority for treating the innocent as guilty, or for punishing the innocent in order to punish the guilty.

5. All drinking saloons which are really nuisances may justly be held amenable to the laws. So may all public nuisances. Private individuals have a right not to be needlessly annoyed by other private individuals, for this is a direct infringement of their rights. But this principle does not apply to all drinking saloons, unless all drinking saloons can be shown reasonably to be nuisances; and the word nuisance cannot be loosely or arbitrarily defined.

Are we all agreed on these premises to begin with?—ED.]

PROHIBITION VS. COERCION.

EDITOR INDEX:—

It is not to be expected that an editor's views will meet with the approval of all his readers; hence it is not surprising that we should have such communications as appear in the last number of THE INDEX. Like one writer, I am made to feel sad by the position you take, and like another I am unable to reconcile an opposition to "prohibition" with advocacy of "compulsory education." The position is taken that society has a right to coerce the individual for its own protection; yet this rule insisted upon in the one case is ignored in the other. Ignorance and crime are no more inseparable than drinking and crime; and I am not sure that the evil to society in the latter case does not exceed tenfold that arising from the former. If it be just to tax the childless man for the cause of education, in order to prevent possible crime, it is scarcely just that the temperate man should be taxed to pay for the results of intemperance. If the selling of liquor is not a crime per se, neither is ignorance; and the probabilities are doubtless in favor of the latter. However, it is not a question of which is the greater evil, for that does not affect the principle; but I can see no reason for making the wide distinction in the cases except that under some circumstances liquor is believed by most persons to be useful, which is not claimed for ignorance.

But, though a believer in temperance, I am by no means a prohibitionist, and feel grateful to Dr. Lewis for taking the stand that a man has a right to eat, drink, and think as he pleases, so far as the law is concerned. It is with compulsory education that I am more concerned; and it grieves me to see professed liberals advocating this measure, so that I exclaim, After all this flourish of trumpets it is only a question of who shall be our master! Now I arraign compulsory education before the bar of reason upon the following indictment: That its premises are unsound,—that it is a bad example to the Orthodox,—that it is placing a powerful weapon in the hands of our enemies,—and, lastly, if all that its advocates could wish, it is still wrong as a principle of government.

On the first count I deny that there is any certain ratio between crime and ignorance; certainly not in individuals, and probably not in communities; for those who prey most upon society have intelligence sufficient to evade the law. Just here it may be mentioned that in our prison not two squares away lie two murderers; one of whom, it is reported, has taught school, and the other committed his crime while under the influence of liquor.

In the next place, prison statistics would doubtless show that the criminals had not been attenders of church, and therefore we should have compulsory church attendance. It is moral culture we need, and according to the views of the majority the Bible being the great teacher of morality we must by no means dispense with it in our schools.

In the third place, it may be stated that society is differentiating; and, while many are becoming more liberal, a greater number are growing more conservative. As the struggle between the two parties becomes more open, the majority, believing in their right to rule, and that people should be forced to do whatever is for their own good, will not hesitate to make use of the well organized educational machinery for the advancement of their own views.

But the most important point is the falsity of the position that government should compel people to act for their own good. This would justify all religious persecution, for all other considerations are trivial compared with eternal happiness; and beside this, the question of what is good will always be very much a matter of opinion and liable to variation. If we had an infallible government, the case would be different; but under the present condition of affairs, the idea of forcing ourselves by legislative enactments to be good or wise is like trying to invent perpetual motion.

It has been said that in religion we must choose between Rome and Reason; to which I would add that in our ideal government there is no logical position between one which exercises a supervision over every act of our lives and one which, doing nothing toward directing the energies of the citizen, merely secures to all an equal chance in the pursuit of happiness. If education should be supplied, so should food and clothing, which are still more essential; and not only is there no certain rule as to what departments the government should assume, but likewise no possible guide as to how much shall be done in any one of them. It will be seen that I am opposed to the whole public school system, and I also deny that the compulsory feature is a protective measure except in a circuitous way, in which the end does not justify the means. On the same principle, we should send missionaries to China as a protection against adulterated tea. State education is one of the steps toward centralization of power, and now we have propositions in some States for the adoption of a uniform series of text-books. This is but the logical outgrowth of the system, and its failure thus far is merely owing to incompleteness of organization.

Do not suppose that this is written in any other than a spirit of friendship; and if my views are not clearly expressed, let not that be an additional argument in favor of compulsory education.

Respectfully, etc., G. COPE.

WEST CHESTER, Pa., Aug. 8, 1874.

[It always gives us pleasure to find our views criticised in a spirit of fairness, as in the above letter. We are no pope, even in our own opinion, and recognize the fullest right of our readers to "have their say" in return. For the present, however, we must postpone a further discussion of the relation between "prohibition" and "compulsory education," contenting ourself with advising all interested in that question to re-peruse John Stuart Mill's Essay on Liberty. But we think all who accept the principles on which our public school system is based will sooner or later accept also the principle of "compulsory" education—a most unfortunate name for what would be far better termed universal or guaranteed education.—ED.]

WHAT WAS SLAVERY?

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

Voltaire somewhere asks very pertinently of certain Hebrew sins or shames: "If they were never perpetrated, why were laws enacted severely punishing them?"

Perhaps your readers may not care to read, nor you to print, a statute from South Carolina like the following; but as a law, it is part of slavery's history in that State, and need not be lost:—

"If any person shall wilfully cut out the tongue, put out the eye, castrate, or cruelly scald, burn, or deprive any slave of any limb or member, or shall inflict any other cruel punishment, other than by whipping, or beating with a horse-whip, cow-skin, switch, or small stick, or by putting irons on, or confining, or imprisoning such slave, such person shall, for every such offence, forfeit the sum of one hundred pounds, current money."

True, this is an old law; but it stood good while slavery stood. Nor did it contemplate cruelties any worse than thousands of slaves suffered in every slave State till slavery was no more.

I once astonished an audience by declaring that slaves were hunted with bloodhounds trained to the business, and advertised, and shot dead like wolves; and that the laws of some, if not all, of the slave States legalized such horrible murder. A sea-captain present disputed me, saying he had traded much at the South and knew better. He offered to bet ten dollars that my statement could not be proved. Another sea-captain, who knew me better, accepted the wager, and the money was deposited; not, however, with my approval.

I then asked what evidence would be sufficient? My opponent answered gruffly, "None that you can produce."

I then put into his hand a North Carolina newspaper containing the following official proclamation and advertisement:—

"State of North Carolina, County of Lenoir.

"Whereas, complaint hath been this day made to us, two of the justices of the peace for the said county, by William D. Cobb, of Jones County, that two negro slaves belonging to him, named Ben (commonly known by the name of Ben Fox) and Rigdon, have absented themselves from their said master's service, and are lurking about in the counties of Lenoir and Jones, committing acts of felony—these are, in the name of the State, to command the said slaves forthwith to surrender themselves, and return home to their said master. And we do hereby, by virtue of an act of the Assembly of this State, concerning servants and slaves, intimate and declare, if the said slaves do not surrender themselves, and return home to their master immediately after the publication of these presents, that any person or persons may kill and destroy said slaves by such means as he or they think fit, without accusation or impeachment of any crime or offence for so doing, and without incurring any penalty or forfeiture thereby.

"Given under our hands and seals this 12th day of November, 1836. B. COLEMAN, J. P. (Seal.)

"JAS. JONES, J. P." (Seal.)

"TWO HUNDRED DOLLARS REWARD.—Run away from the subscriber, a certain negro man named Ben (commonly known by the name of Ben Fox). Also, one other negro, by the name of Rigdon, who ran away on the 8th of this month."

The advertisement is abridged out of respect to your short columns. But the captain read the whole and gave up the controversy. He insisted on paying the bet of ten dollars, but the other captain refused to take it, saying that he only accepted the wager to see the case fairly met, though with no thought of taking the money. The other said the money was well won, and should go to the anti-slavery cause. So he gave it on the spot.

I could send you similar advertisements to the above, and more revolting in some respects, from Georgia, Florida, and South as well as North Carolina, and perhaps other States; but so many are enough for to-day.

Such was the slavery that Christian ministers, deacons, and members, both men and women, practised and defended from their Sacred Scriptures, Old Testament, New Testament, and Apocrypha to boot.

PARKER PILLSBURY.

CONCORD, N. H., August, 1874.

[Our "short columns" shall be stretched to their utmost capacity to admit authentic records on this subject.—ED.]

MISSIONARIES IN OREGON.

HUMBOLDT BASIN, Oregon, Feb. 12, 1874.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

Among the proceedings of a board of missions that met in New York last fall, a report was read from the Missionary Bishop of Oregon, showing the progress of missions in this State, and calling upon the Christians in the East not to forget those in the far West, as the missionaries in the far West have to contend with infidelity, paganism, and Indian heathenism. As I live in Oregon, where there is as much infidelity, paganism, and Indian heathenism in proportion to the number of inhabitants as in any other part of the State, it may interest your readers, if not those who contribute to support missions, to learn what progress missionaries make in combating the evils above mentioned.

The last missionary here said: "There is a hell, for the word of God distinctly proclaims it; but I hate to preach of it, though it is my duty to do so." This announcement from one who had recently come from the East to beat back the inroads of infidelity took his hearers by surprise, for they expected, after the announcement of so important a statement as the existence of hell, he would proceed to demonstrate that a wise, just, and merciful God had, out of the depths of his love, justice, and mercy, created hell for man's benefit. This shown, they would have been prepared to hear him say, "It is a pleasure to preach of hell, for it is God's word, and I am one of his chosen ones to proclaim it." As it was, need it be wondered at that there were those who thought he had his doubts of the existence of hell as strong as any of us?

He took occasion, also, to speak slightingly of "Tom Paine." This was unfortunate, for some of the infidels here had read Paine's Address to the Theophilanthropists of France, and one of them said to me that the reading of this address had done more to arrest a growing tendency toward atheism on his part than all the preaching he had heard in a quarter of a century. How unwise to disparage the life of one whose writings arrest what is considered the worst form of infidelity.

As our missionary proceeded with his discourse he seemed to feel the want of power to handle his subject; for he wished that he had the eloquence of a preacher he had recently heard preach in Iowa. Said he: "If I had, I would throw a barrel full over your heads." This wish had an unfortunate effect. Infidels, Indians, and Pagans are alike here surrounded by objects of large proportions. All around us giant mountains lift their huge, bald heads well up toward heaven. Valleys start from their very summit, and wander off a thousand miles toward the shore of the great Pacific. Now, had our missionary wished for enough of this preacher's eloquence to cover one of these mountains, or for enough to fill one of these valleys, so that the people living here would be illumined for a thousand years, the wish then would have been commensurate with our surroundings. But to wish for an amount that could be confined within wooden staves and hoops seemed meagre and discouraging to the last degree.

This account here will show somewhat the progress of the combat against infidelity. I have not heard of any missionary effort in behalf of the pagans who live all around us. Indeed, it seems to me that it would be embarrassing in the extreme to approach them in a missionary way. Although they outnumber us perhaps five to one, I only know one drunkard among them, and he, when drunkest, exclaims: "Me now all same as Melican man." This is equivalent to saying "all same as Christian;" for are we not a Christian nation? I wish it could be said that there is only one Orthodox Christian drunkard here. The pagan might say to the missionary that there is not a burial place around here in which there is not one or more Christians resting murdered by Christians, or at least by those brought up under Christian influences; whereas it would be rare to find in one of them a Pagan or a Christian murdered by a pagan. Would not the pagan look to our graveyards for an explanation of the Bible declaration that "whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed"? The adherents of Christianity will tell us that these things do not grow out of its teachings. If they do not, certainly some very strange things do. Said a man to me once: "If I thought the blood of Christ could not wash out my sins, I should be in despair, and not know which way to turn for help." Yet this man was one of the worst desperadoes I have ever known in nearly thirty years of border life. He had exhausted every form of dissipation, had killed one man in cool blood, and was afterward hung for murdering a second. As he had plenty of time to call upon Christ and beseech his forgiveness, he doubtless believed that the last struggle upon the gallows would raise him to the realms of eternal bliss, where all his sins would be blotted out and forgiven. Forgiven! Will the souls which he had sent prematurely to their graves (and according to Orthodox teaching to hell) forgive him while hell lasts? Blotted out! Better teach that the sun and stars will be blotted from the heavens as soon as the least event of our lives. As a stone thrown into a lake will send a ripple to the furthest extremity, so will a good or bad action thrown out work on eternally. Faithfully yours,

SAMUEL COLT.

THE ETHICS OF "SPECULATION."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

Your New Orleans correspondent "P.," who takes up the cudgel in defence of Mr. Hinckley's views on coöperation and the labor reformers, has a peculiar way of arguing. He charges me with saying, "in substance," that no coöperative system yet hinted at by man compares in excellence with the present division of labor and its relations to capital;" and to prove this charge he quotes from my communication to THE INDEX a passage in which I state that the system I advocate is the "coöperative system of Nature, based on the division of labor and self-interest checked by unfettered competition." Is there here a single word in favor of the present division of labor and its existing relations to capital, which "P." very correctly says "is but the product of human ignorance and imperfection"? Is the present system, with its legislative privileges granted to the few at the expense of the many; its innumerable legislative impediments to the international exchange of useful products and commodities; its trades unions' brutal interference with the inherent rights of labor, as well as of those who employ labor,—is all this the natural division of labor controlled by self-interest and unfettered competition?

Instead of thus charging me with saying what I did not say, why did "P." not rather point out who was injured, and how, by that old gentleman of his acquaintance who, "born with an infernal shrewdness which was equalled only by his utter indifference to human misery," has been "in the habit, in connection with several bankers, of buying up at a certain season such articles as were most necessary for the health and comfort of the community, and quietly storing them in out of the way places until the price advanced"? Would "P." have had him buy only things useless to humanity? Or would he have had him buy useful things only when they were high and scarce? To me, these operations of the old gentleman are evidence of a God-bestowed shrewdness or intelligence, which must enable its possessor to benefit himself, and, still more, the community in which he resides and operates, and finally humanity at large. To me, the general tone and scope of "P.'s" communication are proofs that, however good be his intents and motives, he is not fully competent for the position he assumes as teacher of the great principles that control production, exchange, and consumption, the great bases of society. Had "P." thoroughly analyzed these questions he would have discovered that his old acquaintance did nothing more than what every one should do who intends to supply the future wants of his fellow-beings; namely, buy when abundance and cheapness prevail, to sell when scarcity and dearness approach. By doing this the producer is protected against unremunerative prices, which would check future production; undue exportation to distant districts or foreign countries is checked; and subsequent undue scarcity and exorbitant prices are prevented. Speculative operations in anything may cause an earlier or greater rise of prices than would otherwise take place; but in the end, taking a certain period of time, it insures better average prices to producers, and lower average prices to consumers, than if no speculative operations had taken place. The reason of this is very simple. Speculation, by checking an undue depression of price, and by the rise of price it subsequently creates, checks consumption and stimulates production, as well as importations from other sections of the world; and in a short time the actual supply and the future production will be greater than would be the case had there been no speculative operations. The consumers are thus more benefited in the end than they are injured in the commencement by the operations of speculators, whether based on facts that warrant these operations or quite the contrary. Anything that leads to present economy and increased future production is always in the end beneficial to humanity.

I perfectly accept "P.'s" conclusions "that labor must work out its own salvation, and that knowledge is its only savior;" and that "how to read aright Nature's laws, discriminating between them and those customs and habits which from age have become a second nature, is the problem." But of all ancient ideas and customs none have been more abused to the injury of humanity than the distribution of charity through the government and the Church. If charity were really so great a virtue as the Church has long maintained it to be, would its exercise by the Church and by the government injure both the recipients and society, as it invariably has done in the past? Can "P." point out a single true virtue the practice of which produces evils of any kind to any one?

And does "P." not believe that there is sufficient sympathy for the sufferings of others in ordinary human nature to insure from the voluntary contributions of individuals all—nay, more than all—that is necessary to supply the real wants of every one in any way entitled to charity, without the intervention of either Church or State? Does he believe in the dispensation of charity as a means of making proselytes to religious sectarianism, or securing votes to a political party? Can he point out a better disposition to be made by the State of all useful things produced and accumulated by any one than to leave them in the hands of those who produce and accumulate them, or of those to whom these transfer them for an equivalent freely agreed upon between the sellers and the buyers? Does he believe that it is injurious to humanity that those who do not labor and produce shall know want and suffering? C. M.

NEW YORK.

THE OLD ARGUMENT--"STOP MY PAPER!"

LOCKPORT, N. Y., Aug. 8, 1874.

EDITOR INDEX:—

There is whiskey enough drank in my family; I don't need your paper as an inciter in that direction. I don't think your views on the question will meet the approval of high-minded, noble infidels—or perhaps I have formed too exalted an opinion of them.

Rum-guzzling belongs to the Dark Ages, Bible heroes, etc. Men who like to drink whiskey like to make others think it can't be stopped, and that it is good for them.

I'll stick to the Investigator, which will at least attempt to stop my family from the ruins of drunkenness.

Enclosed find fifty cents, which I think will pay all indebtedness, and please stop it.

Yours for sobriety, WM. C. MOORE.

NEW BEDFORD, Aug. 11, 1874.

MR. ABBOT:

Dear Sir,—Please discontinue my paper sent here to New Bedford. The reason I think you ought to be made acquainted with: It is the very captious way you have of treating the social question. It is hardly with that degree of fairness we had expected from such a quarter. So please stop it, when the year is out.

Respectfully yours, JOHN W. HIGGINS.

[In justice to our subscribers we ought to say that the above are the only letters of the kind we have received for a long time. But they show how much some liberals have yet to learn of the elements of true liberalism.—ED.]

ORTHODOXY A SUICIDE.

NEWPORT, R. I., July 8, 1874.

F. E. ABBOT, ESQ.:

Dear Sir,—We are hearing almost daily this, that, or the other dogma of the Church discarded by eminent divines.

It would be interesting to see a list in tabular form of the rejected dogmas with the name of the dissentient affixed to each, if possible in his own words, and then see how much of Orthodoxy would be left, supposing them all to have the truth.

Yours, SAMUEL R. HONEY.

[Such a list would be a curiosity in religious literature. Who will take the trouble to compile it?—ED.]

MR. M. D. CONWAY has an almost infallible tact in putting into his letters from London just what the people hereabouts would like to read. In his latest, he refers to a rumor which had reached him in London concerning a lecturer who has recently traversed Ohio, speaking against Darwinism, and resorting to the method of contemptuous personal allusions to Mr. Darwin himself. The lecturer has described Mr. Darwin as of so mean and degraded a presence as to justify the hypothesis that he may himself be the veritable missing link of his own philosophy. Besides, the comic pictorial papers in England have several times encouraged such an idea by depicting Mr. Darwin's head fastened to the body of an ape. In reply to all such representations Mr. Conway thinks it worth while to mention that the great writer is a man of the most impressive personal appearance. "Large and noble in figure, he has a head and face much more likely to remind one who sees him of Michael Angelo's magnificent bust of Moses, in Rome, than of any inferior being. Mr. Darwin has not, indeed, any soft, pink-white beauty; but his massive forehead, his dome-like head, his blonde complexion, his long, flowing beard, are such as a physiognomist would pick out among a thousand as belonging to a man of mark." When Colonel Higginson saw Darwin a year or two ago, he said that his appearance was best represented by the word "majesty." Darwin belongs to one of the oldest families in England, and in it, for many generations, there have been wealth, refinement, and the love of intellectual pursuits. His home is pervaded by that atmosphere of personal and social culture that is obtained only by generations of improvement. The English have a word which they use in a very definite sense. It is the word "gentleman." It is the word by which they would describe Charles Darwin. Therefore he cannot be the missing link.—Christian Union.

A LITTLE BOY that went to church was cautioned to remember the text, which was: "Why stand ye all the day idle? Go into my vineyard, and whatsoever is right' I will pay thee." Johnny came home and was asked to repeat the text. He thought it over a while, and then cried out: "What d'ye stand round here doin' noffin' for? Go into my barnyard and work; I'll make it all right with you."

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12		Insertions, 10c per line.
" 13 "	25	"	8	"	"
" 26 "	51	"	6	"	"
" 52		"	5	"	"

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

CIRCULATE! Circulate!! Circulate THOSE PETITIONS. Don't feel satisfied when your petition is a yard long, unless you have asked every one to sign it. Get good, influential names.

GET EVERYBODY.

Don't neglect to show the petition to any one, because he is a stockholder in some church, or other exempted property, as many such persons admit the justice of the demand; and those who will not should be made to take the responsibility of refusing to sign it.

Don't delay! We want the petitions returned early.

Per order of EXEC. COMM. of the BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,

has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, assisted by ABRAM W. STEVENS, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
THOMAS W. HIGGINSON, Newport, R.I.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 4.

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

ASSOCIATE EDITOR:

ABRAM WALTER STEVENS.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
T. W. HIGGINSON, Newport, R.I.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
F. W. NEWMAN, England.
CHARLES VOYSEY, England.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS,

OF THE

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. Abbot, D. A. Wasson, T. W. Higginson, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. Wasson on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. Abbot, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. Wasson on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. Abbot on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age;" an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. Higginson on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potter on "Religion Old and New in India;" also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Sympathy of Religions, by T. W. Higginson. 25 cents.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 10 cents, singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

Price.

ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets 1.50
Concord Days 1.50
Records of a School. A new edition 1.50

ALCOTT (LOUISA M). Little Women. Two vols 3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories 1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl 1.50
Little Men 1.50
My Boys, &c. 1.00
Shawl-Straps 1.00
Work; A Story of Experience 1.75

ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS. 1.50

ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism 2.00
New Poems 2.00
Literature and Dogma 1.50

AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. 1.50
Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine 2.00
Edelweiss 1.00
German Tales 1.00

BACON'S Essays 1.00

BAGEHOT on the English Constitution 2.25
Physics and Politics 1.50

BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy 1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol 1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol 5.00

BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms. 2.50

BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations 3.00

BARTOL (REV. C. A). Radical Problems 2.00
The Rising Faith 2.00

BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols 5.00

BIBLE in the Public Schools.
Records, Arguments, and Decision in the case of John D. Minor et al. vs. the Board of Education of the city of Cincinnati: et al. in the Supreme Court of the City of Cincinnati 2.00
Arguments of Ramsey, Sage and King in favor of the use of the Bible ..... .50
Arguments of Stallo, Hoadley and Mathews against the use of the Bible ..... .50
The Opinion and Decision of the Supreme Court of Ohio in the above case ..... .25

BRACKETT (ANNA C.) The Education of American Girls.

BROOKS' (CHARLES T.) Translations. The Layman's Breviary 2.25
The World-Priest 2.25
The Tall Student ..... .75

BUECHNER'S Force and Matter 3.25

BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols 6.00

CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol ..... .80

CARPENTER (DR. W. B.) The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions 3.00

CERVANTES' Don Quixote 1.50

CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing 1.50

CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet Naturalist. With Memorial Verse. 2.00

CHENEY (MRS. E. D). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside 1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience 1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated 1.50

CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions 3.00
Common-Sense in Religion 2.00

CLARKE (Dr. E. H.) Sex in Education 1.25

CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World ..... .75

COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. 3.00
Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays 5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age ..... .20

CONWAY (MONCURE D.) The Earthward Pilgrimage 1.75

CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol 2.00

CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE; Its True Aims and Requirements A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans 2.00

DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship 2.50

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies" 1.50
The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor" 1.00

DARWIN'S Origin of Species 2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols 4.00
Journal of Researches 2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals 3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated 6.00

DESCARTES (RENE.) Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences 2.25

DICKENS' Child's History of England 1.50

DUHRING (JULIA.) Philosophers and Fools. A Study 2.00

ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each 1.00
Comprising—
Adam Bede.
Romola.
The Mill on the Floss.
Felix Holt.
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life.
The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols 3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols 3.50
Wit and Wisdom of 1.25
The Spanish Gypsy 1.50
How Lisa Loved the King ..... .50

EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.. 2.00
Essays. Second Series 2.00
Miscellanies 2.00
Representative Men 2.00
English Traits 2.00
Conduct of Life 2.00
Poems. With Portrait 2.00
May-day and Other Pieces 2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold 1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold 1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols 5.00
Society and Solitude 2.00

EVANS (E. P., Ph. D). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanase Coquerel the Younger 1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols 5.00

FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion 2.00

FEUERBACH (LUDWIG.) The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation. 3.00

FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.. 2.00

FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity 1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers ..... .20
Child's Book of Religion 1.00
Life of Theodore Parker 3.00

FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols 9.00

GALTON (FRANCIS.) Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences 2.00

GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol 5.00
Elective Affinities 1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols 3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham 1.00

GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life 2.00
Literary and Social Judgments 2.00
Creed of Christendom 3.25

GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait 5.00

HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter s Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France 1.50
Thoughts about Art 2.00
The Unknown River 6.00
The Intellectual Life 2.00
Chapters on Animals 4.00

HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second 1.00
Child World. Part First 1.50

HAMILTON'S Lectures.
1. Metaphysical Lectures 3.50
2. Logical Lectures 3.50

HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol 2.00
Twice-Told Tales.
Mosses from an Old Manse.
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.
The Marble Faun.
The English Note-Books.
The American Note-Books.
The French and Italian Note-Books.
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.

HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers ... 1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance 1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment 1.50
Atlantic Essays 2.00
Oldport Days 2.50

HOWELLS'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey 2.00
Suburban Sketches 2.00
Venetian Life 2.00
Italian Journeys 2.00
A Chance Acquaintance 1.50

HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "'Ninety-Three".. 1.75

HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits 10.50

HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life 1.75

HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses 1.25
Bits of Travel 1.50

HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature 1.25
On the Origin of Species 1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism ..... .50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals 2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews 1.75

INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems 2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen 1.50
Songs of Seven 2.50

INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skelligs 1.75
Studies for Stories 1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series 1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours 1.25
Mopsa the Fairy: A Story 1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect ..... .60

INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures 2.00

INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES.
No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall 1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot. 1.50
III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith 1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain 1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq 1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr 2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine 1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew. 1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D 1.50

JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers. 1.50

JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India 5.00

JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian 2.50

JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols 12.00

KERR (ORPHEUS C). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous 2.00

LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols 4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols 6.00

LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings 4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics 2.00

LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham 1.50

LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. 3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols 4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed 3.00

LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life. 1.50

LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D'C). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews 1.00

LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols 4.00
Prose Works. Portrait 4.00

LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols 4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series 1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series 1.50
Among my Books 2.00
My Study Windows 2.00

LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Posies for Children. .75

LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man.. 2.00
Pre-historic Times 5.00

LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols 8.00
Elements of Geology 3.50

MACDONALD (GEORGE.) The Vicar's Daughter 1.50

MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife 3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. 3.00
Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848 ..... 3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann 1.25

MARTINEAU (JAMES.) Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol 2.50
The New Affinities of Faith ..... .25

MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind ..... .75

MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire 1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations 1.50

MILL (JOHN STUART.) Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each 2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each 2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. 1.50
Political Economy. New and revised edition 2.50
The Subjection of Women 1.25
Essay on Liberty 1.25
Representative Government 1.50
Autobiography 2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works... 1.0

MILLER (JOAQUIN.) Songs of the Sierras. 1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands 1.50

MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species 1.75

MORLEY (PROF. JOHN.) Voltaire 2.00
Rousseau. 2 vols 5.00

MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-Time Stories 1.50

MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series 2.50
The Same. Second Series 3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume 2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion 2.00

NASBY (PETROLEUM V). Swingin' Round the Cirkle 1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky 1.50

NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.). A History of the Hebrew Monarchy 4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed 2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations. 2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy 1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical 4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism. .25
Against Hero-Making in Religion ..... .25

PARKER (THEODORE.) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion 1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols 4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols 3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings 1.50
Historic Americans,—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham... 1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence... 1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations,—A.D. I. and MDCCCLV. A Christmas Story ..... .60

PARSONS (THEOPHILUS.) The Infinite and the Finite 1.00

PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar 1.50
The Trotty Book 1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts 1.50
Hedged In 1.50
The Silent Partner 1.50
What to Wear? 1.00

PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition 2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates 2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena 1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts 4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc 5.00
The Expanse of Heaven 2.00

ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante 2.50

SCHELLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies 6.00

SCIENCE PRIMERS:
1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S... .50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe ..... .50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With illustrations ..... .50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth ..... .50

SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols 31.25

SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition 2.00

SMILES'S (SAMUEL.) Self-Help 1.50

SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical 1.25
First Principles 2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Æsthetic 2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers 2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed 2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols 5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols 5.00
Philosophy of Style ..... .50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.. 2.00
Sociology 2.00

SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus ..... .25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics 9.00

STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny 1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin ..... .00

STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New 2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols 12.00

TAINE'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols 7.50
The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske 2.50

TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems 1.75

THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.. 1.25
Vanity Fair.
The Newcomes.
Adventures of Philip.
Pendennis.
The Virginians.
Esmond, and Lovel the Widower.
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol. 1.25

This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.

1. Barry Lyndon, Hoggarty Diamond, &c.
2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.
3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c.
4. Four Georges, Humorists, &c.
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unreprinted Pieces.

THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals 1.50

THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods 2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.. 2.00
The Maine Woods 2.00
Cape Cod 2.0
Letters 2.00
A Yankee in Canada 2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimac Rivers 2.00

TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind 2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols 5.00

TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer 1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People 2.00
Light and Electricity 1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps 2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion 2.00
On Sound 2.00
Radiant Heat 5.00
Forms of Water 1.50
Lectures on Light 1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall ..... .50

TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures 1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings 1.50

VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each 3.00
Vols III. IV. and VI., each 3.75
The Voysey Appeal ..... .50
Voysey's Defence at York ..... .50

WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden 1.00
Saunterings 1.50
Back-Log Studies 2.00

WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion 1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols 6.00

WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life 1.50
Essays and Reviews 3.00
Character and Characteristic Men 1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.... 1.50
Success and its Conditions 1.50
Washington and the Revolution ..... .30

WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life 1.50
We Girls: A Home Story 1.50
Real Folks 1.50
The Other Girls 2.00
Pansies. A volume of Poems 1.50

WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols 4.00
Child Life 3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place, Boston.

ROWLAND CONNOR,

Having finished his engagement with the Free Congregational Society of Florence, will answer invitations to lecture for liberal societies. Address at

JAMAICA PLAIN, MASS.

CHARLES SUMNER.

A fine likeness of Massachusetts' great Senator, tae copy of a recent Photograph by Black, is for sale at THE INDEX office, and will be sent by mail to any address on receipt of the price—fifty cents.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE BOUND INDEX FOR 1873.

The bound volume of THE INDEX for 1873 (Volume 4) will be promptly forwarded to any address on receipt of $3, by express, at the purchaser's expense. A complete file for the year can be furnished in no other form.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A CHEAP OFFER!

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 14 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 75 CENTS.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.

TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston.

CHARLES SUMNER'S

GREAT WORK.

PROPHETIC VOICES

CONCERNING AMERICA.

By CHARLES SUMNER.

Fine Edition, Tinted Paper, with Steel Portrait, Crown 8vo., Cloth extra, $2.

Aside from its literary and historical merits, this volume has a special interest, from the fact that it was the last work on which r. Sumner was engaged before his death.

"PROPHETIC VOICES" will be found of great value to all who take an interest in the history of our country, so full is it of passages in which the unexampled prosperity of our land has been foretold by philosophers, poets, statesmen. and orators, of whom the lamented author has also given interesting sketches.

Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

BUST OF

THEODORE PARKER,

BY

SIDNEY H. MORSE.

Dignity, reverence, sweetness, vigor, equipoise, breathe through the clay; the artist has so filled his own heart with appreciation of that noble life that he has been able cunningly to mould it into those delicate lines which the character had wrought on the living fibre. We are tempted to exclaim, as we stand beside it, as the old artist did to his perfected work, "Speak then!"—Hannah E. Stevenson.

All the characteristics of my husband are in the bust,—his greatness, his goodness, his tenderness, his love. You cannot give life to clay or marble; but you can represent it, and this Mr. Morse has done.—Lydia D. Parker to Hannah E. Stevenson.

The eyes, though but of clay, are gleaming with possible indignation, with possible tears; the lips are set firm with the resolution of him who, like Paul, could "fight a good fight" as well as "give a reason."—Samuel Longfellow.

The first time I have seen Theodore Parker since he died.—Wm. Sparrell.

The best representation of Mr. Parker ever executed in clay.—Boston Daily Globe.

The face is strong and noble as it should be. The likeness is good.—Boston Daily Advertiser.

Nothing appears for beauty alone, or finish, or to show the vanity of the artist. All is forgotten in the man—the true, real, Yankee man, Theodore Parker.—L. S. H. in the Golden Age.

Copies of this Bust, finely finished n plaster, $10 each. Boxing for transportation, $1 extra. Freight or expressage paid by party sending order. Weight of box about fifty pounds. Orders may be sent to

S. H. MORSE,
Room 13, 25 Bromfield St., Boston, Mass.

STUDENTS FITTED for any College.

Please address
EMILY J. LEONARD,
Meriden, Conn.

CONSTANT EMPLOYMENT.—At home, male or female, $30 a week warranted. No capital required. Particulars and valuable sample sent free. Address, with six-cent return stamp. C. ROSS,
Williamsburg, N. Y.

FREE DISCUSSION

is held at HOSPITALLER HALL, 593 Washington Street, Boston, every Sunday, at 10½ A.M., 2½ and 7½ P.M. All that relates to the Religious, Political, and Social interests of mankind constitute the subjects for discussion. THE INDEX and Index Tracts are for sale every Sunday at Hospitaller Hall.

WEST NEWTON ENGLISH AND CLASSICAL SCHOOL.—The twenty-first school year of this Family and Day School, FOR BOTH SEXES, will begin Wednesday, September 16, 1874.

For particulars address
NATH'L T. ALLEN, Principal,
West Newton, Mass.

At home Saturdays.

TO NEWSPAPER PUBLISHERS.

Having conveniences for doing the best of newspaper printing at reasonable prices, I should like to contract for composition alone, or for composition, press-work, and mailing, for one or more weekly papers.

Best of references given, and satisfactory work guaranteed. GEO. H. ELLIS,
7 Tremont Place, Boston.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c., of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing

THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX.

Bound volumes of THE INDEX for 1871, 1872, and 1873, will be sent by express (at the purchaser's expense) on receipt of $2.50, $2.50, and $3.00 respectively. These volumes are exceedingly valuable singly, irrespective of each other; for the important essays and other articles they contain are of permanent interest, and will furnish as instructive reading twenty years hence as to-day. No more valuable present could be made to a friend struggling out of Orthodoxy than one of these volumes.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

WARREN'S

TRUE CIVILIZATION.

Price 50 cents.

PRACTICAL DETAILS,

showing the workings of the

COST PRINCIPLE.

Price 25 cents.

For sale by

S. H. MORSE,

25 Bromfield St., Boston.

FOR SINGING CLASSES!

THE

SONG MONARCH!!

By H. R. PALMER, assisted by L. O. EMERSON.

A book admirably fitted for the use of Singing School Teachers, having, in addition to a compact theoretical course, more than 180 pages filled with Glees, Quartettes, Airs, Tunes, &c., &c., pleasant to sing anywhere, and constituting a most agreeable course of study. A good book also for College Choirs, for Seminaries, and Social Sings.

Price 75 cts., or $7.50 per dozen.

FOR CHOIRS AND CONVENTIONS.

THE LEADER!!

is the Leader of all Church Music Books for 1874 and 1875, being the first in the field, and of a character that cannot be excelled.

By H. R. PALMER, of Chicago, assisted by L. O. EMERSON, of Boston, containing also compositions from the hands of large numbers of American Music writers.

For CONVENTIONS, CHOIRS and SINGING CLASSES.

The LEADER has 86 pages of Singing School Music, the same as that in the Song Monarch, and large numbers of new Tunes and Anthems, all by the best composers.

Price $1.38, or $12.00 per dozen.

Specimen copies of the above book mailed, post-paid, for retail price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO.,

BOSTON.

CHAS. H. DITSON & CO.,
711 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE.

Our organization some time since decided to direct its efforts for the present towards securing the

Repeal of the Laws

whereby church and other corporate property is unjustly exempted from its share of the burden of taxation.

As a means to this end, we have published for general circulation several thousand copies of a

TRACT

on Church Exemption, being the article by Mr. Abbot which appeared in THE INDEX of Nov. 27.

We have already issued three editions, the last of which is nearly exhausted.

We desire soon to issue

Another Large Edition

of this and other tracts on the subject, so that we can place a copy in the hands of

EVERY VOTER IN THE STATE,

and generously to supply the calls for them in other States.

To do this, we need funds; for, although we have made arrangements for printing the Tract at very low cost, it is impossible for the Boston League, with its various other expenses, to bear the entire expense alone.

Will not, then,

All Friends of the Movement

come forward and help us with liberal donations?

We frequently receive communications from parties wishing tracts to distribute, asking how much they shall pay. To such we reply that the cost to us is about $2.50 per thousand, and we shall be pleased to furnish them at this price per thousand, or 30 cents per hundred, to all who will circulate them. But all additional donations will be gratefully received for the purpose of circulating them gratuitously throughout the country.

Last winter this subject was brought before the Legislature of the State, and many petitions were presented asking a repeal of these unjust laws.

The matter is still in their hands, and at the next session will undoubtedly be acted upon. Meanwhile the

Voice of the People,

favoring justice and equity, should be distinctly heard.

We shall soon be ready to send out

BLANK PETITIONS AGAIN,

thus giving an opportunity to those who have not already done so, to protest against this continued wrong.

Let us make it

THE LARGEST PETITION

ever presented to our legislative body.

Will those willing to assist in circulating these petitions please

SEND IN THEIR NAMES?

We would say, also that we feel deeply the need of

Other Organizations

in this State, to coöperate with us in securing equality and justice, by pressing the "Demands of Liberalism." If, in any locality, there are those who are inclined to

Form a Liberal League,

we are ready to render such assistance as lies in our power.

LIBERALS!

If all will unite and work, the results sought can be accomplished

Address

BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE,

NO. 1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

Per order of the
EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

NONPAREIL Farm Feed, Bone, Drug, and Hand-grinding MILLS. Ten Sizes. Also Cotton-Seed Hullers. Illustrated pamphlets free. Address

SEDGEBEER, SHEPARD & MILLER,
181 East Front Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

THE AMERICAN EDITION

OF

MONCURE D. CONWAY'S

SACRED ANTHOLOGY,

A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES,

has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.

Address THE INDEX,
1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,

BANKERS,

LEROY, MINN.

Branch Office, 137 Broadway, N. Y.

Money Invested in First Mortgages on Improved Farms in Minnesota and Iowa, running three to five years, with Coupon Interest Notes, drawing 9 per cent. annually in advance, or ten per cent. paid semi-annually in advance, or 12 per cent. per annum, annually, free of expense to the Loaner.

☞ 10 per cent. paid on receipt of money at the Bank, or in New York, till invested.

For Full Particulars, send for Circular.

137 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

REAL ESTATE SECURITIES, paying 8 to 10 per cent. interest, or

Investments in Real Estate in Chicago and vicinity,

if judiciously made, are the best and safest modes of employing capital. The old

Real Estate and Loan Agency

OF

ERNST PRUSSING, 143 RANDOLPH STREET

Chicago (Established 1853),

Guarantees perfect title and ample security in all its Real Estate Loans.

Firstclass securities always on hand. Interest and principal collected without charge. Real Estate Investments made on commission or on shares; taxes paid, &c.

Orders of capitalists and real estate owners respectfully solicited.

REASONS FOR USING THE

EUREKA SPOOL SILK.

It is full length. It is full size. It is smooth and elastic, and is equally adapted to hand or machine use.

Many kinds of spool silk are a perfect fraud, being not only shorter in length, but a much finer size than they are represented to be, and of so poor a quality as to be unfit for use. The ladies will always find the Eureka Silk exactly as represented. Every spool is warranted, and the manufacturer's name indelibly branded on every spool. Call for it.

RADICAL AND LITERARY

LECTURES

BY

JOHN WEISS,

RADICAL LECTURES.

The Idea of Hereafter.
An Act of Faith.
Intelligence in Religion.
Religion and Science.
Heart in Religion.

SHAKSPEARIAN LECTURES.

FIRST SERIES.

1. Cause of Laughter.
2. Irony and Humor.
3. Dogberry, Malvolio, Bottom, Touchstone.
4. Ajax in Troilus and Cressida: The Porter in Macbeth: The Fool in Lear.
5. Falstaff.
6. Hamlet.

SECOND SERIES.

1. The Women of Shakspeare.
2. Portia.
3. Ophelia.
4. Macbeth and Lady Macbeth.
5. " " " "
6. Contrast in Shakspeare's Characters.

Address JOHN WEISS,
32 E. Brookline St., Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year. LIBERTY AND LIGHT. Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 5. BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 3, 1874. WHOLE NO. 245.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF ——.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in ——:

Also, as soon as five hundred such Liberal Leagues shall have been formed in different places, to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be hereafter called, in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the needed reforms.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the National Convention of Liberal Leagues when called together.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

So far as I am concerned, the above is the platform of THE INDEX. I believe in it without reserve; I believe that it will yet be accepted universally by the American people, as the only platform consistent with religious liberty. A Liberal League ought to be formed to carry out its principles wherever half a dozen earnest and resolute Liberals can be got together. Being convinced that the movement to secure compliance with these just "Demands" must surely, even if slowly, spread, I hope to make THE INDEX a means of furthering it; and I ask the assistance and active co-operation of every man and every woman who believes in it. Multiply Liberal Leagues everywhere, and report promptly the names of their Presidents and Secretaries. Intolerance and bigotry will tremble in proportion as that list grows. If freedom, justice, and reason are right, let their organized voice be heard like the sound of many waters.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

BOSTON, Sept. 1, 1873.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State; and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation.

GLIMPSES.

BY F. E. A.

UNITARIANISM is the "Mutual Friend" of Christianity and Free Religion.

THE POPE is reported to have just invested eighteen millions of francs in Belgian securities. How does the good old gentleman expect to get through the "needle's eye" with all that luggage?

THE SUPREME COURT of Illinois has forbidden public school directors to discriminate between white and black children by building separate schoolhouses for each class. This is refreshing. There is no other way.

ICELAND must really have got to the "millennium." The prison at Rejkiavik is the finest building in the place, but it has not a single occupant! Would it not pay to import that prison—even though the prison reformers found their occupation gone?

THE HONOR of the whole country is pledged to prevent the irruption of mining parties into the region of the Black Hills. We heartily second the appeal of the Independent to President Grant to protect the rights of the Sioux Indians, already solemnly guaranteed by treaty.

IF THEODORE PARKER was not an "unbeliever" in the Independent's sense of the word, why did it urge his greater "strength of unbelief," as compared with his successors? The Independent evidently does not know what it did mean, and we are sure we do not. But we give elsewhere its reply in full.

THE Independent thinks we ought to be "ashamed" to work with Horace Seaver, a man of most honest and blameless life and as brave and true to freedom as any man living, while it is not "ashamed" of the part played in the Brooklyn scandal by its own editor and proprietor. Which of the two is the "sorrier companion," we forbear to discuss.

THE MILLENNIAL CELEBRATION at Iceland was rather a chilly occasion, according to Bayard Taylor. King Christian, of Denmark, could not have enjoyed the climate. The wind was bitingly cold, and the people were colder still. But then it is well understood on this side of the water that kings and the millennium cannot agree with each other.

MR. ROWLAND CONNOR, who has just closed his engagement with the Free Congregational Society at Florence, Massachusetts, is now open to engagements for Sunday services of a radical kind. He made a very wide-awake address at the last convention of the Free Religious Association, of which he was one of the original founders, and is well known as a successful speaker on radical topics.

AN ADVOCATE of free-love recently declared himself opposed to "promiscuity," but in favor of "variety." This little dialogue will suit his case:—

Indignant Employer.—Jack is lazy, madam, naturally lazy!

Fond Mother.—No, sir! How can you talk so, sir! Jack hasn't a lazy hair in his head. But I must allow that he is constitutionally indolent!

THE SOUTHERN Democrats learn nothing, and are as little to be trusted as ever. They have carried several elections by setting the white race avowedly against the black. If they had their way, they would reduce the negroes to a state of semi-slavery once more; and this in spite of the Cincinnati and Baltimore conventions of 1872. The decease of both the great parties is a consummation devoutly to be wished; but the work of the Republicans must continue till the Democratic party, as such, undergoes cremation.

THE ENGLISH PREMIER is reported as having favored the Public Worship Bill, which Mr. Voysey explained in the last INDEX, on the ground that "a great struggle between the temporal and spiritual powers is coming on, and England's safety will then be found in adhering to the principles of the Reformation." This struggle is foreseen by every far-sighted man, because its causes are everywhere noticeable; and it must break out here as well as in Europe. But the character it will assume, whether bloodless or bloody, will depend greatly on what liberals are doing, or neglecting to do, to-day. Now is the hour for educating this nation out of Christianity into the religion of its own Constitution—the religion of liberty, justice, and equal rights. Disraeli spoke for two continents.

AN AMERICAN ARTIST, Mrs. I. R. Morrell, has won great praise in Paris by two historical paintings, the "First Battle of the Puritans" and "Washington's Welcoming of the Provision Trains." Says the Paris correspondent of the New York Herald: "I stood looking at them, spellbound and delighted, in company with a pale little lady, who spoke in a simple, modest voice to me, as if she had done nothing worthy of note. I told her that she was about to win a great renown. 'I only wished to please my husband,' replied the American lady, gently; but I saw that something glittered in her eyes, and her lips trembled as they smiled." Doubtless many reformatory lips will curl disdainfully at this new and mortifying proof of "woman's subjection." But we venture to think that the picture of home-life painted with seven short words by this "pale little lady" has a higher beauty than even her brush can have realized. May that "brute of a husband" be pleased, to the heart's content of the doubly-gifted wife!

WE WISH to acknowledge the kindness of frequent personal allusions in the Christian Register to the editor of THE INDEX. Mr. Mumford has long been a valued and esteemed friend of ours. It is a little bewildering to reflect that he made the ordaining prayer at our "ordination," on August 31, 1864, considering how far we have since strayed from the true fold. But he knows how warm our heart is towards the old fellowship we have been constrained to leave, and how free from personal bitterness are all our wicked allusions to the Unitarian ism. We have a most sincere and cordial greeting for any of our old comrades who favor us with a call, and for none more than for Thomas J. Mumford, whose occasional pins are stuck into "Free Religionists" with the most benevolent intentions. He picks off their legs and wings with all the charming and innocent delight of a child that has caught its first fly; and he treats them to eau sucré with equal pleasure. Long may the genial tormentor continue his pastimes of both sorts; and, when he gets to the hot place whither Orthodoxy consigns Unitarians and "Free Religionists" alike, may he never lack for ice-cream!

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walters; Secretary, E. M. Bridgman.
WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—President, J. B. Bassett; Secretary, Anton Grethen.
NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
BALBEO, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
SAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.
AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Vaux, Secretary.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

About Meeting-Houses.

BY HON. G. F. TALBOT.

The proposal to tax church edifices, now so generally discussed, brings up for consideration the subject of the beneficial uses of such edifices. Perhaps all who favor such taxation have accepted as inevitable the result that fewer church edifices will be erected, and that many improvidently and unnecessarily built will be devoted to secular objects. For taxation, although a feeble force, being a permanent one, operates insidiously, like the rain, frost, and atmosphere; and in the long run eats up estates that cannot supply its annual demand out of some available income, or offset against it some recognized utility. This demand for taxation is so evidently just, and is so feebly opposed, even by the prejudices of religious people, that we may anticipate that before long meeting-houses will be generally taxed at a just and equal valuation; and we may consider whether they may not be put to so many more religious, educational, and social uses as fairly to justify not only their continuance, but their increase in number, costliness, and decoration.

Through the early periods of New England history the meeting-house was a capacious structure, in which elegance and every architectural effect was sacrificed to room. To shelter from the weather, and to seat in tolerable comfort and within easy audience of one man's voice the largest number of persons, was the problem which the builder, who did not even pretend to be an architect, proposed to himself. The material used was wood, because it was the cheapest. If there was to be no bell, the roof was as straight and plain as upon a barn; and where a bell was, or was hoped, a shingled tower was built to contain it, looking like an aborted rudiment of a steeple sprouting from one end of the roof-tree. If paint was used it was upon the outside, to protect the building from the weather, not on the inside for ornament; unless the pulpit, the chef-d'œuvre of the country carpenter, claimed the distinction of artificial color to indicate its sanctity.

It taxed the narrow incomes of our hard-working ancestors to erect these public buildings; but, when once erected, there was no superstitious squeamishness which interdicted or restricted their use for all necessary public purposes. The meeting-house was the town-house. The annual assembly of the people in mass to regulate their town affairs, where the grim humor and grave drollery of the Yankee character never failed to show itself in some crisp or biting speech, or in some travesty or formal jest, was always held in this house, with no thought of its incongruousness. The impish and secular spirits that on the week days leered over the tops of the pen-like pews, unchallenged by priestly exorcism, quietly decamped from the premises before next Lord's day, without disturbing even the fancy of the solemn congregation, while the sounding-board was vibrating with the fervid exhortations of the preacher, and the white-washed ceiling was echoing with the minor melodies of the psalms. Up to the very communion-table, where the rude ballot-box was tended by the selectmen, sober and drunken men pushed, or were pushed, to give in their votes, with all the uproar that characterizes a modern ward room on election day. And yet, when the alternate first Sunday of the month came round, not a boy of us who witnessed both scenes could make the same table, with its spotless cloth, its two plates evenly piled with columnar cubes of whitest bread, its six goblets, believed to be silver, in which the red wine was slowly poured by the trembling hand of the minister, and the two deacons, with serious faces, sitting behind it, like translated Moses and Elias, seem any the less awfully sanctified. The meeting-house, too, was used for Fourth of July celebrations, for public funerals, for college and academic exhibitions; and if the May training was not held within it, the green in its front served for the militia parade, and the long wooden steps made a base upon which the captain could form his line. Agricultural fairs as yet were not, but when they came later they gladly availed themselves of the roomy accommodations of such of these primitive structures as modern innovation had left standing. If the New England puritans had believed in dancing, or theatrical amusements, they would have had no scruple whatever at giving up the meeting-house on proper occasions to such diversions. But they looked upon these practices as simple abominations everywhere, and just as reprehensible in theatres, halls, and houses as they would be in churches. Whatever in the way of social practices the puritans thought fit to do at all, no superstition would have withheld them from doing in the meeting-house.

Such a building, devoted to such various uses, fitly represents the ideas of the last century. Let us look at the changes in structure and uses until they culminate in the modern church, and the uses for which it stands. The name itself, now everywhere improperly used, not so applied by our ancestors, but standing with them for something quite different, is an index of the great departure in the direction of what, with more emphasis than charity, they would have called idolatry and the serving of tables. The old, unpainted barn first gave place to the smart, painted, pretentious, single-storied meeting-house of forty years ago, with its mahogany trimmings, its carpeted aisles, its bell and lofty spire, the velvet upholstery of its pulpit, and its thousand dollar organ. From five to twenty thousand dollars, according to its size, would pay the cost of such buildings, which really had no superfluous adjuncts but the bell and spire. But they have become entirely unadapted to the luxury of modern ideas and the dainty decorum of modern worship. So within the last twenty years they in their turn have given place to fanciful structures, in which the elaborate and mediæval fancies of professional architects have run riot, in utter disregard of expense, in contempt of the conveniences of seeing and listening, and in the determination to convert the meeting-house from a place where the largest number of persons can stay with the least physical inconvenience, while their understandings are edified by the access of knowledge, and their consciences are quickened in the apprehension of duty, into a dainty shrine where certain æsthetic influences can creep over the feelings, excited by the modulated tones and faultless rhetoric of the preacher, by the exquisite harmony of elaborate music, or by the contemplation of antique, statuesque forms, shaded in a dim, religious light.

With every change in the general fashion of structure of church edifices a large proportion of worshippers have fallen off. There were families, perhaps, held to the old places simply by force of habit. The new places looked so strange and unnatural to them that the old church-going habit could never attach to them. They were like sly old martens, who come back in the spring to find new houses, many-chambered and redolent of paint; they look in, miss the old odors, and betake themselves to the free, wild woods. Old couples that used to trudge their three miles and find free seats and largest liberty—a grand outlook upon the congregation and a point-blank earshot of the minister, in the common of the great gallery—come once, look in upon the ground-floor, where every man sits sentry, back to, at the head of his pew, sit uncomfortably one Sunday as the guests and dependents of a family better dressed than themselves, and conclude ever afterwards that three miles is too far to walk to meeting. With many it is a consideration of expense, and necessarily so. They paid formerly a few dollars a year to the minister, always fixing the amount according to their own ability and liberality, and for this pittance they were free to all the liberties of the sanctuary. Now, although the church property is subjected to no tax, the rents by which the parish expenses are assessed upon the pews make the single Sunday morning service, which good taste requires shall not occupy much more than an hour, more costly to each worshipper than would be two hours of an Italian opera, or a first-class vocal and instrumental concert, in which Jenny Lind or Nilsson should be an attraction. From these and other causes, step by step with the enormous increase of the expenses of public worship, has been the diminution of the worshippers.

On the Palatine Hill in Rome the traveller is shown the ruins of the temple of Apollo, and wonders at the narrow space the foundations cover. He explores the Forum, and after giving up to its inconsiderable area one great thoroughfare by which the triumphing armies marched, and several other streets which must have had their confluence there, and the great open space where the immense populace assembled for elections, he is puzzled to find room for the many temples said to have stood there, or any convenient access to them. He is obliged to consider that the temple, under the old religion, was built for the accommodation of the god, and not for the accommodation of the worshippers. The worship was vicarious and by the priest, and for its orderly performance a limited space only was necessary. So long as the god received his sacrifice, his incense, his offering, the faithful devotee was insured the divine favor, and his presence at the ceremonies was entirely superfluous. Much the same idea still prevails in Catholic countries, where churches are built without the slightest regard to the number of believers or the attendance of church-goers. Since God is propitiated by worship, the more worship the more active his grace and beneficence. Though there be but half a hundred bended knees on the bare floors—nay, if the priest and his assistants, duly draped, and according to the formulas of the Church, perform the service alone,—the blessing cannot be prevented. It comes down, charging all the place with superfluous sanctity and grace; it falls like a universal, unseen shower upon the dwelling-places and haunts of men; it sanctifies the earth and makes it yield a richer fruitage; it sweetens the heavens and keeps the very stars in their courses. So the churches are built for the ceremonies. There must be ample space to surround the shrines with processions and prostrations; there must be high walls whence the painted saints can look down with seraphic benignity, and lofty arches under which the chanted anthems can roll out to their softest cadence. The images of the dead saints must have ample and luxurious accommodations; the only invitation to living saints to take a silent part in the service is naked pavements or rude chairs that seem to have been borrowed from a neighboring prison.

Christianity, certainly Protestantism, if it meant anything, meant to deny all this. The assembly was for the purpose of doctrine, correction, and instruction in righteousness. God was to be worshipped by the spirit and in the effort to apprehend and comprehend the truth, and not by sacrifices, ceremonies, or ritual. The building required for such an assembly ought to afford shelter, warmth, and sufficient physical comfort to leave the mind free to occupy itself with elevated and ennobling thoughts, and least distracted by scenic divertisements and adjuncts of sight or sound to gratify an æsthetic taste.

Not only has an improved and expensive architecture in church edifices resulted in a diminution of church attendance, but in a diminished utility of the edifice itself. When we replaced the homely old meeting-house of the last century with what Mr. Gargery not inaptly termed the architectooral-ooral temple or shrine, we drove the town meeting out of it, applying the whip of small cords, not without a weighty precedent, to the backs of the selectmen, with their trumpery ballot-boxes, and to the politicians and electioneering managers, who at that early day had hardly begun the practice, now so disreputably established, of buying and selling human cattle. Next we extruded the abolition lecturer; and there was a glaring hypocrisy in this. We disliked his opinions, and, knowing that in many communities to deny him a church was to deny him a hearing, we drew on a long face and gratified our prejudice under pretext of zeal for the house of God. This hypocrisy, however, compelled us, in order to be consistent, to apply the same exclusion to the temperance lecturer, the advocate of peace, of woman's rights, of prison reform,—in fine, to the advocates and apostles of every specific form of benevolence and of practical Christianity. So dainty have we at last grown in cherishing the exclusiveness and sanctity of these places of worship that they have become practically unfit for the uses even of religion itself. They must not be used on stormy Sundays for fear of soiling the delicate upholstery. They do not accommodate the evening meeting, the institution chiefly relied on to recruit the ranks and maintain the piety of the Church, either because of the difficulty of warming and lighting them, or because no magnetism can be generated in a thin audience scattered in pews, or because there is a certain cordiality and naturalness in the spontaneous exercises of an evening meeting incompatible with the prescribed ritual of the Sunday service. In most churches this Sunday service has dwindled to a single course, which, with sermon, prayer, and much singing, scarcely occupies more than an hour. For this hour's service in the week, all through the winter, the great spaces under the lofty ceilings must be charged with heat by fires lighted and vigorously plied the day before. The feeble church, that has burdened itself with debt and wearied distant brethren with importunate solicitations for donations to an edifice which, when built, is only fit for such rare use, must immediately go to work and build a vestry or chapel, where the effective service of their religion can be performed.

Shall we reinstate the ancient New England meeting-house in all its ugliness and roomy capacity? Shall we utilize it to the utmost extent by inviting back to it the spring town meeting and the autumn election? Shall we open it to the agricultural fair and the questionable dramatic exhibition, musical concert, and dancing assembly, and make it free to every roving stump-speaker, male or female, who is bitten with a passion for reforming the world? This is not desirable, and it is as obviously not possible; but let us consider if we may not do something.

Fourier said that the township was the natural unit of the new social order,—the integer which, once reduced to order upon scientific principles, gave the nucleus of the perfect State. So it might be but for the irreconcilable differences in religious belief, which prevent all effectual coöperation except within the fellowship of sects. The Calvinist will not coöperate with the free thinker; and the Spiritualist and Second Adventist, though dwellers in the same street, are living in spheres of thought and feeling as diverse from those of their neighbors as if they lived in one of the upper valleys of Thibet. The parish is the true unit of the social life and nucleus of the State. The parish is already organized, if that term could be applied to the result of the natural growth of our national ideas, modified by our national institutions and customs. The meeting-house ought to be the nucleus and centre of the parish, at once its representative, its sanctuary, and its seat of government; and the idea of a meeting-house to correspond with modern want is a building that shall subserve all the social, æsthetic, and religious uses of the parish.

There are no practical difficulties in the way of the accomplishment of such a transformation of the meeting-house. The parish has already formed itself: it is the natural grouping together by the affinity of common religious convictions of a certain number of persons. Inasmuch as a man's religious notions generally dominate, and in a manner indicate the character of all his subordinate notions, we have a right to expect that the individuals forming a parish to which they have been attracted by religious affinity will harmoniously work together in maintaining a general moral, intellectual, and social cultus. They might not have all the same political prejudices; some might be ascetic and some liberal in their habits of eating and drinking; there might be a variety of intellectual tastes among them,—but there would be a certain community of spirit which would harmonize feeling and promote fellowship, while differences of opinion would really give a zest to a frank and tolerant intercourse.

Now let us suppose that there is a certain parish in a certain city—say, if you please, of Unitarians,—who have outgrown their old church edifice and contemplate a new one. What might such a Unitarian community, guided by an enlightened and liberal spirit, do, not only for themselves but as a most insinuating example for other communities and other sects? They might erect a building of which the following is a general description: A central, rectangular hall, into which the light is let from the roof, or upper part of the walls. At one end is the main entrance and vestibule and stairway, with a gallery over it for the organ and choir. The other three sides are surrounded by suites of rooms, opening into each other and with access from the outside. The basement must have the general heating apparatus, with conveniences for cooking; and, after reserving in it sufficient space for the janitor and his family, there may still be space enough to be leased for any occupation not inconsistent with the quiet and convenience of the main building. The primary use of the central hall is for the religious services of Sunday. But such use should not be considered inconsistent with the free occupation of it for all other purposes requiring the accommodation of a general assembly. The suites of rooms, fittingly furnished and adorned, become the general social exchange of the parish, ultimately taking the place and better answering the use to which the stately, costly, and little used private parlor is now dedicated. One room should be known as the minister's, where, during such hours of the week as he might have for parochial visits, he might meet and confer with his parishioners. One room should be dedicated to music, and, being furnished with a piano, should be always available for amateurs to meet for practice or entertainment; and in one should be a library and a file of periodicals and newspapers such as are not met with in counting rooms and private houses.

What comprehensive conveniences might be derived from such apartments, and how favorably they would both accommodate and relieve, and at the same time extend, our manifold social necessities, obligations, and enjoyments! Undertaking to prescribe them, we make them formal and repulsive; it is only as they are spontaneous that they become natural and attractive. Still some general hints may be given as to the possibilities, leaving details to establish themselves as good sense and good taste may dictate.

The building furnishes the janitor and his family a permanent home. He is the responsible custodian of the property, the steward of all the supplies; and the various offices to perform in its care, and in service upon the exercises and festivities within it, furnish him and his family constant employment. The furnace fires are lighted in the commencement of the cold season, and, while it lasts, the whole building is kept warm at an expense not more than five times as great as it now costs to warm a city church for occupation during two hours a week. On Sunday there is a service in the morning and evening, and a Sunday-school in the afternoon in the main hall. In the intervals of these services groups of the parishioners linger in the ante-rooms to confer with the minister upon the subject of the sermon, to exchange greetings with each other, or to make appointments for social interviews or charitable enterprises during the week. On Monday morning come the ministerial association and hold their weekly meeting in one of the parlors. Every afternoon of the week the women of the parish, as far as they are relieved from home duties, bring their work or book, and meet each other for informal social intercourse. Those who do not wish to depend upon accident make sure of the attendance of their friends by previous notification through postal cards of the time and place where they desire to meet them. This is an immense relief from the tedious formality of casual calls, where the well-bred visitor scarcely conceals her satisfaction when two out of every three of the dear friends she wishes to see are either actually or ostensibly not at home. It leaves the privacy of home safe from impertinent invasions, and the studies and labors of home exempt from vexatious interruptions, while it substitutes a spontaneous, cordial, and sincere intercourse for a conventional and ceremonial etiquette.

If any person wishes to entertain his friends, he may use the spacious accommodations of these apartments instead of his own house, and there will be stated occasions when the parish itself will have festivals to which all the members as such will be free. To accommodate such amusements as may be agreed upon, the seats in the central hall should not be made so cumbrous and luxurious as not to permit them to be taken up from the floor, so that the open area might be conveniently used for dancing. One-half of the ante-rooms with substantial furniture ought to be dedicated to the uses of children, who, under the oversight of parents or child-loving grown people, might have their little amusements generally, or in small groups, as often as was compatible with their employment in schools and the requirements of health. Musical concerts, literary, ethical, and scientific lectures, and dramatic readings—some of these general, and others only embracing those of the parish who have a special taste for such studies—would keep the building in more or less constant occupation during the evenings of the whole week.

When the exchanging minister visits the society, he, as a matter of ordinary etiquette, visits the meeting-house socially, and gets introduced to as many of the parish as are interested in his conversation, and are desirous of his personal acquaintance. A member of the parish has a guest, he takes him to the meeting-house on some afternoon or evening, and so finds a ready method of making him known to all those friends with whom he is himself living on terms of the most intimate relations. A stranger visits the city from another State, or from another country; he is a poet or historian, or a man of scientific eminence; perhaps he has travelled in little-known regions, or he has obtained celebrity by some great public service or commanding ability. Wishing to do him honor, we take him to the place where our friends and neighbors can listen to his conversation, and without intrusion enjoy the distinction of taking him by the hand. Some one wishes to exhibit and explain an invention, to interest the people in a reform or charity, to solicit contributions for the relief of suffering or the promotion of education. Instead of allowing him to go round, as we do now, to take everybody at disadvantage at their houses, where they are under the constraint of hospitality, he must meet the minister and the most judicious members of the parish together, and submit to have the utility of his scheme fairly considered.

There need be no fear of secularizing or profaning the meeting-house by devoting it to any innocent uses. On the other hand, it will become far more sacred and venerable by becoming associated with the experience and memory of all the joyous and solemn events of human life. The bride and bridegroom will come to the place to invoke the sanctions of religion to consecrate their union, and the cherished forms of our dead will be borne over the same sacred threshold hallowed by the tears and prayers of the congregation. Neither, when we have moved out of our dwellings the formal social ceremonies and inconvenient social conventions, and made them more free and cordial upon some common ground of meeting, shall we enjoy any the less the sanctity and privacy of our own homes.

When we are no longer obliged to build and decorate suites of rooms for mere show, or to maintain a formal social etiquette, or because other persons have provided similar accommodations, there will be less disposition to decorate these rooms with paintings, statues, and costly works of art, and those who are able to gratify such tastes can express at the same time their generosity and their love of art by giving such costly objects—the more valuable, the larger number they can please—to ornament the walls of the rooms where the general social life of the people is chiefly passed.

John's vision of the kingdom of heaven was not of an abstract and internal order of congenial and sanctified souls. It was a concrete and completed institution, a perfected city of God, coming down from heaven beautifully and minutely adapted to the highest uses of man. If character sometimes gives form to institutions, institutions have as often developed and given direction to character. Who shall say that the Temple of the Jews, the Portico of the Greeks, the Forum of the Romans, and the Cathedral of mediæval Christianity did not chiefly contribute to the ideas and types of national and religious character which they severally fulfilled and expressed? The temple is the nucleus of Mormonism, as the phalanstery was of Fourier's new social order.

Our Unitarian society only thought of building themselves a new church; but what vast and vexed social problems have they gone many steps toward solving! In a free competition among men of unequal powers, some will of necessity become rich, and the poor we have always with us. How shall the rich escape the envy of the poor? How shall the rich man bear his prosperity so meekly and decorously as to prevent his poorer neighbor from coveting his good fortune, and so falling into despondency, which he relieves by sensuality, or into excessive avarice which he gratifies by fraud? How shall the prosperous man exhibit the luxury of food, raiment, equipage, and dwelling, which he may have fairly earned, without just self-reproach? These are questions which many sensitive and right-thinking men are asking themselves. Evidently the solution is to be found in this practice to which we must ultimately conform. For our private life, for eating and drinking, for dress and dwelling, we must adopt a simple style, not beyond the reach of all men in the community. In dress, we have nearly reached this, at least among men, where a uniform style of plain and substantial clothing for all ranks has taken the place of the fopperies of two centuries ago. In diet, the requirements of health and good sense, and indeed of a natural appetite, seem to point to a greater and greater uniformity of food among men that labor and men that are exempt from labor. The health of the working man requires rich and substantial food, and the delicate digestion of the indolent man protests against costly condiments and over indulgence. In the Old World, palaces, galleries of art, parks and gardens of kings, and of the wealthy nobles, are open to the general public, whose property in them is everywhere carefully respected. It is only in republican America, where men have grown rich without knowing the obligations of wealth, that we have gardens and grounds jealously surmounted with spikes or bits of broken glass, shutting in acres of verdure upon which it is a trespass for the public even to look; and private galleries into which you can only come upon the same terms that you could attend a private party or a wedding. But this exclusiveness is giving way, and we are following the liberal tendencies of the age. We shall come at last to the general understanding that the rich man, living substantially like the poor man, is free to indulge any degree of luxury, to gratify all his æsthetic tastes, provided the only exclusive possession he has in his fine pictures, his statues, his ornamental window, his memorial tablet, his frescoed ceiling, is the distinction of his generosity in sharing the pleasure of beholding these objects with his poorest neighbor.

The new house has thus become itself a most potent influence of culture. Its whole spirit is fraternal and humane. As it grows older and grows richer and more beautiful in the gifts of the living and mementoes of the dead, its silent walls preach a powerful sermon of brotherly love, a prophesy of peace on earth and good-will to man.

Nor is this all. How shall we conduct our social recreations so that they shall not be exclusive, so that they shall not affront a multitude of worthy persons, who need their refining and cheering influence, with a sense of invidious separation and contempt? How shall we inaugurate that kind of feast which Jesus approved, to which we are not to call our rich acquaintance who can recompense us again, but the poor in fortune, talent, or spirit, who cannot recompense us again? Is it not by including all whom a common religious sympathy has brought into affiliation with us in all our social enjoyments? How much have we done to remove that bitter and resentful feeling which furnishes the provocation and suggestion of most of the vice and crime that infest society, when we have considerately cared for the feelings and rude resentments and excessive and unwarrantable envies of whole ranks of men and women, who, we have too hastily concluded, had nothing to do with us or our lives! Then, too, what barriers against vice have we thrown around youth in providing for them the whole of their social relaxations, and keeping them under the control of those who at the same time can sympathize with enthusiastic feelings, and guide by the counsels of experience and principle!

It will need no special propagandism to bring into fashion an institution so vital and attractive. When the Unitarian parish has made such a home and foundation for its religious and social life, sectarian competition will repeat the experiment. The Methodists and the Baptists will never permit the young of their own communities, or the general unchurched public, to be won over to liberal theology, by the attraction of elegant apartments, blameless amusements, and high social culture. The details of their arrangements might be more austere and devout than such as are here sketched. There would be more praying, and perhaps less dancing. Still their customs would be none the less congenial to their prevalent tastes, and social and attractive to persons cherishing their peculiar ideas; and it would be only in details, not essential to the main features of the plan, that the institution in their hands would differ from that under the conduct of the most liberal sects. Where is the enlightened community to set so fascinating an example?

[For The Index.]

THE AMERICAN ASSOCIATION FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE AT HARTFORD.

BY PROFESSOR W. D. GUNNING.

Once a year the scientists come together, in mercantile phrase, "to take account of stock." They estimate the gains of the year, or, to drop the language of the counter for that of the camp, their conquests over the domain of darkness, survey the enemy's intrenchments, and map out campaigns for the future. In the Hartford campaign, the outlying realm of darkness suffered invasion at many points. There was "a movement all along the lines." Prof. William B. Rogers led the advance against one of the strongest outworks.

The investigations of Helmholtz on seeing and hearing have shown us that even these highest senses are defective. The organs which put us in relation with the outer world do not report that world to us correctly. Our brains, our nerves, our eyes, our ears, our bodies stand between us and absolute truth. "All men are liars." As a learned theologian has shown that David was a Darwinist, perhaps, in his inspiration, he anticipated Helmholtz's discoveries. But how much will a man lie? We do not mean a campaigning politician, a professional interviewer, or the proprietor of a hippodrome. We mean, rather, man in his highest reach after truth, as an astronomer at the telescope. A better form of the question would be, How much do the senses, the nerves, and the brain lie to man?

Professor Rogers brought before the Association a very simple machine for determining a man's personal equation; that is, his deviation from the line of absolute truth. With a man of science this is not much. He may so school his brain, his eye, and his hand, that where the element of time is involved he can report a celestial phenomenon and miss the absolute truth by less than two hundredths of a second. This is the testimony of Professor Rogers' machine. Score it to our credit. We feel that "we are prone to go astray," and we seek repentance, if not with tears, with philosophical instruments. And we challenge other men, especially theologians and gentlemen of the press, to emulation. You, gentlemen of the first class, in your efforts to reach truth, celestial and supernal, why have you made no account of your personal equation? And you of the second class, what a muddle you make of mundane affairs! How you are prone to "deviate," and not one among you brings a machine to show the world how much!

The writer attempted to head a little skirmish into another dark realm of Nature—the personal equation of a creature nearly related to man. We mean a moth. And we are weighing our words when we say "nearly related." Structurally, the kinship is remote. Psychologically, we are cousins. For

> . . . . "the mind that stirs > Between the wings of bees and building wasps,"—

is it not the same in kind as our own? Do we not know that men who shrink and hide from the true light dash with all the wing-power of their souls into flickering rush-lights? Now the moth that simmers in your lamp—do not think that she rushed to her death through pure love of light. Nothing of the kind. Goethe's death-song never entered the head of a moth. That moth has spent every day of her life in the deep recesses of a leafy bush or shrub, skulking and hiding away from the sunlight. If men did not behave much in the same way, here would be a great mystery. That men do behave in the same way makes the mystery greater still. When THE INDEX has solved the problem on its human side, and shown why men—so many men—shrink from the natural and therefore true light "which lighteth every man that cometh into the world," and scorch their souls in the glare of creeds, we will renew our studies on insects.

Drs. Gray, Mallichamp, and Canby led a bold advance into a province of Nature where little was known, and still less was understood. We mean the carnivorous propensities and the behavior of certain plants.

Everybody knows the saracenia or pitcher plant of our northern bogs. Very few had known, even by name, the near relatives of this plant which practise their curious arts, one in South Carolina, and one in California. They are carnivorous, and, while they would not refuse (as Gray has shown of the North Carolina sundew) a morsel of beef, they delight chiefly in ants and flies. Like the spider, they must contrive some way to catch the flies. The spider spins a web, and from this act alone you would infer consciousness and something more. But here is a weed whose organization makes even consciousness impossible; and what does it do? Of course it makes nothing outside of itself, but it makes itself into a lure, a bait, a trap, and a something which answers for a stomach. The attention of a fly is attracted by color, its appetite is baited by a honey-like fluid secreted by the plant; and its descent through a funnel —the plant's throat—into an inflated sac—the plant's stomach—is insured by minute, downward-pointing hairs. Pass your finger down along the tube; it slips over the bristled surface as over a surface of oil-cloth.

> "Facilis descensus Averni."

Now draw your finger back; the tips of the bristles rasp, and if you were no stronger than a fly would arrest you.

> "Sed recocare gradum, superasque evadere ad auras.
> Hoc opus, hic labor est."

This description would answer in a general way for the South Carolina plant, saracenia variolaris.

The California Darlingtonia is still more curious.

This summer a patent fly-trap has been thrown on the market. A cylindrical tube of wire gauze is surmounted by a dome of bright tin. You set this on the table, or any surface you please, placing under it a little sweetened water, or whatever a fly may like. The cylinder is supported on legs, so that flies can pass under to the bait. Once within, they are attracted by the bright dome, and thinking that the way to freedom is skyward, they rise and are trapped. We do not know the inventor, but we know that he must have studied the mind of a fly. And we are quite sure that he never saw the Darlingtonia, which grows in bogs high up along the mountain slopes of Northern California. This rarest and most curious of plants we saw in pressed specimens at Hartford. The leaf, which grows directly out of the ground, as that of saracenia, is sometimes two feet long; it folds in, and its edges coalesce so that the lower part is a funnel; but the upper portion is metamorphosed into a dome, with a small circular opening below, from the margin of which spread two flaring, purple-colored leaves. Just within the margin of the aperture is secreted a sweetish fluid, and the membrane of the leaf above, at the very top of the dome, is thin, diaphanous, and bright. Here is your patent fly-trap. The flaring, colored leaves are a lure. The fly is attracted, comes, lights, and finds a sweet repast. Looking up from the repast he sees skylight above. He ascends, dashes against the leaf membrane, and following the direction of the little hairs—the only direction in which he can walk —finds himself at last in the pit below, where he is stupefied by a liquid secretion, killed and devoured—absorbed—by the pores of the plant! It is our fly-trap plus vitality. How quick we are to say that somewhere must be a Mind which planned all this; and, as it cannot be in the plant, we must look for it outside of the plant, outside of Nature. But here again we are beset with difficulties. In plants closely allied to these the fly-catching contrivances are very imperfect. In other plants still there seems an utter want of adaptation. Our common milky dogbane has a beautiful rose-colored and bell-shaped flower. It is not self-fertilizing. The pollen must be borne by insects from anther to stigma. The very existence of the plant depends on its attraction for insects. The color of the flower catches the insect's eye, and the promise of nectar is an invitation for a visit. The insect lights, thrusts its tongue into the corolla tube, and in withdrawing it sometimes detaches the pollen, which it carries away and thrusts against the stigma of another flower. But unless the insect withdraws its tongue at a particular angle it is wedged in between the anthers, and its owner must perish. You will often see dead insects adhering to these flowers; and, if you examine them closely, you will find them hanging by their tongues! So men are not the only people whose tongues get them into trouble. And man is not the only host who sometimes violates the obligations of hospitality. Think of this host slaying its invited guest, and that, too, while the guest is in the very act of performing a vital service!

It would seem from facts like these that Nature, if viewed as the school of Paley would view her—viewed as a system of "designs," "adaptations," "contrivances,"—never works perfectly, and sometimes suicidally and diabolically.

Of a hundred and fifty papers read, each supposed to be an original contribution to science, we have skimmed only two or three. Enough! We have borne you company to the borders of a new field of research; and here on the borders we separate, to meet, perchance, at another time, in the deeper recesses.

A CHANCE TO PUNISH HERETICS.

Judge Poland's law authorizing the indictment in the District of Columbia, and the arrest and removal to Washington City, of any editor or publisher accused of libel has more than an ordinary scope. Libels are ordinarily tried under the laws of the States where they are published, but the trial of all libels under Poland's act would be governed by what is known as the "common law" of the District of Columbia. Congress in 1804 enacted that the laws of Maryland in force at the time of the cession of the District (1801) should be in force in that part of the District ceded by Maryland, and the laws of Virginia at the same date should be in force in that part of the District south of the Potomac. Since then the Virginia part of the District has been ceded back, and what remains of the original ten miles square is to this day governed by the laws of Maryland as they stood in 1801, except so far as modified by subsequent acts of Congress. The persons indicted and arrested under the Poland law must be tried for libels under the definition of the old Maryland laws. One of these laws, though long since repealed in Maryland, and dating back to colonial days, but still in force in the District of Columbia, has been hunted up by a correspondent of the New York Tribune, and reads as follows:—

"An act to punish blasphemous swearers, drunkards, and Sabbath-breakers, and for repealing the laws heretofore made for the punishing such offenders.

"Be it enacted by the Right Honorable the Lord Proprietor, by and with the advice and consent of his Lordship Governor, and the Upper and Lower Houses of Assembly, and the authority of the same:

"That if any person shall hereafter, within this province, wittingly, maliciously, and advisedly, by writing or speaking, blaspheme or curse God, or deny our Saviour Jesus Christ to be the Son of God, or shall deny the Holy Trinity, the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, or the Godhead of any of the Three Persons, or the Unity of the Godhead, or shall utter any profane words concerning the Holy Trinity or any of the persons thereof, and shall be thereof convict by verdict or confession, shall for the first offence be bored through the tongue and fined £20 sterling to the Lord Proprietor, to be applied to the use of the county where the offence shall be committed, to be levied on the offender's body, goods and chattels, lands or tenements; and in case the said fine cannot be levied, the offender shall suffer six months' imprisonment without bail or mainprise; and that for the second offence, the offender, being thereof convict as aforesaid, shall be stigmatized by burning in the forehead with the letter B, and fined £40 sterling to the Lord Proprietor, to be applied and levied as aforesaid, and in case the same cannot be levied the offender shall suffer twelve months' imprisonment without bail or mainprise; and that for the third offence, the offender, being convict as aforesaid, shall suffer death without benefit of clergy."

[There are fourteen sections more, but they refer to swearing, drinking, and breaking the Sabbath.]

If any person, anywhere in the United States, shall, by writing, deny that Christ is the Son of God, or deny the Holy Trinity, or the Godhead of either Person of the Trinity, or write profanely of either of such Persons, and a copy of such paper is found in the District of Columbia, then the person so writing may, under the Poland law, be indicted, arrested, and tried in the District of Columbia, and, if convicted, be bored through the tongue; and if the offence be repeated be branded on the forehead with the letter B; and for a third offence be hanged.

This is the style and character of the law of libel in force in the District of Columbia, to which laws the entire newspaper press of the United States have been made amenable under the Poland-Butler-Carpenter-Conkling law of the last session. This is literally going back to the dark ages and a revival of a code which exists in no part of the civilized world outside of the District of Columbia.—Chicago Tribune.

THE NOTRE DAME SCHOOLHOUSE.

Yesterday afternoon, the dedication of the new Catholic schoolhouse on Vernon Street took place before a large assembly of people. The building is built upon the lot adjoining the Notre Dame Convent, and consists of three stories and basement, and towers at each side in front. It is of brick with granite trimmings, is large, well arranged, and admirably adapted to its intended purpose. The ceremonies consisted of solemn high mass in the morning at St. John's Church, and in the afternoon of religious exercises and observances at the schoolhouse.

In the afternoon a procession was formed of the Catholic societies in the city, and marched to the schoolhouse in the following order, to the music of the Father Matthew Temperance Band, and the French Band:—

The Father Matthew Temperance Society, the Ancient Order of Hibernians, the American Society of Hibernians (1st and 2d divisions), the St. Jean Baptiste Society, the Married Men's Sodality, the Young Men's Sodality, the Boys' Sodality, the Married Ladies' Sodality, the Young Ladies' Sodality, the Children of Mary's Sodality, the Sodality of the Holy Angels, the Sodality of the Infant Jesus, the clergy and bishops in carriages.

The exercises consisted of music by the bands and the choir of St. John's Church, and the blessing of the building by Bishop P. T. O'Reilly, and an address by Bishop McQuade, of Rochester, who spoke as follows:—

Brethren and Fellow Citizens,—We are assembled this afternoon to witness the blessing of this new schoolhouse; a blessing that has come down from heaven; a blessing that covers this building from roof to foundation stone; a blessing that comes upon the material used in its construction and upon the teachers that consecrate their lives to the work to be carried on within its walls. Here stands the building which you have paid for,—an honest building, built with honest men's money, cheerfully and freely given. No enforced taxation, no constable or officer of the law, has taken from an unwilling people this money. It is an honest building throughout, erected by this mass of poor people, where shall be wrought out the primary principles of education upon a religious basis.

He here contrasted it with the enforced building of the public schoolhouses in this city, where, he said, they might read over the entrance, Education without God and without religion. God, as he has spoken and manifested, has no right, by law at least, to enter the public schoolhouses of the United States. This noble work of establishing religious schoolhouses, once begun, must go on, and will go on; neither the city of Worcester nor the State of Massachusetts can stop it. This great question, he said, will in time agitate the whole country, and will surely be settled upon principles of right and wrong. In this city we have the two great principles facing each other,—education with religion, and education without religion.

He here spoke of the morality which is claimed to be taught in the schools, saying that he did not want to go back to ancient Greece, to pagan morality, or want that morality which teaches that honesty is the best policy; there can be no Christian morality without religion. The struggle between these two great principles, he said, would, in this country, be desperate; not desperate in the manner of European countries, of settling all questions with the musket, but will be carried on upon the platform, in the pulpit, by the press, and in argument among the people.

You are all American citizens, with rights; you are not here by the favor of any one. Catholic labor, brains, and blood have won you that right under God, and we mean to claim those rights, one of which is the right to give our children the kind of education we choose, and we intend to give them as good a one as can be obtained in the schools of this city.

He did not ask any one to believe his statement that the educational system of this country was wrong, but cited the recent meeting of the Methodist Episcopal bishops in Louisville, Ky., where, he said, they protested against school government by the State, as tending directly and rapidly to infidelity, and also a meeting of Baptists, where the charge was repeated, as confirmation of his remarks that the influence of public schools was corrupting and immoral.

The intellect may be cultivated, but it is only to make men greater rascals than they were before; the conscience that knows there is a heaven and a hell, and can distinguish between right and wrong, must be roused to activity.

He further considered the subject, claiming that the establishment of such schools was in the cause of virtue, morality, and love of country, and was intended to breed a race of self-reliant, independent freemen, and was placing the question exactly where it belonged—in the hands of the parents, and not in the government of the State. At the conclusion of the address, there was singing by the choir, music by the bands, followed by the benediction of Bishop O'Reilly. —Worcester (Mass.) Spy, of Aug. 17.

WHAT ABOUT THE CHILDREN?

The Golden Age prints a letter from a radical "Inquirer," who is puzzled to find out how to get his children instructed in religion. He says that the Sunday-schools of the Christian sects, even of those liberally inclined, teach a great deal of "theological rubbish," and it is not desirable to send them there; yet what is a parent to do? He wants his children to have "a good religious education," but he himself has neither the time nor the ability to teach them. "My own ideas," frankly confesses this radical, "are not quite clear on many important points. I can tell what I do not believe plainly enough; but when it comes to what I do believe I break down." Furthermore says "Inquirer":—

"The difficulty I have found with radicalism is that it is exceedingly hard to teach to children. The books that set it forth do not interest them. There are no word-pictures, no life-like parables, no myths told as history. A God that is everywhere and invisible does not take hold of a child's imagination like a God who is somewhere, and has a form, and came down out of heaven, and made man out of the clay, and ate with Abraham in his tent, and sent his Son, as a landlord might send his son, to collect his rents. It is very hard to make children understand anything about a heaven that may be in the air, or in the moon, or in the planet Jupiter, but of which we know nothing; but it is very easy to interest them in a heaven that has streets of pearl, and gates of gold, and other things to match, and where eternity will be one long play-day and concert. This is pure fancy; but it covers a fact, or a faith, at any rate. It teaches immortality. Shall we throw away the kernel because of the green leaves and silken tassels in which it grows? If children stay at home they get little of the religious instruction they need; but if they go to the Sunday-school they get wholesome and helpful influences mixed up with these pictorial representations and superstitions."

On the whole, this writer concludes that the best thing that radicals can do for their children is to let them go to the Orthodox Sunday-schools and "to correct false impressions as far as they are able." The conclusion does credit to his judgment. But could anything be more pitiful than the picture which this honest man draws of the desolation which Free Religion proposes to make in the lives of little children? We have sometimes said that the work of these people is almost wholly destructive—that they offer us nothing in place of that which they take away. Are not our criticisms more than justified by these frank admissions of an intelligent radical? What shall be said of a scheme of religion that asks our support, but has yet made no provision for the education of our children?—Independent.

WHAT TEACHING?

To the Editor of the Golden Age:—

I see that The Independent has replied to your correspondent "Inquirer," and of course advises that all children be sent to Orthodox Sunday-schools. It says the weakness of radicalism is that it has nothing it can teach, and tries to raise a laugh against a religion that makes no provision for children. This is easy enough. But it is not a fair consideration of the point raised by your correspondent. He presented two difficulties. The average Orthodox Sunday-school teaches religion mixed with a good deal of superstition; but the teaching is poetical and entertaining, and as the schools are large and the sympathy strong, a deep impression is made. The rationalist has a pretty dry catechism, with no highly colored pictures of a God coming down out of heaven to be born in a manger, and die on a cross to save sinners, and other things; it is high and fine idealism, and it does not interest children much to tell them of forces and laws and evolutions, and an invisible and omnipresent Goodness, and an endless Hereafter somewhere. Now which shall a parent do, teach the religion with the superstition, and try to separate the tares from the wheat by-and-by, or teach the religion that is dry, and may never spring up at all? It is no laughing matter to hundreds of parents who attend Orthodox churches, as well as those who attend no church at all.

"Inquirer" inclines to the Sunday-school method. He prefers mixed religion to none at all, and will try to modify and correct false impressions afterwards. But I have seen too many evils result from this course to try it. I have seen too many minds injured beyond recovery for life by having such doctrines as Mr. Clark pointed out, and as are contained in all the old Orthodox catechisms, taught in childhood. I have known many instances where the result of this pernicious teaching was thorough scepticism, if not utter disbelief, in all religion whatever, and others where the heart was haunted by fears and fancies that were terribly depressing. We cannot trifle with such serious matters. It is impossible to tell whether the teaching will be harmless or injurious. If it is taught with earnestness by one who believes it, the bad effect will be sure to follow; if taught in a half-believing way, no good will come; if the parent follows the teacher and tells the child it must not believe the doctrine that has been inculcated, the child is confused and made sceptical, if not worse. This species of religious trifling is bad in every way. It is better to teach good morals, the best sentiments, the virtues that no one disputes, and illustrate them by anecdote and example, than to try the uncertain and dangerous experiment of teaching a theology, half of which will have to be untaught.

There is no need of such teaching being dry. If the teacher is interested, he will interest the child. The little book of Mr. Clodd, The Childhood of the World, shows that the elements of rational religion can be taught in an interesting way, and is worth a cart-load of catechisms. A Child's Friend.

New York, Aug. 1, 1874.

"UNBELIEF" ONCE MORE.

Our recent expressions on "The Strength of Unbelief" have proved, naturally enough, displeasing to The Index; and that journal, having stamped the first of them in general and in particular as "equally ignorant and untrue," now replies in its last number to our editorial. The leading points in its reply may be summarized as follows: Theodore Parker's influence is to-day widespread, and his creed is promulgated by a large proportion of the Unitarian clergy; the Parker Memorial Hall is finished, and Paine Hall will soon be; the Free Religious Association has held largely-attended conventions, not only in Boston but in other cities, including New York; the Boston Radical Club exerts "a wide and incalculable influence;" the Liberal League is powerfully influencing the church taxation question; the Spiritualists have been holding successful camp-meetings; the Investigator (infidel) and the Banner of Light (present organ of George Washington, Abraham Lincoln, Charles Sumner, et al.) are "thriving;" The Index has lived a year in Boston; there is, to be sure, no "decided, organized form" in Free Religion, but denominational statistics amount to little or nothing; and, finally, the contributors to The Index are not ignorant, but, in fact, "for culture, education, native vigor of mind, purity and earnestness of aspiration," etc., the peers of the constituency of any paper in the land. Now The Index knows, or ought to know, that Theodore Parker—as uncompromising as ever man was in his belief in God the Father Almighty, Maker of Heaven and Earth—had no sort of sympathy with the germs of the views since called Free Religious, and that those who to-day are nearest him in opinion are very far from Mr. Abbot's platform, and are not unbelievers in the sense in which the term has been used in reference to this matter—unbelievers or but half believers in God, in the soul, in an inviolable conscience, in revelation, in Christianity as the eternal Church. As for the Free Religious conventions, all Boston knows that they have been less influential of late than they were five years ago, and a few New Yorkers remember the slender attendance at their last meeting here. The Boston Radical Club is a pleasant arena for people to meet and talk in, but to speak of its "incalculable" influence is wild and vague. The church taxation question has no more to do with radicalism than has the Christian amendment question. We have already admitted that for seventy-five years we have had an ignorant set of infidel and spiritualistic sceptics whose rise and progress have been independent of Free Religion; we therefore fail to see how The Investigator (established in 1830) and the Banner of Light (established in 1857) strongly bolster the new unbelief of to-day. Their mention at all as fellow-workers with a journal edited by a man of scholarship and culture affords a virtual admission, however, of the truth of our statements concerning the sorriness of the companions the Free Religious cause has called to its defence. We may mention, too, as an offset to the success of these two papers, that the New York journal edited by the late president of the National Spiritualistic Association has apparently suspended publication in consequence of the recent departure of that functionary for Europe.—Independent, August 27.

PROFESSOR HUXLEY ON HIGHER EDUCATION FOR GIRLS.

A public meeting, convened under the auspices of the Women's Education Union, was held at the Eyre Arms, St. John's Wood, London, recently, for the purpose of promoting the establishment of a girls' public day school in that district. Professor Huxley, who occupied the chair in the absence of Lord Aberdare, introduced the subject by referring to the three courses open to a man who desired to educate his daughters. First, there was the boarding school; but there were few thoroughly good ones, and those were exceedingly expensive, and the ordinary boarding school was the last he should select. The next alternative was home education, which had a great deal to recommend it; but it was a costly process, and, moreover, deprived girls of the healthy influences of coming in contact with other young minds and different teachers. The day school was the third and best course, combining, as it did, both the advantages of thorough school and home teachings; and the object of the Women's Education Union was to establish such schools, not as they are but as they ought to be, in all the great suburban districts of London. No object, he conceived, could be calculated to exert more beneficial influence upon the welfare of the community than that. The company in association with the union had already founded schools at Notting Hill and Chelsea, which were exceedingly flourishing, and considered to be a great boon to the residents of those neighborhoods. It was now proposed to establish another for the district of St. John's Wood, where the education to be given would be equal to that provided for boys at University College School. It was said girls were physically, morally, and intellectually unequal, as a rule, to such an education; and though he did not believe in the equality of woman and man, he yet disputed this position. Experience proved that success in every station of life was less the result of intellectual and moral strength than the exercise of patience, industry, and temper—qualities very much dependent upon healthy organisms. Taking, then, the broad average, the central point of moral and intellectual capacity was rather higher in the male than the female group; but though man was higher in that respect than woman, he would not go so far as to say the lowest of the woman group was lower than the lowest of the man group. Both, however, stood on an equality in the matter of patience, industry, and temper; and as the capacity for education rested upon those qualities, he could discover no reason why bringing up the educational standard of girls to the same level of boys should be calculated to endanger their physical welfare. He should, therefore, conclude by moving—"That this meeting considers the provision for the higher education of girls is inadequate and unsatisfactory, and that measures should be taken for effecting an improvement."

We met with this witty retort in a sketch of a short trip through a portion of Ireland. The writer is conversing with his car driver:—

"You are a Catholic, Jimmie?"

"Yes, yer honor."

"And you pray to the Virgin Mary?"

"I do, yer honor."

"Well, there's no doubt she was a good woman. The Bible says so. But she may have been no better than your mother or mine."

"That's true, yer honor; but then you will allow there's a mighty difference in their children."

"What makes your hair so white, grandpa?" inquired a little maiden. "I am very old, my dear. I was in the ark," says grandpa, with a laugh. "Oh!" the child rejoined. "Are you Noah?" "No; I am not Noah." "Are you Shem, then?" "No; I am not Shem." "Are you Ham?" "No: not even Ham." "Then you must be Japheth," impatiently said the child. "No; I'm not Japheth." "Then, grandpa, you're a beast."

Poetry.

[For The Index.]

THE HOLY GRAIL.

In the days of Arthur, the kingly king
(So runs the beautiful tale),
Each spirit proud of his knightly ring
Went in quest of the Holy Grail—
The flagon that held the juice of the grape,
When the Church's mystic Head,
The Son of the Highest in human shape,
With the twelve last broke the bread.

Borne by a vision of angels three
Through the lonely forest by night,
With a flood of splendor on sward and tree,
And the gleaming of raiment white—
How the stout knights burned for a fleeting glance
Of the wondrous chalice of God,
And rushed on the perils of sword and lance,
And trampled the bloody sod!

But the years came in, and the years went out,
And the black beard faded to gray,
And full-flushed hope paled to sorrow and doubt,
And died in despair away;
For to knights that were pure and stainless alone,
To spirits without a spot,
Might the mystic pageant of heaven be shown;
And the vision divine came not.

Vanished for aye is the knightly crew
That wandered in quest forlorn;
But the hero's heart is forever new,
And in each age newly born.
'Twas the blessed thirst for the purer and higher
That begot the antique tale;
And my soul burns deep with a smothered fire,
As I dream of the Holy Grail.

The Holy Grail! 'Tis the Present Hour,
And brims with the sacred wine—
Duty and beauty, truth, hope, and power,
And peace, and love divine:
Not borne by a vision of angels three
Is the gleam of its yellow gold,
But its glory is resting on you and me,
And our hands the blest flagon hold.

Sparkling and ruddy, with jewelled bead,
The eternal draught beggars the tale,
And each human soul, howe'er stained in deed,
Inherits the Holy Grail.
Amber-clear, without dregs or lees,
Shines the vintage of life and light;
And whoso will shall the goblet seize,
And drink of God's wine to-night!

Asterisk.

May 24, 1874.

NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS TO INDEX STOCK.

Mrs. F. W. Christern,	New York City,	One share,		$100
Richard B. Westbrook,	Sonman, Pa.	"	"	100
R. C. Spencer,	Milwaukee, Wis.	Two	"	200
R. W. Howes,	Boston, Mass.	One	"	100
Chas. W. Story,	Boston, Mass.	"	"	100
E. W. Meddaugh,	Detroit, Mich.	Five	"	500
Jacob Hoffner,	Cumminsville, O.	One	"	100
John Weiss,	Boston, Mass.	"	"	100
W. C. Russel,	Ithaca, N. Y.	"	"	100
A. W. Leggett,	Detroit, Mich.	"	"	100
B. F. Dyer,	Boston, Mass.	"	"	100
James Purinton,	Lynn, Mass.	"	"	100
F. A. Nichols,	Lowell, Mass.	"	"	100
J. S. Palmer,	Portland, Me.	"	"	100
Robt. Ormiston,	Brooklyn, N.Y.	"	"	100
Mrs. A. L. Richmond,	Lowell, Mass.	"	"	100
Mrs. Benj. Ireson,	Lynn, Mass.	"	"	100
J. E. Oliver,	Ithaca, N.Y.	"	"	100
E. H. Aldrich,	Providence, R.I.	"	"	100
Geo. L. Clark,	Providence, R.I.	"	"	100
W. M. Jackson,	Providence, R.I.	Two	"	200
Mrs. E. B. Chase,	Valley Falls, R.I.	"	"	100
L. F. Garvin,	Lonsdale, R.I.	One	"	100
James Damon,	Ipswich, Mass.	"	"	100
Joseph A. Barker,	Providence, R.I.	"	"	100

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING AUGUST 29.

Mrs. C. E. Streeter, $3; Francis Alger, $3; B. T. Yerrington, $1; James Annis, $3; George Lewis, $2; Eleanor Edwards, $1.50; L. Sesson, $1; W. Blinkhorn, $3; Joseph Solomon, $2; Geo. Lieberknecht, $3; Celia Burleigh, $5; R. S. Olds, $3; M. Samfield, $4.25; Samuel Strauss, $1.25; Chas. A. Miller, $1; C. Wellington, $4.75; George N. Stevens, $5; F. J. Mead, $1; James Miller, 75 cts.; R. Montgomery, $3; George C. Prussing, $2; E. Smith, $1.25; H. Livingston, $2; Frank S. Billings, $1.50; W. E. Darwin, $1; D. P. Wilcox, 50 cts.; E. D. Sohier, $4; L. S. Hapgood, $3; John Wetherbee, $3; H. O. Will*, $3; L. Prang & Co., $5; F. S. Andrews, 75 cts.; J. Edson, $3; Thos. H. Johnson, $4.75; W. H. Bradbury, $2.25; G. F. Clough, $1.50; F. G. Brandt, $2; W. H. Schliep, 50 cts.; Herman Bloch, $2; J. C. Bills, $5; C. A. Greenleaf, $3; Robert C. Grierson, $3.04; A. Y. Hagan, $3; Walter Farnsworth, $3; C. S. Wilkins, $4.75; Marcus T. Janes, $5.50; G. E. Corbin, $1; H. A. Mills, $70; John Sandham, 50 cts.; J. C. Rued, $2; W. T. Newton, $1.80; James Miller, 25 cts.; Anton Brasch, 75 cts.; G. H. Foster, $1.58; C. A. Miller, 25 cts.; A. R. Flanders, 98 cts.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of The Index which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—Postage on The Index is five cents per quarter, dating from receipt of the first number, payable in advance at the place of delivery.

N. B.—When writing about a former remittance, always give the date of such remittance as exactly as possible.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your Index mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY

BY

THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

NO. 1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

Toledo Office: No. 35 Monroe Street. Julius T. Frey, Agent and Clerk.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

Francis Ellingwood Abbot, ... Editor.
Abram Walter Stevens, ... Associate Editor.
Octavius Brooks Frothingham, Thomas Wentworth Higginson, William J. Potter, Richard P. Hallowell, William H. Spencer, Mrs. E. D. Cheney, Rev. Charles Voysey (England), Prof. Francis W. Newman (England), Editorial Contributors.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

BOSTON, SEPTEMBER 3, 1874.

SUNDAY LECTURES.—The Editors of THE INDEX will lecture occasionally on Sundays, if desired, within a convenient distance of Boston.

IT MUST be true—this story of "liberals who live within themselves for fear of public opinion;" for we hear too much of them in our correspondence. But what narrow quarters they live in!

"ABRAHAM LINCOLN'S sagacious remark," says the Boston Advertiser, "that the republic could not endure half slave and half free was based on a clear apprehension of human nature and of the spirit of our institutions." Everybody sees the truth of this remark with reference to political slavery; how long will it be before everybody sees that it is just as true of mental slavery? Christianity and freedom are irreconcilable, and the republic cannot endure unless the former succumbs to the latter.

THE NEW LIBEL LAW passed by the last Congress, as explained by an article we copy elsewhere from the Chicago Tribune, authorizes the punishment of "blasphemers" in the District of Columbia by boring the tongue, branding the forehead with the letter B, and hanging; and it applies to the entire newspaper press of the United States. Any offender of this sort can be dragged to Washington for trial. Is it not about time for the adoption of the Religious Freedom Amendment of the United States Constitution?

IF ANY ONE has absolutely made up his mind to discontinue THE INDEX, it would be a kindness to notify us of the fact and pay whatever is due at the same time. But we hope that no one now on our list will withhold the small amount of assistance to the paper involved in the three dollars a year. Every subscription helps. The best possible aid is to subscribe yourself and help us to get new subscribers. Give us now the good cheer and encouragement of seeing the circulation grow, and that, too, by the unbought goodwill of those who believe in our cause.

BISHOP MCQUADE, of Rochester, New York, delivered an address at Worcester, Massachusetts, on the occasion of the dedication of the Notre Dame school house. He contrasted the public school houses, built by taxation, with this "honest building" built by poor people on behalf of "education with religion," and denounced secular education in round terms. The struggle over this question is coming, friends, and no shutting of the eyes and folding of the hands to sleep will avert it. Are we going to face it like men, or suffer our liberal principles to melt away in a general "mush of concessions"?

MANY OF OUR subscribers, some of them proved friends to the paper, have allowed their subscriptions to become so long overdue, notwithstanding the monthly bills sent out from this office, that their arrearages now amount to a large sum in the aggregate. The business of the Index Association is conducted on a cash basis, all bills being paid promptly on presentation. This renders it necessary for those who owe us to be equally prompt in payment, unless they are willing to involve the Association in embarrassment by their dilatoriness. We hope our friends will honor the bills now sent out with speedy payment of arrearages and advance subscriptions, and thus contribute their share to the common cause.

THERE IS something exquisitely touching in the story of the sergeant at Lookout Mountain, struck down before he could plant the victorious standard o his country on the heights. Is it not the fate of every one who strives to plant his ideal on the summit of the real? The tragedy of duty never abandoned, but never fulfilled in all its greatness, is acted in many an obscure life unheeded by the world; yet not, we trust, unheeded by the audience of One. Tragedy—that was an ill-chosen word: let us hope that the drama finds not here its closing scene, and that this is better than tragic. Here is the story:—

"Almost up! almost up!" was the cry of the wounded sergeant, as they laid him down on the battle-field, and watched tenderly his dying struggles.

"Where did they hit you, sergeant?"

"Almost up!"

"No, sergeant; but where did the ball strike you?"

"Almost up!" was the reply.

"But, sergeant, you do not understand. Where are you wounded?"

Turning back the cloak which had been thrown over the wound, he showed the upper arm and shoulder mashed and mangled with a shell. Looking at his wound, he said, "That is what did it. I was hugging the standard to my blouse, and making for the top. I was almost up, when that ugly shell knocked me over. If they had let me alone a little longer—two minutes longer—I should have planted the colors on the top—almost up, almost up!"

The fight and the flag held all his thoughts. And while his ear was growing heavy in death, with a flushed face and look of ineffable regret, he was repeating, "Almost up! almost up!"

WHOEVER is desirous to know what the early Quakers meant by the "inner" or "inward light" should send to George C. Herbert, 5 Central Avenue, Lynn, Massachusetts, for two recent pamphlets, The Principles, Methods, and History of the Society of Friends, by Augustine Jones, and The Quaker Doctrine of the Inward Light Vindicated, by Charles E. Pratt. The price of each is twenty cents. The numerous and clear passages here cited from the highest Quaker authorities seem to settle beyond a doubt what this famous and beautiful doctrine really is. To be sure, it is not a doctrine tenable to-day, at least in its accepted form, by those who have embraced a thoroughly naturalistic philosophy; for the "inward light" is a supernatural influx, and not a product or intensification of natural human faculties. But there is no little truth covered by the phrase, which might be taken to express the general illumination of the mind consequent on the full and harmonious activity of all the faculties of thought, feeling, and will—these being in a high sense the supreme manifestation or revelation of universal Nature. So interpreted, all pure and elevated action of the human mind becomes the inwardly shining light of the Divine Mind, the realized oneness or identity of the most intensely individual with the most broadly universal. This, to us, is a far sublimer conception than that of the irruption of a supernatural, irradiating influence into a humanity which is in itself merely a darkened chamber. Men have tried long enough to exalt God by depressing man; now let us try to exalt our thoughts of both as in reality inseparable,—nay, if you please, indistinguishable save as the ocean is distinguishable from the drop.

HENRY BRUGSCH-BEY, vice-president of the free schools at Cairo, and a learned Egyptologist, has been making investigations respecting the exodus of the Hebrews under Moses and the route they probably adopted; and his main effort has been to discover a point where the "passage of the Red Sea" could have been made without assuming an absolute miracle. In this effort he is reported to have succeeded. He has discovered the city of Raamses, in building the great fortress of which the Hebrews were employed as stone-workers and brick-makers. Raamses was situated on the Tanitic branch of the Nile, then a very large stream, and was the key to the passage between Egypt and Asia; it was near Migdol and Pithone, other fortresses of the region including Goshen and inhabited by the Khalon, a race not Egyptian in origin and still occupying the borders of Lake Menzaleh. By a treaty between Raamses and a powerful Canaanitish prince, fugitive slaves were to be returned by each contracting party to the other. Hence Moses avoided the regular established route, led the Hebrews more to the North, and crossed, not the Red Sea, but the lake anciently called Sirbonis, at the lower coasts of the Mediterranean. The high tide which overtook the army of Pharaoh Meneptah, in whose reign the exodus took place, is a common occurrence in those parts. Strabo and Diodorus Siculus state that sudden swellings of the water sometimes happen in the regions called "the gulfs," and that King Artaxerxes, leading an expedition against Egypt, lost his whole army there by drowning. These facts explain the story of the exodus without any miracle whatever, by showing that a natural phenomenon is entirely adequate to account for it.

CONSCIENCE FOR FREEDOM: A POINT TO CARRY.

One of the great disadvantages of a weekly journal, as compared with the daily press, is the impossibility of keeping pace, in editorial articles, with the subjects that seem to demand immediate notice. Often wondered at, and sometimes unreasonably blamed, for delays that are inevitable in treating such subjects or in publishing communications that bear upon them, we hope that the majority of our readers have sufficient imagination to guess at the difficulties of the case without any formal explanation, and even to extend this charity (whose other name is justice) to the case of matters which drift so rapidly to the rear as to elude notice altogether. Where so many things of so many kinds have to be done, some are pretty sure not to be done with the utmost desirable despatch or satisfactoriness.

These reflections are suggested by the fact that we have been for several weeks wishing to make some remarks on radical organization for which an admirable opening was made by Mr. Frothingham's article on that subject in THE INDEX of July 23, and by Mr. Angell's little communication referring to it which will be found in the appropriate department of this issue. It need not be said that we attach great importance to the question of organization, for this is well known to all our readers: and the general views presented by Mr. Frothingham and Mr. Angell ought not to be suffered, even at this somewhat late day, to be slighted or passed over without the degree of attention they justly merit.

The leading points of Mr. Frothingham's very able article were these. Every organization must be for a definite object. "People never organize for the sake of organizing;" there must be a point to be carried. Moreover, every organization must be adapted to carry its special point; what is adapted to carry one point is not adapted to carry another. The Church, for instance, is adapted only for certain permanent, general ends, and not for the special work of securing the passage of the Christian Amendment. A crisis must be imminent before the organization it requires can be called into existence, and then it at once creates the army; the shot at Sumter was necessary to rouse the North. "It is of no use to preach organization before the need of it is, as men say, realized;" it will "come at the last moment, but not before." The danger from attempts to enact more stringent Sunday laws, Bible-in-school laws, and Christian Amendments, is too remote to constitute a reason for organizing now. The Orthodox, on the one hand, are not united to-day; the radicals, on the other, will be ready to unite as soon as they do. "Ideal perils are none; real perils alone stir the blood." This is well. "The age of discussion must terminate before the age of organization opens; and the age of discussion has not yet reached its culmination."

This, we believe, is a fair epitome of the article referred to; and what we wish to do is, not at all to controvert it (there is altogether too much truth in it for that), but to supplement it by urging other considerations which again seem to make the other scale of the balance preponderate. Mr. Frothingham will once more, as he has often done before, good-humoredly let the "champion fanatic" of the Free Religious Association have his say! As President of that body, he has taught us all to differ on the platform without carrying into the discussion any other feelings than those which are worthy of a true "fellowship of the spirit;" and he, at least, will know that his own frank and strong presentment in THE INDEX of reasons for not doing what the editor of THE INDEX especially aims to do, is exactly as welcome and appropriate there as if he aimed to do the same thing himself. Outsiders are hopelessly perplexed over such a state of affairs, and cannot for their lives conceive what people who have such diverse ideas on important matters can have in common. Never mind—that is the paradox of Free Religion. Mr. Frothingham did us a real kindness by unreservedly stating his views on this subject in THE INDEX, and we hope all others who have views will do so too. Meanwhile he will wish us to be as unreserved in the expression of our own views. The only object being the truth itself, there is no room for discontent when each one loyally delivers his own message.

Now, conceding the substantial truth of all that Mr. Frothingham has said, the real question is, have the liberals any point to carry? That is, any point of sufficient importance to justify or demand immediate organization. If they have, Mr. Frothingham will probably favor such a step. If not, we shall certainly disfavor it. Whether there is or is not at this time any practical point calling for organized action by the radicals, is a question transcending in importance all others that may be before them. In the one case, organization is the great duty of the hour; in the other case, THE INDEX (so far as we are concerned) is an anachronism.

But the answer to this question whether the liberals have any real point to carry depends ultimately upon the answer to be rendered to another question: is there indeed an irrepressible conflict between Christianity and Freedom? If there is not, organization is a luxury, to be indulged in by those who have a taste in that direction; but if there is, we respectfully submit that organization is a public duty, to be discharged by all who perceive its existence and recognize its obligation. For what does the fact of this irrepressible conflict necessarily teach? Not only that Church and State ought abstractly to be separate, but also that the least mixture of the two is pregnant with sure practical disaster to the State; that the stronger influence Christianity has on the administration of the government, so much the more violent will be the convulsion by which the State must sooner or later eject the poison from its system; that in proportion as the State is built on principles of genuine liberty, so much the more disorganizing and fraught with disturbance is the action of Christian principles upon and within the body politic; that all wise and true patriots must be impelled to seek, by all possible means, to introduce harmony with the fundamental ideas of liberty into the total administration of political affairs; and that this result can only be accomplished by combined efforts and energies, that is, by organization. Whoever comprehends the absolute antagonism between the foundation principles of the Church and the Republic, and is moved by a spirit of high and enlightened devotion to the welfare of his native land, will consecrate his citizenship to the duty of carrying out to completion the half-finished task of the Republic's founders. Not to discern this antagonism of course absolves from the duty; and we attribute the inertness and slowness of the radicals in the matter of organization to their want of discernment. The whole object of THE INDEX, proved by its utterances from the very first number, has been to convince the world that Christianity and Freedom are absolutely incompatible, and that Freedom alone can be the law of a purified humanity. If this is true,—if these nearly five years of labor have not been wofully misspent,—then organization for the purpose of rescuing the Republic from the clutches of a dying but still dangerous ecclesiasticism is necessarily one of the chief ends for which this paper exists. Not until evasion of our main point ceases, and those who cry out against THE INDEX show some signs of understanding our main charge against Christianity,—not until it can be shown that Christianity is the friend of Freedom, and therefore that our premises are all wrong,—will it be possible to overthrow the logic by which we deduce the duty of radical organization from the fact of an irrepressible conflict in the heart of American republicanism. The radicals have this great point of transcendent importance to carry: the deliverance of the Republic from the desperate, tenacious, and tightening clutches of the Church. To secure this point, they ought to organize at once for discussion, for agitation, for determined action. When their eyes are opened, as they certainly will be by the course of events in the not distant future, they will doubtless be prompt to act; but if they would only learn wisdom from the war, they would act to-day.

The danger to be guarded against is not a special but general one; the Christian Amendment movement is merely one symptom of it. It is really to be found in the chaos of ideas which alone renders possible the abuses specified in the Demands of Liberalism. Out of this chaos no one knows what may emerge. The tinder and the flint lie side by side on a cask of powder. What is wanted is to open eyes and to prick consciences, just as in the days of Anti-Slavery; and the way to do this is to organize, not for discussion or agitation alone, but for political action —the most efficient means of discussion and agitation. The public mind needs to be stirred up to reflection on the immediate bearing of the United States Constitution on the New Testament. Show how flatly the former contradicts the latter; show how the fundamental law of the Republic is not only Extra-Christian, but Anti-Christian; show that Christendom is the victim of a dream, when it fancies it believes in the Sermon on the Mount, and that Jesus had no more comprehension of a democratic republic than he had of spectrum analysis; show that the Rights of Man, not Faith in Christ, pitch the key of all modern civilization. To-day, a bitter religious contest is liable to be precipitated at any moment because the allegiance of the people is divided between battling principles, and no one can foresee what unlooked-for event may precipitate it. This is the true function of the Liberal League—to be the lightning-rod by which the deadly bolt hidden in the bosom of the cloud shall be silently discharged into the earth, instead of tearing with premature ruin through the magnificent political structure now slowly rising. Where agitation is open, no worse danger is to be feared than a little bad taste now and then; but beware of the silent conspiracy.

The dread lest the Liberal League shall excite dangerous commotion is groundless; that was the old, foolish cry against the Anti-Slavery Society. But the secret plotting of ecclesiastics, the stealthy steps by which they get themselves intrenched in laws and customs through the apathy of liberals, the sly tapping of the public treasury for sectarian purposes, and all the other devices by which Christianity, Romish and Protestant, is seeking to retain its present place and power and get more, are always perilous and active causes of evil. Organization avowedly to carry out and develop the ground-principles of the Republic is a greatly needed influence here and now; it is a positive, constructive force; and we appeal straight to the consciences of radicals throughout the land to take a large view of the situation and multiply Liberal Leagues. Their objects are few and intelligible; their plan is simple; their work is all-important. There is precisely as much justification, precisely as much demand in reason, justice, and philanthropy, for the Liberal League to-day as there ever was for the Anti-Slavery Society. The slave-principle is active and powerful in society and government; the evil it works, though not appealing so openly to superficial observation and inflammable sympathies, is just as subtle and deadly as ever, and is preparing the way for some great convulsion in the future. Now is the hour for prevention. The danger is perhaps "remote," and perhaps not; but who shall wisely leave a match burning in the corner of his house because the smoke and flame are still insignificant? Face fairly and fully the facts that Christianity and Freedom are hostile principles,—that they coexist in our political home, each an evident and powerful cause of human action,—that all over the land little indications are to be seen of bitter collision between the two; and then deny who can the existence of a smouldering fire which it is manifest duty to extinguish. The great abuse is the usurpation, permitted and increasing, of political power by the Church. The great duty of radicals is to abolish this dangerous abuse from constitution, statute and administration. Have a conscience for FREEDOM; for that is the point to carry!

F. R. A. ANNUAL REPORT.

The Report of the Proceedings of the last Annual Meeting of the Free Religious Association (1874) has been printed in pamphlet form, and is now ready for distribution.

It contains the annual report of the Secretary, and verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonneschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes with regard to Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian."

Members of the Association are entitled to the tract gratis. Price to others, single copy, 35 cents; package of four or more, 25 cents each. It can be obtained in Boston at A. Williams & Co. s, and at the office of the Association, No. 1 Tremont Place. Applications for it from abroad may be sent to the office in Boston, or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER, Secretary.

PRIVATE AND PUBLIC.

Is there not too little respect for private life in this country? Are not we Americans too fond of publicity, of reputation, and insufficiently disposed to cultivate a modest, retiring, and unambitious character? Are not we too curious to know how our neighbors live, too willing to uncover the secrets and sanctities of their individual and personal relations, and too desirous to impress and astonish them with our own significance and importance?

I think it is too true that we Americans have an inborn liking to "show off." We are not satisfied to do our best quietly and unpretendingly, but love to challenge attention to our deed. Every man, and now every woman, wants "a career." Long all our boys have been taught that they may aspire to be congressmen and presidents, and it would seem that it is likely to come to pass that our girls in the future will scarcely be satisfied with a much less distinction. Ambition is in general a human, but in particular an American, passion. We all wish to write a book, or make a speech, or edit a newspaper, or be an office-holder, or flourish as the leader of some cause or party. We desire to be distinguished, and cannot bear to be overlooked or to live unnoticed. Our class of public men is becoming fearfully large, and a large class of public women appears to be very imminent. Evidently there is less and less contentment with a simple, undemonstrative, and quiet life. The home would seem to be losing its power of attraction, and the hotel and the boarding house to be taking its place,—with all their accompaniments begetting competition of personal vanity and pride, their haste and noise, their general openness to everybody's inquisition, and their inconvenience to the amenities and refined delights of domesticity.

This living so much in the eye of the public has a bad effect on character. Few men or women can do it, and come off unspoiled. The indulgence of ambition and the experience of popularity breed conceit and vanity, and an aggravation of self-conscious personality, in all but the very greatest natures. The more applause we have the more we want. The more power we are allowed to exercise over others the more demanding and exacting we are of deference and submission. Fame, like alcohol, produces an appetite for itself. Publicity destroys the taste for privacy. As kings hate to abdicate, so reformers hate to lose their occupation, and leaders to give up their leadership. Many lecturers and platform speakers continue to talk, and many authors continue to write, long after they have ceased to have anything worth saying, simply because they have become so infatuated with a public life that they cannot be content with a private one; they continue to live on a reputation since they are not satisfied to live on character. We have plenty of literary people, but no great literature. We have an abundance of lecturers, but very few lectures that are worth hearing.

Publicity seems somehow to extract and absorb the rich juices of a fine nature, and to hinder the development of its noblest and most admirable qualities. We have all sorts of brilliant geniuses in this country, but we really have not the genius of character. Perhaps no man better than Mr. Emerson has endeavored to teach us how to have this, but we have been slow to learn. And we have been slow to learn because we have cultivated private life so little, and have been so anxious to take ourselves, and all our mental and moral belongings, into the hot and hasty and dusty and scorching arena of public life. We must have a change in this particular, or we shall not have a fine growth of knightly men and gracious women; we shall not have many philosophers, or poets, or saints, or heroes, or even statesmen. We must cultivate peace, not war; we must cultivate the art of conversation more than of debate and discussion; we must cultivate the science of society rather than politics or ecclesiasticism; we must cultivate private friendships, and domestic loves, and calm vocations.

Then, too, we must invoke less the public judgment to settle what ought to be left to the judgment of the individual. We must try less to regulate personal relations and responsibilities by public opinion and legislative enactment. We must look upon the liberty and the privacy of the individual as too sacred to be invaded except in the last exigency of social welfare. It is none of our business how our neighbor lives,—what he eats or drinks or wears, or thinks or says or does,—so long as he is just and kind to us; nor is it any more the business of the public how the individual lives in private, so long as all his relations and responsibilities to society are properly discharged. It is an impertinent and unwholesome curiosity which would seek to unearth and publish and discuss secrets that had better never be revealed, or to meddle with concerns of private life that have no necessary connection with public good. Natural morality and natural religion are to be encouraged; not that which is conventional and traditional. All sumptuary laws should be avoided, and every restriction upon individual rights which the true science of society does not prescribe. It is our first concern to make ourselves true and pure; our last to make our neighbor so. We must live by the rule that seems to us commanding, and suffer and incite him to do the same. The law of evolution is the great gospel of the nineteenth century; for that instructs us to have faith in human nature and human progress. He who has such faith looks out upon the world, upon all its ignorance and foolishness and sin, with a calm and cheerful heart; since he sees what vast betterment has been accomplished already for man, and believes in vast and vaster improvement to come.

A. W. S.

Literary Notices.

THE ANCIENT CITY: A Study on the Religion, Laws, and Institutions of Greece and Rome. By Fustel de Conlanges. Boston: Lee & Shepard. 1874.

La Cité Antique should especially be read by two classes of thinkers: Those who regard religion as an experience, varying according to the circumstances and moment of its development, through which the race has been gradually passing; and those who consider religion as one of the primal intuitions of man. Each would find something to change in or add to the judgment he has already formed, and would become more and more convinced of the close connection between intelligence and outward progress, and of the dependence of civilization upon knowledge, and freedom from superstition, rather than upon morality.

In the early days of Greece and Rome (for the institutions in each were so similar that what was true of the one was measurably true of the other also), earlier than the period at which their history usually begins, we find religion was the authority and the educator of the family and the tribe,—religion not as we know it, but religion in the narrow sense of a cult, with all its superstitious and binding rites. Belief concerning the soul and death, the worship of the dead, the sacred fire, and the domesticity of religion comprised the circle of doctrines held by the early ancients.

Their creed taught that the soul was buried with the body; hence, if the body was not buried, the soul must wander. Under such painful necessity, how could it avoid becoming malevolent? But if piety presided over the obsequies of relatives, and at stated times bore food to the tomb, the soul of the departed was nourished. Much responsibility had the father in those early days, or, in case of his death, the eldest son. Not only must he provide for the wants of his household, but of his dead, and keep alive day after day, year after year, the sacred "hearth fire." We moderns have no precise word for that which no longer exists. This fire must be heaped up with sacred wood, chosen from all the rest of the forest that apparently would have answered as well, and tended without any touch of pollution in its sacred presence. For this fire was the domestic centre of religion, each family having its own rites and hymns; a delightful privilege, now accorded only to sects. The eldest son was born but to perpetuate this fire; thus arose the law of primogeniture, and the girl married, not her husband alone, but his cult.

Religion, not the right of the strongest, was the central principle of this well-ordered family, and the man exacted obedience but in virtue of his relation to the fire. How much easier for women, then, if they were, as now, inclined towards a devotional frame of mind! Property was guaranteed by and involved in religion, for the land must be held as the abode of this hearth fire. To the eldest son the delights of bachelorhood were unknown; he must marry to maintain the fire, and if there should be no eldest son, then one must be instantly adopted. As neither the abode of the sacred fire nor of the dead could be moved, the boundary became the god Terminus; yet, as eldest sons would become impatient and migratory, they cunningly perpetuated the same hearth fire in other places by carrying with them a clod of earth with which to begin anew.

The principle of relationship was not birth, but the cult. Men were "agnates," if in tracing descent back from male to male they found a common ancestor. "Cognation" was relationship through women, "independent of the rules of the domestic religion."

Another slight responsibility of the father, as preserver of the sacred fire, was the endurance of whatever punishment any member of his family might incur. As recompense for this, he was not obliged to make a will, for such things were unknown. In short, this fire had such a tenacious, all-embracing hold upon the family, that the reader expects to hear of all sorts of tricks played upon it by mischievous children, such as the casting on of indiscriminate wood, and rough words hurled at it by tired older or zealous younger brothers. It must have been a worse institution than the Church, when one does not feel inclined to attend it.

Nor could the multiplication of a family destroy the fire; for, as society grew, the gens, its first form (which was one very large family rather than an association of families), had its sacred fire, and graciously admitted the servants to its worship. Hence clientship,—an honorable servitude because of this fire, recalling the modern "old times" when the servants shared their master's pew. A number of families uniting formed the Greek phratria [or phratra] or the Latin curia, and dared then, though each retaining its own domestic divinity, to adopt one common to all. Curias, grouped together through force or voluntarily, formed a tribe, and the god of the tribe became a deified man, when began also the worship of the gods of physical Nature. As now the one God of us all is yet the highest ideal of each individual, so then each man made his own divinity and wrangled for its supremacy; and from his quarrels, successes, and failures, he learned to care more for the progress of human association than for his own deity.

From the tribe again grew the city, which was a confederation respecting the civil and religious independence of tribes, curias, and families. Thus society was only developed as ideas of religion enlarged. The "cité" among the ancients was the religious and political association of families, while the "ville" was the place of reunion, the sanctuary. Of course religious rites accompanied its foundation. Not only the king but the magistrates were consecrated by religion. The power of the census reminds us of the Jewish year of jubilee, for each man remained in the station to which he was relegated by the censors till the next census was taken four years later. Woe to an aspiring Roman! Perhaps lobbying was practised then. As new laws were constantly made and none ever changed, dexterity in the application of them equalled legal corruptness in more familiar places. An exile then was not as comfortably situated as some of our modern colonial convicts, but was driven from his cult, his hearth fire, and the lustral water of sacrifice. Conlanges strenuously insists that such a religion, holding such immense power, even deciding upon war and peace, could never have been feigned, but must have been developed as a natural growth.

If this is true, how could the ancient city have fallen? For two reasons: 1. Because the human will continues to develop, not stopping in the enclosure of the hearth fire, and because men existed outside of it who suffered from it. The plebeian who had no part in this aristocratic cult grew restive, and formed his own cult. The patricians or fathers submitted through astonishment. The king, who at first was both priest and king, lost his political authority like Pius IX., and an aristocracy ruled. The gens lost its primitive unity, clientship was gradually ameliorated; in Greece it disappeared through the influence of Solon; at Rome, freedom dawned more slowly. Family changes spread into the State; the aristocracy and the people struggled together, the latter wishing to reinstate the kingship, and meeting with a partial success in the establishment of chiefs whom, as they could not call them kings in default of a "fire," they denominated tyrants. So broke upon these minds, enslaved for generations to religious authority, the idea that power could reside in a man delegated to him by other men. It was a great abyss in thought to have bridged, and only was it bridged because men were driven to it by daily personal ills and necessities.

This new plebeian aristocracy, coining money, engaged in commerce, and industries were possessed with a feeling of personal value. Did they have a Channing who told them of human dignity? That political might be followed by religious reform, Servius bade all the people share in the water of lustration. Henceforth wealth, and not religion, marked rank. As wars were frequent, the number of patricians thereby diminishing, the plebeians were allowed the privilege of being killed or being victorious in battle, which chance, as it was an honorable one, they gladly accepted; and thus the distance between the rich and the poor was overcome, and the population of the city maintained. The old spirit, excluding the plebeians from the religious and political constitution, finally allowed them their own chief and tribunes, who were sacrosaints; that is, religion forbade the tribune's body to be touched by any of the truly religious. Thus two powers arose in Rome, though not in the army. The lower class gradually secured the submittal to their approbation of the laws made by the patricians, or rather they changed that office into that of the military tribunal. Next they claimed and took the pontificate. Law became public, and not immutable. The "essential function of government ceased to be the maintenance of religious ceremonies, but of order and peace within, of dignity and power without." After the establishment of democracy on the ruins of the aristocracy of the rich, which had succeeded to that of religion, war ceased to be made for principles and rights, but for interests. The poor, equal in rights alone, sold his vote, and the democracy of the poor became New York tyranny.

The municipal character was slowly lost through the transformation of beliefs (that is, philosophy), and through the Roman conquest. Old faiths became impossible; old rites were retained. Rome increased her population by war, kept her own gods, and adopted those of the nations she conquered. Men wanted to live where they could best prosper, irrespective of institutions. Both the dedititii (those who relinquished their persons and lands) and the allies craved the right of Roman citizenship, which was extended from one class to another—from the patricians to the clients, to the plebeians, the Latins, the Italians, the provincials, until Rome was but the union of a dozen great people under one master. A belief had been established, had been modified, had undergone a series of revolutions, until it disappeared as the victory of Christianity marked the limit of ancient society.

All this and much more is told in a clear and direct style that is delightful to read. The purpose of the book is constantly kept in view,—the religious basis of ancient society; albeit with too much repetition, which, though it may impress the truth on the hasty, is wearisome to the careful, reader. Like all studies of the past, the analogies it suggests between that time and the present are as suggestive of future improvement as they are full of mystery and bewitchment. Whatever their religion may have been or ours is now, to it do we both owe all that loyalty to right and impulse for constant development which led them from their sacred "hearth fire" to our God, and is leading us to a wider recognition of that same God.

KATE GANNETT WELLS.

"GEORGE," ASKED the teacher of a Sunday-school class, "who above all others shall you first wish to see when you get to heaven?" With a face brightening up with anticipation, the little fellow shouted, "Gerliah!"

Communications.

WAITING TO ORGANIZE.

PASSAIC, N. J., July 25, 1874.

EDITOR INDEX:

Dear Sir,—The article on "Organization," by Mr. Frothingham, in this week's paper, "hits the nail on the head," I think, and will create an earnest feeling.

It is true that when the danger becomes imminent we will be ready.

The fact that those who are earnestly and openly free thinkers are few in number merely proves that but few feel the importance of speaking their minds freely. Many live in a business world which taxes their full energy, and have work to do which seemingly takes their whole time.

If true radicals, they do that which is at hand, earnestly and faithfully.

But when the time comes that the roll-call is sounded, the response will be in no uncertain sounds.

Let the leaders keep their armor bright, and they may rest assured the rank and file will be ready.

Our late civil war developed leaders from the body of the army; so it will be always.

Is it not true that every man living a true life, thinking for himself, acting out his deepest convictions, is developing in the truest sense a power stronger than creed or church, which will exert a positive influence when needed? Very truly,

F. A. ANGELL.

[This breathes a spirit which every broad and balanced radical mind must especially like, for it is the spirit of courage and high purpose,—of practical earnestness, determination, and lofty aims. There cannot be too much of it. Whether there is now any need of organization, is discussed in the editorial columns of this issue, where further thoughts on this subject will be found.—ED.]

SECRET ORGANIZATION PROPOSED.

ST. JOSEPH, Mich., Aug. 16, 1874.

EDITOR OF INDEX:—

In all parts of our country, and especially in small villages, may be found earnest, honest men, of free religious opinions, standing almost alone for what they think the truth; not always scholars, yet readers and thinkers, bold in the utterance of opinions, and generally wanting in that policy which brings thrift. Others there are, equally decided in their views, whose worldly wisdom leads them, if not to ignore, at least to cover up their real sentiments.

This first class, particularly, though markedly independent and self-sustained, at times strongly feel their isolation and want of helping sympathy. With the "infidel of the bar-room," whose avowed opinion is the result of his surroundings rather than that of clear conviction, they cannot fraternize; and their brethren of "discretion" repel them by their shuffling policy.

Now, throughout the country, this first class must number thousands who, though respected by society in a general way for their sterling qualities, yet feel that they are viewed with a certain suspicion or distrust, and are of themselves very weak to oppose the prejudices everywhere about them.

The question has occurred to me whether there was not a way by which to reach such persons (and all other liberals) and unite them, that they may feel the strength which numbers give: this union to be in some sort secret—that is, having signs or pass-words known to members only,—bound by no creed or authority, but having for their watchword "Liberty and Truth," and for their object "Fraternity and the Promotion of Free Thought."

Would not such an organization or union as I have hinted at give strength to the individual, and incline him to work for the definite purpose of adding to its numbers?

You understand that this is a mere suggestion. I have no working plan to propose, but think it best to place the matter in wiser hands. It seems to me, however, that if such union is practical and desirable benevolence should be made as large an element of it as possible.

It seems to me that THE INDEX might initiate such a movement by the publication of a plan of union, and by inviting liberals of all shades of opinion to send in their names for membership, together with a small sum to cover the cost of correspondence, and whatever private information was necessary to the members. Afterwards any member might receive or initiate additional members.

The style or name might be "The Brotherhood," "Truth Seekers," "Freedom Lovers," or some similar name. Of course women would be eligible on the same terms as men.

Such fraternity would need an exponent or organ, and THE INDEX is ready to supply that need.

Yours for truth,

E. C. ALPHONSE.

[It is very likely that many liberals could be induced to join a secret organization of this sort, especially if its chief objects were social and benevolent. The mystery and secrecy might add a charm to the proposal not possessed by the simple idea of furthering a principle; and, if properly and honorably conducted, such an association might blamelessly accomplish a great deal of good. Yet we must frankly confess that what attracts many repels us, and we suspect we are not alone in this. All our instincts are opposed to secret organization. Secrecy could not, we think, effect anything good that might not be better effected by openness and absence of mystification. Still, the subject is a very fitting one to discuss, and any further thoughts on it will be carefully heeded.—ED.]

WOMEN AND PRIESTS.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Dear Sir,—I was on the point of presenting the following suggestions in reference to the woman's suffrage movement, when I came across your comments on Mr. John Francis Smith's letter in your issue of Aug. 13, 1874.

The large mass of women throughout the world are at present to a greater or less degree under the dominion of the priests. I think it safe to say that, but for them, a very large portion of the Orthodox churches would be bankrupt to-morrow, and their pews emptied. Who doubts that, if they possessed political power, they would favor the adoption of the Christian constitutional amendment, exemption of churches from taxation, rigorous Sunday laws, Bible in the schools, and all the other ills, present and prospective, against which religious liberals are contending?

Without entering, then, into nice questions of justice, or the physiological difficulties which in the opinion of many appear to have some bearing on the case, it occurs to me that religious liberals are somewhat in the position of one who is in possession of a pair of revolvers, one of which may possibly not belong to him, and who is requested by the supposed owner of it to deliver it up,—the request, however, being coupled with the broad intimation that the first use to be made of the weapon will be an assault on the person lately in possession. Fiat justitia, ruat cœlum would be a poor argument to advance at this juncture in support of the claim.

I offer this suggestion, recognizing that the leaders in the women's rights movement number among them many most liberal and able thinkers, who would themselves writhe as much as the rest of us under the ill effects resulting from the adoption of their views.

We are now witnessing the pernicious results of thrusting on an ignorant people the responsibility of the ballot. I am not disposed to institute any comparison between the colored race and women. It is sufficient for the purpose of establishing my point to say that both are at present unfit for self-government —the result (possibly) of ages of oppression. The former, because of their inability to discriminate between good and bad men, have placed the powers of government in the hands of the most disreputable men; the latter, by reason of their subserviency to priests, would govern under their dictation.

Let us take a lesson from our want of success with the colored race, and educate women before investing them with political power.

Yours, SAMUEL R. HONEY.

NEWPORT, R. I., Aug. 16, 1874.

[As we purpose to say something on this subject at greater length than is possible in a mere note, we will refrain at present from replying to the considerations so forcibly suggested by Mr. Honey.—ED.]

WOMAN AND THE CHURCHES.

It is often urged by some liberals, as a strong objection against woman suffrage, that the granting of that will be in effect a step backward in reform, inasmuch as women are the principal mainstay and support of the churches; and that, in case of the ballot being given them, their influence will undoubtedly be used to uphold and strengthen bigotry and superstition, and so perhaps swing us back a century or two, or at the least bring us for a while to a dead halt in our hurried onward march. So they say, "Let us withhold from her so potent a power, which she may possibly use to our disadvantage."

That there is danger of this, it would be useless to deny; but, conceding so much, and setting aside the selfishness and moral cowardice implied by this willingness to deny to others a right claimed for themselves, on the ground that the sole possession of that right is an advantage on which they build their own hopes of success, would it not be well for these liberals to consider whether that will be true progress which will grant certain benefits to one-half of humanity at the expense and hindrance of the other? Would a school where the teacher gave his undivided attention to the progress and improvement of the higher classes, to the total neglect of the lower ones, be considered a successful and model institution of learning?

It is full time that the attention and efforts of radicals be directed to some proper modes of weaning women from their absorbing devotion to their churches and to their pastors. Those who would deny woman the ballot on this ground seem to think that it is enough to neutralize an evil without any attempt at eradicating it. What is needed is not only protection against an evil, but the uprooting of the evil itself. The ballot, I contend, will be the most effectual antidote to the poison of feminine devoteeism.

That woman's nature is more religious, reverential, and devotional than man's is no longer a question; nor in referring to her past history and education could any candid thinker expect her to be otherwise. Always in the past her position and duties have fostered and developed feeling at the expense of intellect, emotion at the expense of knowledge. Woman's sympathy, her love, her fear even, have been cultivated by ages of dependence into morbid activity; her desire for love and sympathy has increased beyond man's power to satisfy.

Men, with a larger, wider sphere of action, and more varied ambitions and interests, can live, if need be, a loveless life without conscious loss, while their energies are engrossed by intellectual cravings and achievements. Lacking these cravings and achievements of the brain, woman has only the cravings of her heart to satisfy; and, if she fail to find objects of love and sympathy, she is unhappy beyond all words. Nay, so strong has this need of sympathy become through ages of cultivation that, even in those women whose intellect has a man's power and strength, the achievements of that intellect fail to satisfy the woman's emotional nature, which cries out, as Mrs. Browning makes Aurora Leigh:—

> ——"I was flushed with praise,
> But, pausing just a moment to draw breath,
> I could not choose but murmur to myself,
> 'Is this all? all that's done? and all that's gained?
> If this, then, be success, 'tis dismaller
> Than any failure.'
> My Father! thou hast knowledge, only thou,
> How dreary 'tis for women to sit still
> On winter nights, by solitary fires,
> And hear the nations praising them far off.
> Too far! aye, praising our quick sense of love,
> Our very heart of passionate womanhood,
> Which could not beat so in the verse without > Being present also in the unkissed lips,
> And eyes undried because there's none to ask
> The reason they grow moist."

The churches have always ministered to this feminine demand for sympathy and love. In the ideal Christ women find all that they miss so in the real man. Every ceremony and sermon of the churches is based on feeling, to the exclusion and bewilderment of the intellect; and only in religion can woman, as she is now constituted, find entire solace and satisfaction.

What, then, is the obvious remedy for this state of things?

It is to check the already too strong tendency to emotion in woman's nature. Every effort should be directed to the strengthening and enlargement of her intellectual powers, and the subjection and control of her feelings. For the sake of her own peace, happiness, and advancement, let her teach herself to bring her loves and sympathies into accord with her reason and subjection to her will.

The ballot, in giving her a wider range of interests, will be a most effectual aid in this respect. Without this larger field of thought and action, a field which will make her feel a responsibility towards all her fellow-beings, instead of a merely narrow personal interest in those of her own faith and household, there can never be any hope of reason taking the place of religion in the feminine nature.

In the coming struggle of womanhood for development in intellect and equality with men, it has been feared and deplored that she must lose somewhat of that tender submissiveness and clinging, dependent grace which has hitherto been claimed as her highest, sweetest charm in the eyes of men. "She has no longer," says Dr. Bushnell in his Reform against Nature, "the trusting nature. She neither idolizes nor idealizes her husband. She has no homages, looking up, any more than he, in his ranges of force, has courtesies to pay her, looking down." And Tennyson makes one of his savage kings express the same idea as to woman's proper sphere:—

> "Man for the field and woman for the hearth,
> Man for the sword and for the needle she,
> Man with the head and woman with the heart,
> Man to command and woman to obey:
> All else confusion."

That there will a change in woman's character result from the enlargement of her mind and consequent wider range of thought and pursuits, there can be no doubt. We confess so much; but we do not confess or think that this enlargement and widening of character is going to deteriorate her, or render her less loving or lovable. The cultivated and intellectual man is not found to lose, because of his culture and intellectualism, anything of the sweetness and strength of his emotional nature. No more will the cultivated and intellectual woman. Because feeling is under the control and guidance of intellect, it is not any the less feeling; nay, the emotional nature is then likely to accomplish more than when it was its own guide and master. Intellect makes the better general, feeling the better soldier; both perform an equal part in the winning of battles.

What we demand for woman is that no more obstacles be placed in her path to enlarged knowledge than are placed in that of man. It is little enough to ask that the weaker shall have as few hindrances as the stronger.

Instead of the weak fears expressed by some that equal liberty accorded to woman will bring to a sudden standstill the car of progress, let them rather learn to echo the brave, manly words of Tennyson's hero in The Princess:—

> "Blame not thyself too much, I said, nor blame
> Too much the sons of men and barbarous laws;
> These were the rough ways of the world till now.
> Henceforth thou hast a helper, me, that know
> That woman's cause is man's; they rise or sink
> Together, dwarfed or godlike, bond or free."

SARA A. UNDERWOOD.

CHICOPEE, Mass.

[This beautiful paper, no less strong than beautiful, will certainly be greeted with a hearty welcome by the readers of THE INDEX.—ED.]

LAWS CONCERNING THE SEXES.

BALTIMORE, August 18, 1874.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT:

My Dear Sir,—In your criticism of Mrs. Woodhull's communication appearing in THE INDEX of August 13, you say: "If an unmarried man and woman choose to live together, we know of no criminal prosecution to which they are liable." The Revised Statutes of Massachusetts, p. 739, chap. 130, sect. 5, provide: "If any man shall commit fornication with an unmarried woman, each of them shall be punished by imprisonment in the county jail not more than two months, or by fine not exceeding thirty dollars." Turning to Bouvier's Law Dictionary, we read: "Fornication—the unlawful carnal knowledge of an unmarried woman with another, whether the latter be married or not." 10 Mass. R. 153 reads: "A criminal cohabitation will not be presumed by the proof of a single act of criminal intercourse between a man and a woman not married;" which thus makes continued residence with a woman without marriage more criminal, while a single act of unchastity is less criminal. The law is still more rigid toward those who have been separated by divorce. Rev. Stat. Mass., p. 481, chap. 76, sect. 19, reads: "If any persons, after being divorced from the bond of matrimony, shall cohabit as husband and wife, or shall live together in the same house, they shall be liable to all the penalties provided by the laws against adultery."

I beg to offer the above by way of correction of your information, and think you will find similar laws in some other States. Marriage, to my mind, is the buttress, the bulwark, the foundation stone of all decent and refined society; and whoever attempts to shake its foundations with a ruthless hand is well deserving of the reprobation of all decent people. Nevertheless, the present ideas of marriage, both legal and social, are susceptible of marked improvement. An instance occurs often to my mind of the class of men who have an utter horror of divorce—a man whose wife divorced herself with a rope. Living with him proving intolerable to her, and the shame of a public divorce equally horrible, the mother of several children divorced herself with a rope. This man speaks most pathetically of his "departed companion," and holds up his hands in holy horror of divorce. He is a regular member and constant attendant at an Orthodox church, and has always had a clear eye to the financial value of a woman when contemplating the marriage relation. For my own part, I believe that all married people who have none but legal ties to bind them together had better separate at once, with proper arrangements for the care and maintenance of wives and children. The union of Church and State, the most arbitrary and tyrannical laws in rude societies, are necessary, right, and proper; but is it not equally true that all, or nearly all, our boasted reforms are only the abrogation of laws which an advanced society has outgrown? It seems to me that public opinion furnishes the most arbitrary and inexorable marriage laws; and, while a believer in the development theory recognizes the monogamic rule as the highest, purest, wisest, and best, he cannot but recognize and allow other forms of relation between the sexes in lower conditions of development, provided that women and children are amply protected and provided for. Would not a relaxation of the laws tend to greater individual care, caution, and reflection before consorting in marriage of whatever nature? Women and children must be protected and provided for; but further than this, it seems to me, society has no right to interpose with legal restraints and penalties. Public opinion, education both moral and scientific, would then be free to operate, improving and perfecting both marriage and the outbirth of that sacred relation. We boast our ability and scientific efforts in the improvement of horses and cattle, sheep and swine, as well as of our advanced and perfected varieties of produce in farm, field, orchard, and vineyard; but, alas, where are our improved and perfected specimens of men, women, and children? Negative virtue (physical chastity) is the all-sufficient boast of women who have few or no positive virtues or attainments to boast of, and who contemptuously slander, scorn, and despise women of positive worth and virtue, who have been subjected to greater temptations. What chastity can compare with the absolute love and practice of truthfulness? Most happily married myself, I have no personal interest in this question; but, as an observer and humanitarian, it is to me one of the most important and profound problems of the hour. Is it not the mistake and error of society that daughters are taught to marry for a support rather than instructed in those important things,—the intelligent and scientific preparation of food, the nursing of the sick, the rational begetting and rearing and training of children, and attaining such an education as will fit them to be companions as well as wives to their husbands? Are not our young men more captivated by prettiness of a shallow kind, in person and dress, and more cautious as to the social and financial standing of their future wives, who are to be the unhealthy and suffering mothers of chance-begotten and unwelcome children, rather than disposed to select women of conscience, common sense, substantial education, and sound physical health, and who are thus prepared intelligently and conscientiously to perform the important duties of wife, companion, mother, nurse, and instructor of healthy and welcome children? P.

[We are obliged to our correspondent for his correction of our ignorance as to the law. With him, we are in favor of amelioration of all unwise statutes on this subject, and in favor of more liberal divorce laws than generally prevail. But all legislation, in our view, should be governed by a purpose to make marriage honorable and home sacred.—ED.]

"PAT," SAID a traveller, "why do you make the stone wall around your shanty so thick?" "Why, plase yer honor, I hear they have extraordinary high winds in Ameriky, so I thought if I built it about as thick as it was high, if it should blow over it would be just as it was afore, yer honor."

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12	Insertions,	10c per line.
" 13 " 25	"	8	"	"
" 26 " 51	"	6	"	"
" 52	"	5	"	"

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

CIRCULATE! Circulate!! Circulate THOSE PETITIONS. Don't feel satisfied when your petition is a yard long, unless you have asked every one to sign it. Get good, influential names.

GET EVERYBODY.

Don't neglect to show the petition to any one, because he is a stockholder in some church, or other exempted property, as many such persons admit the justice of the demand; and those who will not should be made to take the responsibility of refusing to sign it.

Don't delay! We want the petitions returned early.

Per order of EXEC. COMM. of the BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,

has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, assisted by ABRAM W. STEVENS, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
THOMAS W. HIGGINSON, Newport, R.I.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address
THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 4.

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

ASSOCIATE EDITOR:

ABRAM WALTER STEVENS.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
T. W. HIGGINSON, Newport, R.I.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
F. W. NEWMAN, England.
CHARLES VOYSEY, England.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS,

OF THE

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. Abbot, D. A. Wasson, T. W. Higginson, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. Wasson on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. Abbot, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. Wasson on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. Abbot on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age;" an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. Higginson on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potier on "Religion Old and New in India;" also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Sympathy of Religions, by T. W. Higginson. 25 cents.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 10 cents, singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

Price.

ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets 1.50
Concord Days 1.50
Records of a School. A new edition 1.50

ALCOTT (LOUISA M). Little Women. Two vols 3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories 1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl 1.50
Little Men 1.50
My Boys, &c 1.00
Shawl-Straps 1.00
Work; A Story of Experience 1.75

ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS. 1.50

ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism 2.00
New Poems 2.00
Literature and Dogma 1.50

AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. 1.50
Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine 2.00
Edelweiss 1.00
German Tales 1.00

BACON'S Essays 1.00

BAGEHOT on the English Constitution 2.25
Physics and Politics 1.50

BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy 1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol 1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol 5.00

BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms. 2.50

BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations 3.00

BARTOL (Rev. C. A.). Radical Problems ... 2.00
The Rising Faith 2.00

BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols 5.00

BIBLE in the Public Schools.
Records, Arguments, and Decision in the case of John D. Minor et al. vs. the Board of Education of the city of Cincinnati: et al. in the Supreme Court of the City of Cincinnati 2.00
Arguments of Ramsey, Sage and King in favor of the use of the Bible ..... .50
Arguments of Stallo, Hoadley and Mathews against the use of the Bible ..... .50
The Opinion and Decision of the Supreme Court of Ohio in the above case ..... .25

BRACKETT (ANNA C.) The Education of American Girls ....

BROOKS' (CHARLES T.) Translations. The Layman's Breviary 2.25
The World-Priest 2.25
The Tall Student ..... .75

BUECHNER'S Force and Matter 3.25

BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols 6.00

CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol ..... .80

CARPENTER (DR. W. B.) The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions 3.00

CERVANTES' Don Quixote 1.50

CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing 1.50

CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet Naturalist. With Memorial Verse. 2.00

CHENEY (MRS. E. D). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside 1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience 1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated 1.50

CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions 3.00
Common-Sense in Religion 2.00

CLARKE (Dr. E. H.) Sex in Education 1.25

CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World ..... .75

COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. 3.00
Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays 5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age ..... .20

CONWAY (MONCURE D.) The Earthward Pilgrimage 1.75

CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol 2.00

CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE; Its True Aims and Requirements A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans 2.00

DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship 2.50

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies" 1.50
The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor" 1.00

DARWIN'S Origin of Species 2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols 4.00
Journal of Researches 2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals 3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated 6.00

DESCARTES (RENE.) Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences 2.25

DICKENS' Child's History of England 1.50

DUHRING (JULIA.) Philosophers and Fools. A Study 2.00

ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each 1.00
Comprising—
Adam Bede.
Romola.
The Mill on the Floss.
Felix Holt.
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life.
The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols 3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols 3.50
Wit and Wisdom of 1.25
The Spanish Gypsy 1.50
How Lisa Loved the King ..... .50

EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series .. 2.00
Essays. Second Series 2.00
Miscellanies 2.00
Representative Men 2.00
English Traits 2.00
Conduct of Life 2.00
Poems. With Portrait 2.00
May-day and Other Pieces 2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold 1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold 1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols 5.00
Society and Solitude 2.00

EVANS (E. P., Ph. D). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanase Coquerel the Younger 1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols 5.00

FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion 2.00

FEUERBACH (LUDWIG.) The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation. 3.00

FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.. 2.00

FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity 1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers ..... .20
Child's Book of Religion 1.00
Life of Theodore Parker 3.00

FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols 9.00

GALTON (FRANCIS.) Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences 2.00

GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol 5.00
Elective Affinities 1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols 3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham 1.00

GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life 2.00
Literary and Social Judgments 2.00
Creed of Christendom 3.25

GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait 5.00

HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter s Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France 1.50
Thoughts about Art 2.00
The Unknown River 6.00
The Intellectual Life 2.00
Chapters on Animals 4.00

HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second 1.00
Child World. Part First 1.50

HAMILTON'S Lectures.
1. Metaphysical Lectures 3.50
2. Logical Lectures 3.50

HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol 2.00
Twice-Told Tales.
Mosses from an Old Manse.
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.
The Marble Faun.
The English Note-Books.
The American Note-Books.
The French and Italian Note-Books.
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.

HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers ... 1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance 1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment 1.50
Atlantic Essays 2.00
Oldport Days 2.50

HOWELLS'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey 2.00
Suburban Sketches 2.00
Venetian Life 2.00
Italian Journeys 2.00
A Chance Acquaintance 1.50

HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, " 'Ninety-Three".. 1.75

HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits 10.50

HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life 1.75

HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses 1.25
Bits of Travel 1.50

HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature 1.25
On the Origin of Species 1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism ..... .50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals 2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews 1.75

INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems 2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen 1.50
Songs of Seven 2.50

INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skelligs 1.75
Studies for Stories 1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series 1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours 1.25
Mopsa the Fairy: A Story 1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect ..... .60

INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures 2.00

INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES.
No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall 1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot. 1.50
III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith 1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain 1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq 1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr 2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine 1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aëronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew. 1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D 1.50

JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers. 1.50

JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India 5.00

JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian 2.50

JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Reglus Professor of Greek. Four vols 12.00

KERR (ORPHEUS C). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous 2.00

LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols 4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols 6.00

LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings 4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics 2.00

LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham 1.50

LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. 3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols 4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed 3.00

LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life. 1.50

LEWIN (Rev. RAPHAEL, D'C). What is Judaism? or, a few Words to the Jews 1.00

LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols 4.00
Prose Works. Portrait 4.00

LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols 4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series 1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series 1.50
Among my Books 2.00
My Study Windows 2.00

LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Posies for Children. .75

LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man.. 2.00
Pre-historic Times 5.00

LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols 8.00
Elements of Geology 3.50

MACDONALD (GEORGE.) The Vicar's Daughter 1.50

MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife 3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. 3.00
Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848 ..... 3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann 1.25

MARTINEAU (JAMES.) Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol 2.50
The New Affinities of Faith ..... .25

MAURICE (Rev. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind ..... .75

MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire 1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations 1.50

MILL (JOHN STUART.) Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each 2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each 2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. 1.50
Political Economy. New and revised edition 2.50
The Subjection of Women 1.25
Essay on Liberty 1.25
Representative Government 1.50
Autobiography 2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works .. 1.0

MILLER (JOAQUIN.) Songs of the Sierras. 1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands 1.50

MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species 1.75

MORLEY (PROF. JOHN.) Voltaire 2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols 5.00

MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-Time Stories 1.50

MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series 2.50
The Same. Second Series 3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume 2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion 2.00

NASBY (PETROLEUM V). Swingin' Round the Cirkle 1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky 1.50

NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy 4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed 2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations.. 2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy 1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical 4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism. .25
Against Hero-Making in Religion ..... .25

PARKER (THEODORE.) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion 1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols 4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols 3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings 1.50
Historic Americans,—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.. 1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence... 1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations,—A.D. I. and MDCCCLV. A Christmas Story ..... .60

PARSONS (THEOPHILUS.) The Infinite and the Finite 1.00

PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar 1.50
The Trotty Book 1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts 1.50
Hedged In 1.50
The Silent Partner 1.50
What to Wear? 1.00

PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition 2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours; the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates 2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena 1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts 4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc 5.00
The Expanse of Heaven 2.00

ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante 2.50

SCHELLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies 6.00

SCIENCE PRIMERS:
1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S... .50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe ..... .50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With illustrations ..... .50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth ..... .50

SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols 31.25

SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition 2.00

SMILES'S (SAMUEL.) Self-Help 1.50

SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical 1.25
First Principles 2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Æsthetic 2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers 2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed 2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols 5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols 5.00
Philosophy of Style ..... .50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.. 2.00
Sociology 2.00

SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus ..... .25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics 9.00

STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny 1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin ..... .00

STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New 2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols 12.00

TAINE'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols 7.50
The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske 2.50

TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems 1.75

THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.. 1.25
Vanity Fair.
The Newcomes.
Adventures of Philip.
Pendennis.
The Virginians.
Esmond, and Lovel the Widower.
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol. 1.25

This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.

1. Barry Lyndon, Hoggarty Diamond, &c.
2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.
3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c.
4. Four Georges, Humorists, &c.
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unreprinted Pieces.

THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals 1.50

THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods 2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait. 2.00
The Maine Woods 2.00
Cape Cod 2.0
Letters 2.00
A Yankee in Canada 2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimac Rivers 2.00

TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind 2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols 5.00

TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer 1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People 2.00
Light and Electricity 1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps 2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion 2.00
On Sound 2.00
Radiant Heat 5.00
Forms of Water 1.50
Lectures on Light 1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall ..... .50

TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures 1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings 1.50

VOYSEY (Rev. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each 3.00
Vols III. IV. and VI., each 3.75
The Voysey Appeal ..... .50
Voysey's Defence at York ..... .50

WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden 1.00
Saunterings 1.50
Back-Log Studies 2.00

WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion 1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols 6.00

WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life 1.50
Essays and Reviews 3.00
Character and Characteristic Men 1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.... 1.50
Success and its Conditions 1.50
Washington and the Revolution ..... .30

WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life 1.50
We Girls: A Home Story 1.50
Real Folks 1.50
The Other Girls 2.00
Pansies. A volume of Poems 1.50

WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols 4.00
Child Life 3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place, Boston.

$25 A DAY GUARANTEED using our WELL AUGER AND DRILL in good territory. HIGHEST TESTIMONIALS FROM GOVERNORS OF IOWA, ARKANSAS AND DAKOTA. Catalogues free. W. GILES, St. Louis, Mo.

ROWLAND CONNOR,

Having finished his engagement with the Free Congregational Society of Florence, will answer invitations to lecture for liberal societies. Address at JAMAICA PLAIN, MASS.

THE BOUND INDEX FOR 1873.

The bound volume of THE INDEX for 1873 (Volume 4) will be promptly forwarded to any address on receipt of $3, by express, at the purchaser's expense. A complete file for the year can be furnished in no other form.
Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

PENN MEDICAL UNIVERSITY,

OF PHILADELPHIA.

The regular course of Lectures in this Institution will commence on the first Monday in October, and is open to both sexes. The school is liberal and progressive, and thorough in its teachings. For announcement giving terms and other particulars, address
E. D. BUCKMAN, M.D., DEAN,
No. 1030 Spring Garden St.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.

To THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.
Yours truly,
HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address
THE INDEX,
No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston.

CHARLES SUMNER'S

GREAT WORK.

PROPHETIC VOICES

CONCERNING AMERICA.

By CHARLES SUMNER.

Fine Edition, Tinted Paper, with Steel Portrait, Crown 8vo., Cloth extra, $2.

Aside from its literary and historical merits, this volume has a special interest, from the fact that it was the last work on which r. Sumner was engaged before his death.

"PROPHETIC VOICES" will be found of great value to all who take an interest in the history of our country, so full is it of passages in which the unexampled prosperity of our land has been foretold by philosophers, poets, statesmen, and orators, of whom the lamented author has also given interesting sketches.

Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price.
Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

BUST OF

THEODORE PARKER,

BY

SIDNEY H. MORSE.

Dignity, reverence, sweetness, vigor, equipoise, breathe through the clay; the artist has so filled his own heart with appreciation of that noble life that he has been able cunningly to mould it into those delicate lines which the character had wrought on the living fibre. We are tempted to exclaim, as we stand beside it, as the old artist did to his perfected work, "Speak then!"—Hannah E. Stevenson.

All the characteristics of my husband are in the bust,—his greatness, his goodness, his tenderness, his love. You cannot give life to clay or marble; but you can represent it, and this Mr. Morse has done.—Lydia D. Parker to Hannah E. Stevenson.

The eyes, though but of clay, are gleaming with possible indignation, with possible tears; the lips are set firm with the resolution of him who, like Paul, could "fight a good fight" as well as "give a reason."—Samuel Longfellow.

The first time I have seen Theodore Parker since he died.—Wm. Sparrell.

The best representation of Mr. Parker ever executed in clay.—Boston Daily Globe.

The face is strong and noble as it should be. The likeness is good.—Boston Daily Advertiser.

Nothing appears for beauty alone, or finish, or to show the vanity of the artist. All is forgotten in the man—the true, real, Yankee man, Theodore Parker.—L. S. H. in the Golden Age.

Copies of this Bust, finely finished n plaster, $10 each. Boxing for transportation, $1 extra. Freight or expressage paid by party sending order. Weight of box about fifty pounds. Orders may be sent to
S. H. MORSE,
Room 13, 25 Bromfield St., Boston, Mass.

STUDENTS FITTED for any College.
Please address
EMILY J. LEONARD,
Meriden, Conn.

CONSTANT EMPLOYMENT.—At home, male or female, $30 a week warranted. No capital required. Particulars and valuable sample sent free. Address, with six-cent return stamp. C. ROSS,
Williamsburg, N. Y.

FREE DISCUSSION

is held at HOSPITALLER HALL, 593 Washington Street, Boston, every Sunday, at 10½ A.M., 2½ and 7½ P.M. All that relates to the Religious, Political, and Social interests of mankind constitute the subjects for discussion. THE INDEX and Index Tracts are for sale every Sunday at Hospitaller Hall.

WEST NEWTON ENGLISH AND CLASSICAL SCHOOL.—The twenty-first school year of this Family and Day School, FOR BOTH SEXES, will begin Wednesday, September 16, 1874.
For particulars address
NATH'L T. ALLEN, Principal,
West Newton, Mass.
At home Saturdays.

TO NEWSPAPER PUBLISHERS.

Having conveniences for doing the best of newspaper printing at reasonable prices, I should like to contract for composition alone, or for composition, press-work, and mailing, for one or more weekly papers.
Best of references given, and satisfactory work guaranteed. GEO. H. ELLIS,
7 Tremont Place, Boston.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.
Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c., of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing
THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX.

Bound volumes of THE INDEX for 1871, 1872, and 1873, will be sent by express (at the purchaser's expense) on receipt of $2.50, $2.50, and $3.00 respectively. These volumes are exceedingly valuable singly, irrespective of each other; for the important essays and other articles they contain are of permanent interest, and will furnish as instructive reading twenty years hence as to-day. No more valuable present could be made to a friend struggling out of Orthodoxy than one of these volumes.
Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

WARREN'S

TRUE CIVILIZATION.

Price 50 cents.

PRACTICAL DETAILS,

showing the workings of the

COST PRINCIPLE.

Price 25 cents.

For sale by

S. H. MORSE,

25 Bromfield St., Boston.

FOR SINGING CLASSES!

THE

SONG MONARCH!!

By H. R. PALMER, assisted by L. O. EMERSON.

A book admirably fitted for the use of Singing School Teachers, having, in addition to a compact theoretical course, more than 180 pages filled with Glees, Quartettes, Airs, Tunes, &c., &c., pleasant to sing anywhere, and constituting a most agreeable course of study. A good book also for College Choirs, for Seminaries, and Social Sings.
Price 75 cts., or $7.50 per dozen.

FOR CHOIRS AND CONVENTIONS.

THE LEADER!!

is the Leader of all Church Music Books for 1874 and 1875, being the first in the field, and of a character that cannot be excelled.
By H. R. PALMER, of Chicago, assisted by L. O. EMERSON, of Boston, containing also compositions from the hands of large numbers of American Music writers.

For CONVENTIONS, CHOIRS and SINGING CLASSES.

The LEADER has 86 pages of Singing School Music, the same as that in the Song Monarch, and large numbers of new Tunes and Anthems, all by the best composers.

Price $1.38, or $12.00 per dozen.

Specimen copies of the above book mailed, post-paid, for retail price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO.,
BOSTON.
CHAS. H. DITSON & CO.,
711 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE.

Our organization some time since decided to direct its efforts for the present towards securing the

Repeal of the Laws

whereby church and other corporate property is unjustly exempted from its share of the burden of taxation.

As a means to this end, we have published for general circulation several thousand copies of a

TRACT

on Church Exemption, being the article by Mr. Abbot which appeared in THE INDEX of Nov. 27.

We have already issued three editions, the last of which is nearly exhausted.

We desire soon to issue

Another Large Edition

of this and other tracts on the subject, so that we can place a copy in the hands of

EVERY VOTER IN THE STATE,

and generously to supply the calls for them in other States.

To do this, we need funds; for, although we have made arrangements for printing the Tract at very low cost, it is impossible for the Boston League, with its various other expenses, to bear the entire expense alone.

Will not, then,

All Friends of the Movement

come forward and help us with liberal donations?

We frequently receive communications from parties wishing tracts to distribute, asking how much they shall pay. To such we reply that the cost to us is about $2.50 per thousand, and we shall be pleased to furnish them at this price per thousand, or 30 cents per hundred, to all who will circulate them. But all additional donations will be gratefully received for the purpose of circulating them gratuitously throughout the country.

Last winter this subject was brought before the Legislature of the State, and many petitions were presented asking a repeal of these unjust laws.

The matter is still in their hands, and at the next session will undoubtedly be acted upon. Meanwhile the

Voice of the People,

favoring justice and equity, should be distinctly heard.

We shall soon be ready to send out

BLANK PETITIONS AGAIN,

thus giving an opportunity to those who have not already done so, to protest against this continued wrong.

Let us make it

THE LARGEST PETITION

ever presented to our legislative body.

Will those willing to assist in circulating these petitions please

SEND IN THEIR NAMES?

We would say, also that we feel deeply the need of

Other Organizations

in this State, to coöperate with us in securing equality and justice, by pressing the "Demands of Liberalism." If, in any locality, there are those who are inclined to

Form a Liberal League,

we are ready to render such assistance as lies in our power.

LIBERALS!

If all will unite and work, the results sought can be accomplished
Address

BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE,

NO. 1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

Per order of the
EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

NONPAREIL Farm Feed, Bone, Drug, and Hand-grinding MILLS. Ten Sizes. Also Cotton-Seed Hullers. Illustrated pamphlets free. Address
SEDGEBEER, SHEPARD & MILLER,
181 East Front Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

THE AMERICAN EDITION

OF

MONCURE D. CONWAY'S

SACRED ANTHOLOGY,

A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES,

has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.
Address THE INDEX,
1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,

BANKERS,

LEROY, MINN.

Branch Office, 137 Broadway, N. Y.

Money Invested in First Mortgages on Improved Farms in Minnesota and Iowa, running three to five years, with Coupon Interest Notes, drawing 9 per cent. annually in advance, or ten per cent. paid semi-annually in advance, or 12 per cent. per annum, annually, free of expense to the Loaner.
☞ 10 per cent. paid on receipt of money at the Bank, or in New York, till invested.
For Full Particulars, send for Circular.

137 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

REAL ESTATE SECURITIES, paying 8 to 10 per cent. interest, or

Investments in Real Estate in Chicago and vicinity,

if judiciously made, are the best and safest modes of employing capital. The old

Real Estate and Loan Agency

OF

ERNST PRUSSING, 143 RANDOLPH STREET,

Chicago (Established 1853),

Guarantees perfect title and ample security in all its Real Estate Loans.
Firstclass securities always on hand. Interest and principal collected without charge. Real Estate Investments made on commission or on shares; taxes paid, &c.
Orders of capitalists and real estate owners respectfully solicited.

REASONS FOR USING THE

EUREKA SPOOL SILK.

It is full length. It is full size. It is smooth and elastic, and is equally adapted to hand or machine use.

Many kinds of spool silk are a perfect fraud, being not only shorter in length, but a much finer size than they are represented to be, and of so poor a quality as to be unfit for use. The ladies will always find the Eureka Silk exactly as represented. Every spool is warranted, and the manufacturer's name indelibly branded on every spool. Call for it.

RADICAL AND LITERARY

LECTURES

BY

JOHN WEISS,

RADICAL LECTURES.

The Idea of Hereafter.
An Act of Faith.
Intelligence in Religion.
Religion and Science.
Heart in Religion.

SHAKSPEARIAN LECTURES.

FIRST SERIES.

1. Cause of Laughter.
2. Irony and Humor.
3. Dogberry, Malvolio, Bottom, Touchstone.
4. Ajax in Troilus and Cressida: The Porter in Macbeth: The Fool in Lear.
5. Falstaff.
6. Hamlet.

SECOND SERIES.

1. The Women of Shakspeare.
2. Portia.
3. Ophelia.
4. Macbeth and Lady Macbeth.
5. " " " "
6. Contrast in Shakspeare's Characters.

Address JOHN WEISS,
32 E. Brookline St., Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year. LIBERTY AND LIGHT. Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 5. BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 10, 1874. WHOLE NO. 246.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF ———.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in ——;

Also, as soon as five hundred such Liberal Leagues shall have been formed in different places, to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be hereafter called, in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the needed reforms.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the National Convention of Liberal Leagues when called together.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

So far as I am concerned, the above is the platform of THE INDEX. I believe in it without reserve; I believe that it will yet be accepted universally by the American people, as the only platform consistent with religious liberty. A Liberal League ought to be formed to carry out its principles wherever half a dozen earnest and resolute Liberals can be got together. Being convinced that the movement to secure compliance with these just "Demands" must surely, even if slowly, spread, I hope to make THE INDEX a means of furthering it; and I ask the assistance and active co-operation of every man and every woman who believes in it. Multiply Liberal Leagues everywhere, and report promptly the names of their Presidents and Secretaries. Intolerance and bigotry will tremble in proportion as that list grows. If freedom, justice, and reason are right, let their organized voice be heard like the sound of many waters.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

BOSTON, Sept. 1, 1873.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State; and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation.

GLIMPSES.

GEN. FORREST, hero of the Fort Pillow massacre, appears as a protestant against the Trenton massacre. It must have been horrible indeed to call out a murderer's protest against murder.

GOLDSMITH MAID is the heroine of the hour. She made her mile in 2:14. Rev. Mr. Murray may cease his search for the "Perfect Horse;" and the woman-suffragists may point triumphantly to her exploits.

THE CATHOLIC Bishop of Dubuque, by refusing to pay his taxes on a block of stores and houses, has had it sold by public authority, and is likely to lose at least half of it. He strained the exemption privilege a little too far, and "bit his own nose off."

JEFFERSON DAVIS, the pious Churchman who slew multitudes of helpless Northern prisoners at Libby and Andersonville by slow tortures of starvation and exposure, joins in the protest against the Trenton massacre. Can we have heard the worst of it yet?

THE CENTENNIAL ANNIVERSARY of the First Continental Congress was held at Philadelphia on the fifth of September. "There were giants in those days;" and a hundred years hence posterity will discover giants in these. But the real giants do not always get into history.

THE EPISCOPAL CONGRESS is condemned by Bishop Potter, but the people of his sect are "getting their backs up," and also their noses, at the Bishop's arbitrary interference. Even Bishops in this country must be cautious how they twitch the reins, or they may be thrown out of the vehicle.

THE VIGOROUS POLICY of the government with regard to the assassinations perpetrated by the "White League" at the South deserves universal approval. The President's letter to the Secretary of War is all that could be asked; and there is ground to hope that such insufferable outrages as have lately disgraced the country will for the future be effectually prevented.

AT NEWTON, Massachusetts, it is reported by the Boston Journal that "a Young Men's Christian Association has been formed in Ward One for the purchase of real estate. Each member is to pay into the common fund the sum of $5 monthly." This is doubtless for the purchase of real estate in the New Jerusalem—in obedience to the precept: "Lay not up, etc., etc."

A "MASSACHUSETTS CHURCHMAN" expostulates with Bishop Potter, of New York, for his ecclesiastical impertinence in wanting to muzzle the laymen of his church. He declares that "the policy of ultramontanism is to rule in a realm of enforced silence," and adds: "You adopt very logically, in the position you hold, the motto 'What we need preëminently is not talk, but work.'" There is a wonderfully familiar sound in that motto. We have heard it in Unitarian Conferences. It always means the same thing, and that is—gag-law.

THERE SEEMS to be too much evidence of a widespread conspiracy at the South to intimidate the negroes into submission to white rule. The White League threatens to revive the Ku-Klux-Klan under a new name; and the brutal murders now reported every day will soon raise public indignation at the North to a great heat. In some manner or other protection should be given to the negroes, who, whatever they may have been provoked to do in self-defence, are manifestly more sinned against than sinning. The longer the whites persist in outrage, the worse it will be for them. Every true friend of the South (and we certainly claim to be one) must perceive that her only hope of prosperity lies in scrupulous respect for equal human rights.

DR. BLAUVELT admits, in the Independent of August 27, that Orthodox Christianity is in a very bad way. He says, with as much honesty as courage: "Depend upon it, therefore, if we American Christians begin the conflict for Christianity—now inevitable, now fairly opened here—with modern unbelief on the supposition that our current Orthodox or evangelical conceptions of Christianity, as such, are defensible, no choice will eventually be left us but to surrender battle after battle until a perfect panic will overspread this entire Christian nation,—no one being able to conjecture where defeat will end. Either our Orthodox conceptions of Christianity must, in many most important and most unexpected particulars, be abandoned as neither tenable nor consonant with Christianity, or else Christianity itself is doubtless doomed to meet the same overthrow here as on the other side." But even Dr. Blauvelt fails to see that Orthodox Christianity cannot modify itself as he desires without committing suicide.

PROFESSOR TYNDALL'S address before the British Association for the Advancement of Science is likely to arouse no little discussion. "Abandoning all disguise," he says, "the confession that I feel bound to make before you is that I prolong the vision backward across the boundary of the experimental evidence, and discern in that matter which we in our ignorance, and notwithstanding our professed reverence for its creator, have hitherto covered with opprobrium, the promise and potency of every form and quality of life." This is a frank profession of acceptance of the fundamental principle of scientific or philosophic materialism. But Tyndall adds: "The whole process of evolution is the manifestation of a power absolutely inscrutable to the intellect of man. . . . It is by the operation of an insoluble mystery that life is evolved, species differentiated, and mind unfolded, from their prepotent elements in the immeasurable past. There is, you will observe, no very rank materialism here. . . . We have the conception that all we see around us and all we feel within us—the phenomena of physical nature as well as those of the human mind—have their unsearchable roots in a cosmical life, if I dare apply the term, an infinitesimal span of which only is offered to the investigation of man." It is this conception of a cosmical life, of which the life of man is the highest expression and manifestation, that is coming more and more to be emphasized by modern science; and it is this conception that we have unfolded as best we could in "The God of Science." The tendency now freshly illustrated by Professor Tyndall is one which must be studied most attentively by all who would comprehend the real drift of modern thought; and we do not see how any one can fail to perceive that a new kind of theism is germinating in the very heart of that "physical science" of which too many stand in irrational terror.

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walters; Secretary, E. M. Bridgman.
WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—President, J. B. Bassett; Secretary, Anton Grethen.
NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
BALBEC, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
SAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.
AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Vaux, Secretary.

Christian---Extra-Christian---or Anti-Christian?

THE CHRISTIAN'S PLEA.

ADDRESS OF REV. S. R. CALTHROP, AT THE SEVENTH ANNUAL MEETING OF THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION, IN BOSTON, MAY 29, 1874.

One word to enforce what our President has said in regard to this platform. This platform is not, ought not to be, and I trust never will be, a "Christian" platform. To so name it would be an insult to the gentlemen of the Buddhistic, Hindu, Chinese, or Jewish religions whom we ask to meet with us on equal terms. Certainly, also, this platform is not an "Anti-Christian" platform. That would be to omit the word "Free" from its name. It might still be a religious platform from which all Christians were excluded,—a very natural alliance perhaps, but one not universal. It would be an odd thing to have a universal free Congress of Nations Anti-English. And again, this platform is not an "Extra-Christian" platform, because that would mean the same thing in a milder form. It would be merely your International Congress of Nations with the English, we will say, left out in the cold. The Free Religious platform, then, is a place where the religions of the earth can shake hands and say a mutual "God bless you," and "God speed."

Now, I am not here to say there is no other religion but the Christian religion: the whole includes the parts. I am simply here to speak for those persons who are born with Christian nerves and constitutions, blood and bones, and under Christian circumstances and traditions. I am here to claim for myself and those born under like circumstances precisely what I claim for my Buddhistic brother; and if his rights are in danger, I stand up for him first of all. I should be foolish indeed to suppose that my exotic thought could go right into China and into that Eastern world, and instantly supplant Buddhism, and do for that world what Buddhism does to-day. To do it, a thousand years of labor would hardly suffice; and what, in the meantime, are those millions to do if they now have no light at all? So much, then, by way of preliminary.

And now I ask your thoughtful attention to the reasons why most of us here ought to stand, as I think, where I do. My friend, the Rabbi here, answers me that he is glad to stand as I do,—that is, by his own religious name and traditions. It would be a shame for him to refuse the splendid inspiration of his own faith; he knows that inspiration better than I, and he can witness for it better than I, and can cleanse its impurities better than I. It is not my business even to state these impurities and corruptions. Let me keep my own door-step clean. But I have a certain religious history, and that history gives me my religious position and duties. I have a universal history, and I have a special history. Let us first, then, see the universal history; and upon this you will find that all the speakers to-day will be substantially in accord. Paul said, eighteen centuries ago, "The promises of God are yea." In nineteenth century language, that delights in longer words, the same thought is stated by saying the universe is an affirmation and not a negation. Atheism, pure and simple, may be left out of the question as mere negation; for what is Atheism? Suppose I were to say this desk made the world, made the universe and the galaxies. You would smile at me, because this desk is a very little thing; but take away that desk, and say the vacancy made the world. It is still more foolish, is it not? Atheism means no answer at all to the problem. Atheism means the human mind giving up in despair and saying, I cannot understand. Atheism says an everlasting No to the world; and so inevitably your answer tends towards Yes. The universe, then, is a reality; to solve it you have got to find a power that shall do all that ever has been done or ever can be done. You have got to give to your primal Force, if you will so call it, power enough to keep the galaxies centred; you have got to put into your primal Force mind enough to produce all the minds that have ever lived on the earth and in all worlds; you have got to provide for something capable of evolving angel intelligence, capable of evolving all the poetry, beauty, and wisdom of mankind; you have got mentally to manufacture a power which is as much beyond the finite being of all worlds as man is above the mummy; and when you have got that Power, that Life, I do not care what you call it, provided only that you bow the knee before the infinite beauty, and splendor, and greatness.

Now science, with its doctrine of "nothing can come of nothing," is going to reaffirm this grand instinct of the heart of man. Yet more: it is going to reaffirm, one by one, the most sacred beliefs and hopes of men; and, in its restatement of them, it is going to prove, as never before, that they rest on the solid rock of reality. Does any one doubt this? Well, see that already science has reaffirmed the trustworthiness of the common sense of mankind as to the reality of the universe without us. Now thought, in its metaphysical stage, so far from doing this, had only confused and distressed men, by throwing a haze of doubt and a sense of unreality over the whole outward universe. But not only does science pronounce the universe to be real in exactly the sense that men and women have always understood it to be real, but it gets rid at once of a thousand perplexing questions by showing that this reality is a reality of growth. Stars grow; galaxies grow; suns, planets, moons, grow; strata grow; plants, animals, men, grow; thoughts, institutions, grow; and so now let us put into one word, if we can, just what science means by the universe being a reality of growth. Science knows distinctly two things; first, a real universe, and, secondly, real people, with real senses and real thoughts, inside the universe; and says the whole scheme of the world and of life is impossible and unintelligible unless you take a real universe surrounding a man and a real man surrounded; and so science bids us look at each particular limb of man, and each particular organ and function of his mind as something real, produced by a real universe. It sees light surrounding eyes, and it says light creates eyes. There is a real light yonder, a real eye here. The light is not made of the eye, but the light makes the eye, and the eye is the thing which pronounces that light is. Now our eyes at last have come up from the lowest possible grade, where our monad ancestors merely saw a dim glimmer passing over the uniform surface of a single cell,—have mounted up to such perfection that it is supposed to be religious to say that we have got perfect eyes. Yet we see only one octave of color. I believe that eyes are yet to be born on this planet that will see seven octaves of color. So with regard to the ear; that has been a slow creation too, under atmospheric force. You have only three thousand tuning-forks; my monkey ancestor had only a few hundreds, and my monad ancestor had none at all; and so I hope that my children's children's children will have a hundred thousand or a million. And so on through all the faculties of man. Each is a reality of growth.

But now see what we have arrived at. Science says that this real leg, with all its nerves and all its muscles and all its bones, has got secret and subtle connections with real forces outside of it. My limbs bow themselves instinctively to the law of gravitation. Space and time have been around organisms since time began, and, at last, nerve connections, infinite in their number, have been made in bodies, so that we instinctively know we are living in vital connection with real space and time. A real something outside, a real faculty inside; a real faculty inside, prophesying a real thing outside. Now this is true of every faculty of man from his foot up to his forehead. Let us see now what it says here, on the top of the head. There is a real organism up there, isn't there? The doctrine is that nothing can come of nothing. The human mind has got an outward eye. It came of light, the light around every man. The human mind has got what we call an inward eye,—conscience, the sense of justice, love, etc. Is that made by no reality, by sham? The doctrine is that organisms cannot be produced without reality. You can get dream and fancy and myth without it, but legitimate, real organisms, never. And so in me I have an organism which yields a consciousness of truth, justice, spiritual light, beauty, goodness, and a love which lives forever; and I know very well this inside faculty is produced by an Infinite Justice, Truth, and Beneficence outside of man. The reality without must correspond with the reality within. This may perhaps seem vague now, yet some day it will be the simplest matter of science. For if you produce these qualities of yourself, it is inevitable to say that a real thing is produced in the human race without a real thing to produce it from. Where did you get your organ from? But the real universe keeps enforcing justice, enlarging science, and expanding art. The reason is, the Infinite Mind is getting organized here, and is making its spokesmen and spokeswomen speak with louder tongues.

We then together bow—all religions, knowingly or unknowingly, bow—before an Infinite Power which produces the beauty and glory of things. This is the universal element, common to all religions; the everlasting foundation on which all religions rest.

We must now consider, in the second place, the connection of the universal with the special, and the true relation of species to each other. You may say, if you please, that the special is the universal working under conditions, under the limitations of time, place, and circumstance. To bring the Infinite completely into the consciousness of the dwellers in time appears to be the master difficulty of the universe. When you think of an infinite power which throws its streams of life and force into you, it is a wonder that things do not go up into heaven at once; but when you carefully investigate the intense conservatism of Nature, which is necessary to her endurance, then, on the other hand, the surprise is that any progress should be made at all. When you think how absolutely essential it is to birth that the life of the child should come from the parent, it is hard to see how new things get into this world at all. Now, here is exactly the difficulty of science. When you come to special organisms, the evolutionist is met by this demand: Show us the evolution of a single species. Those who have studied species know the intense permanence of them: how, after millions of years, the likeness is still undimmed. Now it so happens that in religion you can put your finger upon the birth of species, and show exactly how the progress started, and get some glimpse at its laws. The evolutionist tells you that you have to suppose, in the first place, an exceptionally favored locality; secondly, an exceptionally receptive organism; and then there will be a possibility of a movement upward; and therefore you have to look to your exceptional locality and organisms, and then you get the phenomena of religious progress, or the origin of species in religion.

When Sextus Tarquin got possession of the town of Gabii he sent a secret messenger to the old crafty statesman, his father, and said, "I have got the confidence of the people: what am I to do next?" His father did not answer a word, but took the messenger into his garden, and took his cane with him, and came to a beautiful poppy bed. He took his stick and snipped off the heads of the tallest poppies; the messenger carried back word of this action to Sextus Tarquin, who understood his father's meaning to be that he was to cut off all the progressive and most powerful minds in the town. He did so; and where was Gabii? And so when Protestantism swept through Europe, and Spain, being the strong tower of Catholicism, cut off the tallest poppies in its domain, what became of the Reformation there? So you can easily kill out your rising faculty, your new thought, your forming species. A thousand times a new thought or movement has thus been killed. You perceive, then, the necessity of careful investigation of places where the thoughts had a chance.

Now let us look at Judaism. You will see that for one phenomenon it had a race of prophets, and a belief in the living Spirit which comes over and into men as inspiration. Now, if the Jewish people had cut off all those prophetic heads, where would Jewish progress have been? Does not this seem to show a little the necessity, as a condition of progress, of able minds, touched with a high idea, before other minds can grasp it? Cut off Phillips, Parker, May, and Garrison from the anti-slavery movement—cut off its great men as fast as the crop comes up,—and where is the republic of to-day? This, then, is the divine place for exceptional minds; and of course the higher the minds the more complete the manifestation of their uplifting power. Now, a friend of mine says that the universal in each religion is its sole and essential great truth, and that it shares this with all others; and that the specialty in the religions is the necessary antagonistic part of the religions. Very well. If each specialty is necessarily antagonistic to all other specialties, all special claims are false, or all but one are false, because you cannot have two necessarily antagonistic truths. But what are the facts in regard to our special religions? It happens to be a fact that five hundred years before the Christian era a beautiful mind rose up in India and vowed before the universe that he would try to make an end of evil, and pain, and sorrow, and wrong; and the fire that was in his heart smote millions of hearts, and they said, Let us bring pain and wrong to an end by means of justice, and truth, and love to all. That is a fact; that is to say, the wonderful influence of one man must have had power to set the human heart longing, and working, and aspiring; and Buddhism came. It is also a fact that right into the midst of wild Arabia there came one man who lifted up a nation of Bedouin chiefs into a great, new faith, and every man was exalted by the contact, and lifted up by the personal magnetism that belonged to Mohammed. Now are these two facts necessarily antagonistic? Of course, if Mohammed and Buddha were each to insist that he was the only teacher, there would be antagonism at once. But if each lovingly acknowledges the mission of the other, to people and times wide asunder, where is the antagonism? Truly seen, on the contrary, they illustrate each other. Each helps to make the amazing personal influence of the other no longer seem fabulous, but credible and possible.

Turning to our own religion, we see the same great truth illustrated. We must consider the whole Egyptian, Jewish, Persian, Greek, and Roman inspiration as one vast stream of religious influence, of which our complex Christianity is the continuation. It is the largest stream because more streams run into it, and its sources are found over larger areas of humanity. When I look on all those majestic rivers flowing into it, I should say we have got in Christianity a Mississippi of a religion. After that Jewish people had been guided to truth and beauty, for hundreds of years, and other great elements of religion had mingled with Judaism, then comes the flower of the Jewish religion, the Prophet of Nazareth, and says this belongs to the world,—not only to a handful of people in Palestine, but to all people everywhere. And so the beauty of Jesus is not that he is jealous of Buddha, jealous of a man who tried to bring up the Hindu to love his neighbor!—we have not so learned Christ,—but that he yearns to do for the West what Buddha longed to do for the East: namely, to make an end of misery, pain, and wrong, and to bring in the kingdom of heaven; and the glory of Jesus is that his personality had an influence so deep, persuasive, and penetrating, that to-day his life-blood flows in millions of Christian breasts. We say, therefore, if your special claim is made in any narrow and exclusive way, then some other special claim comes immediately into conflict with it. But if my special claim shakes hands with your special claim—if Jesus clasps hands with Buddha, and says, "Brother, the grace of God comes to us both, anointing us for our tasks,"—then the special claims no longer antagonize, but fraternize and help.

And we find, I think, if we look a little further, that in the first place this view emphasizes the universal claim of all religions to the living God and the living truth; and, in the second place, that it maps out to each section of the world its special duty. Now, it would be an odd thing, in the city of Boston, if Mr. A, B, C, and D, down to X, Y, and Z, had no special tasks, but each should try to do the other's work; they would never get anything done at all. I say, therefore, it is not my business to pick out the faults in Buddhism and show them to the world; nor is it in my power to bring out all its excellences. But with perfect good-will I say to the Buddhist, "You are the possessor of your own inspiration; it is your business to manifest its glory, and we will lovingly and thankfully accept the blessing." It is not; my Christian friend, your business and mine to be everybody else but ourselves,—to be a perfect mush of religions. We have our historic line of inspiration, and that marks our post of duty. We are to guard, clarify, and develop our own religion, not to stand sympathetic towards all other faiths and antagonistic to the one faith that has reared us and made us what we are. For this reason one of our free religious tendencies needs watching. Some of us, while they do not feel at all that it is their business to criticise the Buddhist, yet feel a terrible duty upon them to show where the Christians or Hebrews are in error; they feel a divine commission to show how full of sectarianism the church next door is. Well, that is a right tendency, but it must not be exclusive and negative merely. It is perfectly proper for the student of Shakspeare to get together in one work all the poor passages in Shakspeare and say, "That is in Shakspeare." It is not a very gracious task, but it is a necessary kind of work. But if a man stopped his criticism of Shakspeare there, and didn't give Hamlet and Othello a chance, what would you say of his criticism? So it is your duty and mine to find out the errors and shortcomings of our own religious system. It is a part and parcel of our duty to the world, as the legatees of this vast inheritance, to clear up all the swamps in the estate, and fill up the pit-falls and burn the rubbish. But this work may be done sympathetically and affirmatively. And to my friends who criticise Hebrew literature I wish to say one word. You heard, twenty years ago, in criticism of the Genesis story of Eden, that God repented and walked in the garden in the cool of the day. That was pronounced absurd. The poetry of it was not seen; the spiritual meaning of a legend or myth was not investigated; it was only judged as if it were a literal narrative of outward facts. Criticism of the Bible was in the same tone in which Thomas Paine criticised it in the prison of La Force,—"I haven't a Bible by me, but it doesn't make any difference; I can do very well without one!" Of course it was to get at the surface merely, and anybody could do that. Now the sympathetic scholar takes those passages thus criticised and finds exactly the opposite objection,—too much meaning for their alleged time and place of authorship. He says these very passages—the story of Paradise, for example—are altogether ahead of the ideas of the primeval Jewish people, who began away down in very low conditions of intelligence. Can you suppose them not to have had image worship, when Rachel sits on the little gods of her father and he cannot discover them, and is in a terrible way because his divinities are gone? In such passages as that you will see that the Jewish religion began very low. Now sympathetic criticism goes farther than that, and says that is the glory of it; the glory of humanity is not that man began perfect with Adam, but that he began down there in a monad, has already grown upward from that to his present stature, and means to keep on growing; and the glory of the Jewish religion is that it began low down in the rude worship of Nature, and at last arose to the vision of the divine splendor which shone on the face of Jesus by the Sea of Galilee. It is a glory of growth, and not a perfection to start with in one little spot.

So, in the second place, your critic, as a Christian, has to know the glories of his religion. We are the guardians of a splendid inspiration which has come down to us; and if we were to let it go, the Buddhists over yonder would come over to us in America and say, "Where are those neglected books?" just as the Buddhist missionary went from China to find in India that the faith was dead and no longer Buddha's name held in reverence, but in its place degeneracy and corruption. And so it is your business and mine to take this religion of ours and clear it of its imperfections, and to take all the excellences of it that we know or ought to know, and bear them in our heart of hearts,—to reproduce the spirit of Christ, the spirit of love and tender sympathy, inside ourselves; and then all the disputes as to external things will be of little moment.

And so, true friends, the issue thus imperfectly stated may be put, with your permission, in a word that I used here in Boston one year ago to a little company. Free Religion does not mean tender and sympathetic relations with all religions under heaven except Christianity. It does not mean a glorious insight into Buddha's character, and a caricature of the character of Jesus. It does not mean sympathy with Zoroaster, and alienation from Moses or Isaiah. It does not mean the eye of an artist for the beautiful lineaments of Egyptian or Roman hero or saint, and the eye of a sign-painter for Paul or John. It does not mean our going from our own house of faith to inhabit the houses of our neighbors. You don't know it, perhaps, but you would catch cold in the Chinese pagoda, and the dance of the dervishes would make you sick, and the incense floating in Buddha's temples would put you to sleep. Nor does Free Religion mean pulling down—fraternally, of course—all other religious houses under heaven and inaugurating a universal camping out while a new building shall be built. I suppose it must be done fraternally. I will pull down the house of the Buddhist and he shall pull down mine, fraternally. I believe I can imagine a song of triumph coming from the person who is pulled down. Now, millions of tender hearts, whom we have in charge, would die under the process. It is very laborious to camp out when you don't know how to do it, as the new soldier discovers. Well, what then is the task? It is to have sympathizing relations with every effort toward the Infinite under heaven; to rejoice to know that God loves his Chinese or Hindus just as much as he does his Hebrews or Americans. It is to be sure that we never patronize the Spirit-born; it is to be sure that we never constitute ourselves examining chaplains to the Holy Ghost; it is to stand firmly on our own feet where we are, and not only accord the same right, but to insist and beg that our Buddhistic and other friends stop where they belong. They are noble where they are, but how exotic they would be if they tried to plant themselves in our places. This difference of costumes is a fixed fact. Don't let us see them in a coat, which we buy at Parker's, on Washington Street, looking just like everybody else. You would know them in their own costume and in their native religion and poetry, uttered amid Eastern circumstances and in their own sunny climes. And so we are shut up to this, if we want to do practical work, and don't want to be living in a wretched round of fancy or doubt. We have got to stand just where God put us; we have got to cleanse the house of God in our midst, and build a temple to his name here and now; gladly giving forth all of good we have inherited from our fathers in the spirit; and gladly receiving from others the message they too have received from heaven; and so hastening the time when the great religions of the world shall no longer be so many hostile camps; but shall at last know each other to be, not enemies, but sworn brothers, standing side by side, giving and receiving the good word which the Father is forever speaking to his earthly children.

[For The Index.]

THE RELIGION OF PAIN AND THE RELIGION OF PLEASURE.

Matthew Arnold, in his essay on "Pagan and Mediæval Religious Sentiment," after speaking of the "Christian extreme, the heart and imagination subjugating the senses and understanding," quotes the following passage from Heine:—

"All through the Middle Age these sufferings, this fever, this over-tension lasted; and we moderns still feel in all our limbs the pain and weakness from them. Even those of us who are cured have still to live with a hospital-atmosphere all around us, and find ourselves as wretched in it as a strong man among the sick. Some day or other, when humanity shall have got quite well again, when the body and soul shall have made their peace together, the factitious quarrel which Christianity has cooked up between them will appear something hardly comprehensible. The fairer and happier generations, offspring of unfettered unions that will rise up and bloom in the atmosphere of a religion of pleasure, will smile sadly, when they think of their poor ancestors whose life was passed in melancholy abstinence from the joys of this beautiful earth, and who faded away into spectres from the mortal compression which they put upon the warm and glowing emotions of sense. Yes, with assurance I say it, our descendants will be fairer and happier than we are; for I am a believer in progress, and I hold God to be a kind being who intended man to be happy."

Mr. Arnold goes on to say that, while the sentiment of a religion of pleasure has in it much that is natural, still it is fitted only for a world whose inhabitants are never either sick or sorry; that it cannot abide the test to which a life of hardship or suffering must put it; that it is powerless to help or console; that the sentiment of a religion of sorrow has a vast advantage over it as a stay for the mass of mankind, as something by which they can live and die.

But if it is not a religion of pleasure which we must accept to-day, neither—far from us be the thought!—is it a religion of pain. Since time began, the danger for humanity has always been that of running to extremes. Generation after generation has passed, balancing itself on one or the other verge of thought, and only modern ideas move along the intermediate spaces, and find within them satisfying pause. We speak the word "Greece," and before our mind's eye appear its sun-crowned hills and plains; its seas sparkling with a light that never was before or since; its theatres holding entranced audiences; beyond the stage a natural scenery; upon it actors uttering the immortal sentences of the great dramatists; its beautiful women, in graceful, trailing robes; its warriors and heroes bay-filleted; its long procession of philosophers, statesmen, orators, and poets. Recalling these things, the dazzled imagination cries impulsively: "Oh, to have been a Greek! Theirs was the only life, theirs the only religion!"

But the present times are almost always the best times for those who are living in them; something besides the sensuous Grecian life is necessary to satisfy the modern spirit. Some of the great Greek minds stand out from the nation as a whole, as the greatest thinkers and reformers stand out in every age, and belong to no country or time, but to all countries and all times. Thus it is said that, if all the books in the world except Plato were burned, the "sense of the world" would remain with us. But we do not think of Plato and Socrates only when we speak of the Greeks. Theirs was the ultra and exceptional development of all that was finest in the Greek possibility. The Greeks, as a nation, lived in their senses, getting all the good and all the beauty of this world from day to day. But did they get all the good? That is the question. Their life was very lovely, and, to my mind, the sentiment which actuated it was far more desirable than the sentiment of the Middle Ages, because it was so much more natural; but it was nature not yet arrived at the highest development. They lived to enjoy; we must live to learn, and to enjoy through what we learn.

I cannot but feel with Heine that we are living in the atmosphere of a hospital, and that mankind has indeed been sick unto death; but, if slowly and partially, still the air is clearing, and many a helpless invalid is now healed and upright. Shall the illness teach us nothing? Is the everlasting law of wisdom, gained by experience, for once to be set aside? Had Eve's fault been condoned, she would have remained in bliss, but never again in ignorance. It is said that a young person recovering from typhoid fever takes a new lease of life; grows taller, and becomes stronger than ever before. Within the limits of known history the world has had its childhood, its sweet carelessness and love of pleasure, then surfeit and long ages of severe typhoid fever. May we not hope that it is at last recovering and growing to unknown strength? What shall be the satisfaction of its strength, the joy of its prime? We must cull the best of paganism and Christianity, unite sense with thought, enjoyment with abnegation, realism with ideality; our feet must feel under them the solid ground, while our eyes seek highest heaven.

The Greeks personified trees, and streams, and flowers, and their outer world was peopled with beautiful shapes. Modern science does the same thing for us, when it discloses the wonders of species and reveals the secrets of the birth, growth, and maturity of all living things. Christianity commands self-abasement and humility. He who believes himself one link in the vast plan of the universe abnegates his own will to the general good, and accepts (to paraphrase the words of Pericles) without hesitation whatever lot the urn may hold for him.

Mr. Emerson says that "to know oneself one need only look out of the window;" and to lead the truest life one should live in accordance with what he sees there. There is always an horizon, though it shifts as we change our place; the earth holds her own in ether, though she revolves eternally upon her axis, and tarries not in her path about the sun. Our lives must have limitations, but limitations that are not immutable, ties not indissoluble, faiths ever cabable of extending to wider range as the march of scientific discovery proceeds, loves whose dying light is gladdened by the promise of new dawns.

To live in harmony with Nature, and with knowledge and appreciation of her laws,—that is the religion of Nature, the religion of the future. It, in its turn, may pass and be no more; but those that live by it will be harmonious, healthful beings, strong and cheerful, and, if not rapturously happy, patient and content. With this religion one may be sick or sorry from the thousand ills to which mortality is heir; but his wounds, like those of Milton's archangels, will soon heal, and for the same reason—because he is of the divine essence.

Such a religion is often accused of being a purely selfish one. No one can accept it, people say, save those who have a natural love of beauty, an instinctive comprehension of Nature, and something, at least, of the old Greek temperament. These go on their way rejoicing, with no thought for the millions shut out by circumstances, by privation, and misery, and disease, from the benefits they enjoy. But I do not believe that it is any more selfish than any other form of belief. No individual can help trying to perfect himself before he undertakes to perfect others; and he who strives to make his own life a harmonious note in the great symphony of Nature must inevitably do his utmost to ameliorate the conditions of others, and to bring all existence into tune.

There are some questions which can never be answered, some ideas which cannot be grasped by mortal mind. Who or what ever solved the riddle of the unequal distribution of fortune? Who or what shall answer the one question which, like the skeleton at the feast, intrudes into the most beautiful scheme of life, and forces itself through the perfect purpose of the universe, the fatal question—cui bono? But this question, terrible to sensitive organizations, and only to be set aside by sheer force of will, is applicable everywhere. What would be the use of eternities spent in praising? What the use of immortality devoted to the acquisition of learning, or to endless careers through worlds and spheres, since the sum of knowledge must be reached at last? Or, if it too be eternal, how the mind shrinks from such endless activity, and turns to the idea of final rest with relief and gratitude!

Since we are not great enough to comprehend the use of a universe self-poised and self-contained, developing in regular order and beauty when some must die that many may live—each one of us with his place and part in the whole, whether his part be that of the stunted apple or the perfect tree,—since we are not great enough to comprehend the use of this, let us at least assume that there is one; let us patiently do our utmost to become the perfect tree, yet nobly resigned if the hand of fate snatches us, an unformed fruit, from the bough. J.

SWAMPSCOTT, Mass.

[For THE INDEX.]

THE AMERICAN ASSOCIATION FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE AT HARTFORD.

A NEW DOCTRINE OF REGENERATION.

BY PROFESSOR W. D. GUNNING.

Our text is a paper written in German, although not in the German language, by Prof. Elsberg.

Prof. Elsberg's paper carried a heavy title: Regeneration, or the Conservation of the Organic Molecule: a Contribution to the Doctrine of Evolution.

We have learned about "regeneration" in the Shorter Catechism. Through Spencer and Darwin and Huxley we have heard something about evolution. From some of our theologians we have heard that regeneration does not go with evolution; that if you cleave to the one you must forsake the other; that if you have been evolved you cannot be regenerated. We are afraid that Elsberg's thesis would force a new reading on our catechism. Let us see how it would run as amended:—

"Question.—What is regeneration?

"Answer.—Regeneration is the conservation of organic plastidules."

Shade of Jonathan Edwards, has it come to that!

Let us consider these "plastidules."

A very mysterious thing is the genesis of a new being. Nearly three hundred years ago Montaigne wrote in quaint old French: "What monster is that, that seminal speck (cette goutte de semenee) from which we grow, that it can carry in itself not only the bodily form but the thoughts and inclinations of the parents?" Only a few months ago Hæckel took up the same strain. "We reflect with wonder," he says, "on the fact that the simple ovicell and the seme-filament so accurately transmit the individual vital, molecular movement of two individuals that their minutest physical and mental peculiarities reappear in the offspring."

Beginnings, we say, are alike. It is ends that differ. The germ of the highest mammal is hardly distinguishable from that of the lowest. But we are compelled to assert differences where neither chemistry nor the microscope can detect them. How does the germ of one being differ from that of another?

The impregnated ovum consists of matter wholly derived from its parents. Now this matter consists of molecules—plastid molecules—which may be called "plastidules." The plastidule, although exceedingly small, is a material entity, and has real dimensions. It belongs to what Tyndall calls "the subsensible world." The mind must go where the eyes cannot. With a fine needle I prick a hydra. I have detached a few cells, and soon a young hydra is seen sprouting from the wound. I have no difficulty in learning that it grows from the detached cells. With a lens I throw a ray of light into the hydra, and soon a young hydra is seen sprouting from the spot where the light-beam struck and wounded, jostling asunder certain molecules. In saying this the mind outruns the senses; but we no more doubt the deduction than if a visual demonstration, as needle and cell, had led to it. Very well, then; the organic molecule is a material entity.

Now matter, as science finds it, is simply centres of force. Plastidules are bundles of force. The difference, then, between the germs of two beings consists in the fact that each contains the molecules, with the forces they carry, of its own line of ancestry. Most of the germ-molecules, in process of growth, suffer change; but, if we suppose a few to remain unchanged and to pass into the germ of a new being, they must carry with them not only the bodily form but the mental peculiarities of the grandparents. This explains heredity. The plastid molecules, we have said, have material dimensions. There follows an important deduction.

Let us suppose a primitive "Adam and Eve." Their children came from germs derived from their bodies. The germs of the children of these children contained, mixed with the plastidules of their parents, some of the plastidules of their grandparents. Suppose the human germ to consist of a definite number of molecules. A child of the first generation—body, propensities, and all—was a compound of the Adam and Eve, all the germ-molecules having been derived from them. Adam was *re*generated, or born again in his child. In Chinese, the name of a child is "My-growing-for-the-second-time-self."

A germ of the second generation, composed of the same number of molecules derived from its parents and grandparents, developed into a child containing only a portion of Adam. Adam was born again fractionally in his grandchild.

Let us suppose the germ-molecules to be derived in equal number from each parent. The Adamic molecules in a germ of the first generation would be one-half the whole number; of the second generation, 1-x; of the third, 1-x^2; of the fourth, 1-x^3; and so on and on, the denominator of the fraction being larger for each successive generation. With each generation Adam is "growing beautifully less." After a great many generations the denominator would be infinitely large, the Adamic plastidules would be cut off, and Adam would disappear.

We have heard much about "the old man Adam." He is gone. Science assures us that we are removed from him by so many generations that not a plastidule of his body remains in circulation! He is eliminated. Our catechism might run on like this:—

"Question.—What is 'putting off the old man'?

"Answer.—Putting off the old man is what some authors have called 'abbreviated heredity,' and must be understood as the running out and final cutting off of the organic plastidules of the old man aforesaid."

Many facts in biology, dark hitherto, are brought by this view into light.

Two fundamental laws are heredity and adaptation. Heredity is the conservation of organic force and form by the transmission from generation to generation of unmodified plastidules. Adaptation is the effort of an organism to adjust itself to its environment. It includes growth, and denotes all the changes which occur in the being from inception to death.

In the depths of the ocean, where the environment does not change, adaptation is at the minimum, and heredity at the maximum. Bathybius, it is presumed, differs not at all from the bathybius which lay on the bottom of the Huronian sea in the very morning of organic life.

In zones of latitude where annual alternations of heat and cold are most extreme, or where the land surface, undergoing secular changes of level, induces secular changes of climate, heredity is at the minimum, and adaptation at the maximum. The mammals and reptiles of to-day have only a remote resemblance to those which peopled the lake borders of Wyoming and Colorado in the age of the earlier and middle tertiary. And yet, so obvious is the genetic connection between the past and the present that science has chosen names for many of the Colorado species, which designate them as the ancestors of certain living species.

The transmutation which an organism has undergone is a complicated resultant. It embraces many factors, "the struggle for existence," and all the influences of environment. If in the abysmal world we find persistence of type, it is because one class of factors (change of environment) disappears, and the other class (struggle for existence) appears at minimum. In low organisms (and such, in general, are those of the sea-bottom), even growth implies no modification of cells. The organism is built up simply by a multiplication of cells, and none of the cells which pass from parent to offspring are modified by the process of growth into nerve or tissue or fibre. The plastidules of the Huronian bathybius may exist unchanged in the bathybius of to-day.

If in the higher organisms we find less persistence of type, it is because all the factors of evolution are present and dominant. The body is no longer cellular. Ovicell and sperm-filament, with most of the plastid molecules they contain, in the process of growth are modified and transformed. Fewer ancestral plastidules pass into the progeny. Heredity is sooner "abbreviated," the ancestral line sooner cut off. A man is farther removed from his great-great-grandfather than an oyster.

[For THE INDEX.]

WOMAN'S RIGHT TO THE SUFFRAGE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

I sent to you three questions, asking in substance whether anybody might rightfully be refused the suffrage, provided the suffrage is a natural right; if so, upon what grounds; and how, on grounds of expediency, you could reconcile your advocacy of woman suffrage with your hostility to the Christian Amendment, in case you believe the suffrage not a natural right, since Christian women will most of them favor that amendment.

Your rebuke, implied in the sentence—"It seems strange that so clear and simple a principle should not be better understood," at the end of your comments on these questions, would furnish a motive, if one were otherwise wanting, for offering the following considerations in relation to the matters involved in them.

To avoid all chance of misapprehension, let me say at the outset that I make no discrimination against women as women.

1. You deny, as I do, that the right of suffrage inheres in the individual. Having done so, however, there is a logical impropriety in saying, as you do, that "women have a right to vote." It would be equally improper to say that men have a right to vote. To be consistent, you should have written some women have, etc.; for, since the right does not inhere, it can exist at all only where there is fitness to perform the duties which the right devolves: a thing which you yourself insist upon when you require a certain precedent "development of reason and conscience." Both of us are clearly upon grounds of expediency. Being there, the question is as to the requisite "degree" of development, or fitness.

2. Now, why (probably) do you insist upon a degree of fitness? Because, instinctively, you conclude that without it your "free institutions" would soon be destroyed. And this suggests the answer to the question as to the "degree" of fitness: its minimum must not be less than sufficient to insure free institutions against destruction by unfitness.

3. From this point of view let us regard the attitude of the Christian Amendment party, or of the classes from which its masses are to come. Apropos of the latter, Rev. Mr. McKeon, late of Worcester, now of Boston, would "shut up" my infidel friend, if he "had the power." Other Christians would, they have assured me, prevent me from speaking and writing infidel sentiments, if they "had the power." Dr. Miner would have the legislature judge the Orthodoxy of the people, and stop the free presses and the free speakers, if it should judge their influence to be "as mischievous as rum-selling:" Massachusetts law makes it an offence, punishable by fine and imprisonment, to "deny God," to try to bring "contempt" upon the Bible, etc., etc., (vide chap. 165, G. S., Sec. 19). Even as I write, a procession, with music and banners, marches by, to the dedication of a sectarian schoolhouse—so potent and active is the feeling against the enlightenment which is the "breath of life" of free institutions. Indeed, there are unmistakable indications, in many quarters, of the coming of the "irrepressible conflict" between ecclesiasticism and free government. Who can doubt that, if the Christian Amendment party succeeds, free press and free speech will be next assailed? The same arguments that are serving in favor of the proposed Amendment will then apply against enlightenment by publications and discussions, and with the added force resulting from their nearer and (to large classes of the people) more obvious application. To quote your own words as pertinent here as in Germany: "Why treat self-preservation as persecution?"

I am willing, anxious, to yield the same liberty which I demand for myself. I will yield even more. But I don't demand liberty to destroy liberty. For myself, I say to the Christian Amendment party, "You may take away my right to vote because I am an infidel, or an atheist, if you so decree, and I will offer no physical resistance. If you leave to me freedom of speech and press, I can wait in the hope and confident expectation of persuading my fellow-citizens that it ought to be restored to me. But, if you strike down my freedom to speak and write, I can have no such hope. I am then totally and hopelessly disarmed. I may then become a perpetual victim. There will be, then, no appeal but to force."

4. Now can any clear-minded man believe that force, war, which respects no privilege, and no right, would be justifiable under such circumstances, in order to regain liberty; but that now, in time of peace, to preserve the same liberty, and to avert, besides, such a war itself, to withhold a privilege of doubtful expediency, is wholly inexcusable? Pardon me; the sentiment is too sickly for earnest men. What! The liberty gained by so many centuries of suffering, of sacrifices, of martyrdoms, surrendered while means for its defence remain! The past and future alike forbid. Besides, what assurance have we that, when centuries of new trials and sacrifices and self-immolations have regained a measure of freedom equal to that which we now possess, a like emergency will not require a like surrender? Why not advance? Is the "right" of Vandals to destroy more sacred than my right to preserve? Is it honorable and glorious to defend the citadel, but a crime to guard the frontier? Must I respect the right of another, yet be free to trample upon my own? Is there any difference here except in the victim? Surely, it will not be seriously urged that one may not protect the right by preventing the wrong? Most clearly, there is the right to insist upon fitness, in man and woman, before either be granted the suffrage; and this right results necessarily "from the nature of free institutions," such institutions inevitably perishing, except such fitness be insisted upon. Fitness to exercise it, indeed, is what alone can make the suffrage a right, in any case.

5. The power to rule best is a "divine right to rule," whether the sovereign be king or people. As a matter of fact, there is no free country anywhere, and cannot be while there is imperfection. Governments themselves are but makeshifts to stand in place of such perfection. The best must govern. I am speaking of a principle. It is admitted that there are difficulties in its practical application. It is also admitted that the principle would lead to despotism—the despotism of intelligence and virtue! What a despot! Let nobody be alarmed by the word, since we are familiar with the thing. We live under a despotism now—that of the hydra-headed majority; at best, of only average goodness. Surely, the despotism of the best of our fellows would be preferable to the despotism of the average one.

6. "Whether they use or abuse it," say you? Indeed, why don't we give the ballot to "horses," but that they would make no rational, that is, no proper, use of it? Whether life itself is a right, or not, depends upon the manner of its employment; whether usefully and beneficently, or in rapine and murder. It ceases to be a right, when it is perverted to a certain degree. So of liberty: we deny it to the hardened criminal so soon as our officer can apprehend him. So of the "pursuit of happiness." It is a right only so long as the happiness pursued is legitimate. One whose happiness consists, as Jesse Pomeroy's, in mutilation and murder of helpless children, is not permitted to "pursue" it. The State takes my land for public uses, and it deprives my spendthrift neighbor of the control of his property. The conviction is ineradicable that it is right use which determines right.

7. You say: "There is no more reason for disfranchising them (the women favorers of the Christian Amendment) than for disfranchising the male advocates of that pernicious measure." Quite true. I never thought the contrary. But the question of disfranchising men is not now in issue before the American people. When it is, it will be time to consider whether we will require, on pain of disfranchisement, an "iron clad oath," by every voter, that he has no wish, or intention, to destroy or abridge freedom of discussion; or in some other manner guard against the catastrophe of such destruction or abridgement. But the question of *en*franchising women, large numbers of whom will, as soon as opportunity offers, use that franchise to strike down free discussion, is before them. For one, till otherwise advised, I must, for that reason, conscientiously say NO to their request.

8. Will it be said that I am intolerant? Granted; but it is in favor of liberty that I am so. Intolerance per se cannot be objected against. My alternatives lie between being intolerant for liberty, or of permitting, to the extent of my influence, intolerance of liberty. The result will be as much my act in one case as in the other.

9. You say truly that "Liberty must perish in this country, unless the majority of the people, men and women together, love it enough to preserve it." I love it. To contribute to preserve it is what I aim to do by my refusal to confer power upon its enemies. While, therefore, I would save liberty from fanatics, I would save the fanatics from themselves.

10. In brief, the right of suffrage not inhering, but being dependent upon fitness, in the individual, it is just and expedient, when practicable, to refuse it to persons who are unfit. That the mass of women are unfit, by reason of their intolerance of rational liberty, is evinced by their affiliation and sympathy with systems and measures which are hostile to it. The manner of the presentation of their demand for the suffrage is not such that discriminations can be made in favor of those of them who are fit; therefore, it is the right and the duty of the friends of freedom to oppose the movement to give the suffrage indiscriminately to women. JOHN FRANCIS SMITH.

WORCESTER, Mass., Aug. 18, 1874.

[If our first quoted remark seemed a "rebuke," we apologize for it. No "rebuke" was intended. In fact, the original occasion of our note was lost sight of in the thoughts that came into mind as we wrote. Mr. Smith's questions deserved only the most respectful attention, and we meant to give it; and we cannot forbear to express our great admiration of the ability and dignified tone of the above article. Our reply to its various points will be found in the editorial columns.—ED.]

[For THE INDEX.]

PLYMOUTH CHURCH AND MOBOCRACY.

BY CHARLES D. B. MILLS.

The late treatment of Mr. Francis D. Moulton at the meeting of Plymouth Church on Friday evening, August 28, is such as may well make the ears to tingle, and stir the blood.

Mr. Moulton was in attendance at the meeting where the report of the Investigating Committee was to be presented and acted upon. He had, as appears, full right to be there, as he was and for a long time had been a member of the society. Quite civilly and very quietly, he requested of the Chairman, by a note sent him, to permit him a word in the course of the meeting, as there were statements made in the report which, as he deemed, were aside from the facts, and needed correction. This privilege was not accorded to him. Mr. R. W. Raymond, in a speech which throughout must have been charged with vehemence and strong partisanship, made violent personal assault upon Mr. Moulton, branding him with treachery and a long course of mean, malignant lying. Mr. Moulton, interrupting, pronounced the utterer "a liar." The crowd became excited and violent, clamoring boisterously, "Put him out! Put him out!" and only by the presence of policemen, who appeared at Mr. Moulton's side, do they seem to have been prevented from carrying the threat into execution.

At the close of the meeting, while the Doxology was being sung, Mr. Moulton essayed quietly to withdraw; but instantly the crowd (the statement says, "the major part of the immense audience"), rushing after him like a mob as they were, pursued him with jeers, murderous cries, and blows. With the greatest difficulty was he gotten from their reach; and he doubtless has to thank the promptitude and skill of three or four friends, who helped him to a carriage in which he was driven rapidly away, for his escape from violence and probably death at the hand of these fellow-Christians of his of Plymouth Church. This was their way of establishing the innocence and vindicating the character of the Plymouth pastor.

It is fit sequel and climax to the work that to all appearance has been going on on the part of Henry Ward Beecher and his especial friends and champions for a very long time, and particularly since the so-called investigation was commenced. It would seem that, having determined to uphold Beecher at whatever cost, and in defiance of every evidence going to show his guilt (a thing sad enough to say, and sadder still to believe in), they have stuck at nothing in order to suppress or lie down the truth; have conspired to crush out and destroy every one who, privy to the facts, might be disposed to affirm them; and now they essay the expedient of mobbing and lynching it down. It remains to be seen whether this shall succeed,—whether it shall carry conviction in the direction desired into the minds of the people. May the latter not possibly suspect there must be something consciously false and rotten in a cause that invoked to its aid the agency of gag and mob?

I am amazed to see that the press of this country are, with very few exceptions in this exigent hour, either silent or strongly partisan. If there were a healthy sentiment, a deep regard for justice, fair-dealing, truth, would there not have been one united outburst of indignation and stinging rebuke, that would have plunged in shame all who were engaged in this outrageous procedure? Some, I see, expressly justify it; a leading daily of this city characterizes it as a mob this time "on the right side." Others, and those I suppose by far the largest number, silently acquiesce, have no word of condemnation or dissent. Their silence shows the current of their sympathies. Never, I think, since the time when John Brown appeared at Harper's Ferry, and struck that great blow for liberty that so stunned, and staggered, and exasperated our slavery-cherishing country—I mean in the North and in the Republican party as well as in the South—has there been such obliquity, perversion, and blind, vehement partisanship on the part of the public press, as on this matter of the scandal since its first public agitation. Beecher is the king, or in this case the preacher, who "can do no wrong;" it is an effrontery to admit the thought of its possibility. Tilton and Moulton are pursued and denounced as conspirators and miscreants unfit to live. Heaven grant that this strange and (I fear) wanton infatuation and perverseness, may not be the precursor, and also in large degree the procuring cause, of a like terrible retributive visitation as was that of 1859!

It is time for all to speak. Every right-minded man and woman, every friend of justice and the decencies of behavior, must take position in this regard by the side of Moulton. He stands in the deadly imminent breach; he is doing battle, and that against fearful odds, for the right. Honor to him for his courage, if, holding as I believe he does the truth, he stands determined at every cost to abide by and maintain it. May God help him!

And Henry Ward Beecher, who, if there be truth at all in the solemn statement of Mr. Moulton, in the sworn declaration of Theodore Tilton, strengthened as they both are by points in evidence patent, undeniable, and of very positive indication, is a criminal, a malefactor against virtue, society, the public weal, beyond any other of this generation,—this man is to go forth still as a public teacher, more lionized, bepraised, and run after than ever before; is to appear the coming winter in the large lecture halls through our country, hired at fabulous prices, to instruct the young men and women of the land in the principles of morality, and the methods of the true and worthy life!

What shall we think of the Christianity, aye, of the professed morality of a community in which such things are possible? Theodore Tilton testifies of Mrs. Tilton that she had so admired and adored, that erewhile Beecher had become verily Jesus Christ himself to her. Have the body of the American people so suffered illusion that to their eye also he is that, or some approximation to it? If so, a moral corruption and debauching, not less but more dreadful than can have befallen her, awaits them.

SYRACUSE, N.Y., Sept. 2, 1874.

TAX EXEMPTION.

Doubtless one of the questions of the future, a question sure to awaken an active controversy, and one which may possibly be made a feature of political platforms, is the justice or injustice of exempting the property of churches and charitable and educational institutions from taxation. If it were possible for this question to be precipitated upon us prematurely, and before we are ready for its settlement, it could be done by the unwise and grasping spirit manifested by some of the corporations and institutions which are so peculiarly favored. The city of Dubuque, Iowa, has recently afforded a case in point. The Roman Catholic Bishop owns in that city, among other property, a block known as Bishop's Block, which is covered with residences and business houses. Claiming that this block, as the property of an ecclesiastical organization, was exempt from taxation, the Bishop refused to pay the taxes assessed upon it. The property went the way of all property on which taxes are not paid, and was sold to a man named Hintrager. The Bishop, in his endeavor to avoid the legitimate payment of taxes, has simply overreached himself, and the chances now are that he will have to part with half the block in order to redeem the remainder.

Another illustration of the same matter we find in a decision just rendered at Chicago by the County Court. The Northwestern University owns several hundred acres of land in the county, a considerable portion of which lies within the city limits, and is built over with business blocks. A large area of the city of Evanston is also held by the University and leased to its occupants, and has never paid any taxes. Taxes were levied against these lands, their payment was resisted by the University, and the County Treasurer claimed judgment. The decision of the court sustains this claim on the ground that exemption from taxation, according to the constitution, is to be made in accordance with the general law, and that this law expressly restricts the exemption to property used exclusively for the purposes of education, etc., and excludes property which is held for profit. The University has appealed to the Supreme Court, and the whole question will be re-argued there. The ultimate decision will be awaited with considerable interest, as the question in this way brought to an issue is one of the utmost importance.

Without reference to the main question as to whether any property whatever which derives benefit from public protection and improvements should be exempt from bearing its share of the public burdens, it must be apparent that such exemption, if granted, should be restricted to property actually in use for the purposes indicated. Any corporation or institution which seeks to stretch the meaning of the statute, and carry over the exemption to property held purely for profit and income, plunders the public purse to just that extent to which it is successful, and runs a risk of precipitating upon itself and upon all other institutions similarly situated the withdrawal of its peculiar privileges. There is no being in the world more democratic in his tastes than the tax-gatherer, and the community is coming to look with increasing jealousy and hostility upon everything which has the aspect of an unequal distribution of public burdens. —Boston Journal.

"HOW DISMAL YOU look!" said a bucket to his companion, as they were going to the well.

"Ah!" replied the other, "I was reflecting on the uselessness of our being filled; for, let us go away ever so full, we always come back empty."

"Dear me! how strange to look at it in that way!" said the bucket. "Now I enjoy the thought that, however empty we come, we always go away full. Only look at it in that light, and you'll be as cheerful as I am."

Poetry.

LIKE ME.

BY MRS. M. F. BUTTS.

What would happen, do you suppose,
If the mignonette should say to the rose:
"The pride of roses I hate to see:
Why don't you keep near the ground like me?"

What if the rose should say to the phlox:
"My form and color are Orthodox—
To please your Maker, you've got to be Precisely in all respects like me."

What if a grape should say to a pear:
"Why are you flaunting about up there?
Beware of swinging alone and free;
You ought to cling to a trellis, like me."

What if a river should say to a rill:
"If you weren't too lazy, you'd turn a mill.
Study my method, and try to be
A rushing, roaring river like me."

What if a swan should say to a crow:
"You belong to the race of so-and-so;
It's a deadly sin for you to be free;
Your only hope is in serving me."

What if a goose should teach a wren,
Or an eagle try to follow a hen!
What if the monkeys should all agree
That there ought to be uniformity!

What if a man should say to another:
"Differ with me and you're not my brother;
I have the truth, as the oracles tell:
Go with me, or you'll go to hell!"

—Scribner's for July.

NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS TO INDEX STOCK.

Mrs. F. W. Christern,	New York City,	One	share,	$100
Richard B. Westbrook,	Sonman, Pa.	"	"	100
R. C. Spencer,	Milwaukee, Wis.	Two	"	200
R. W. Howes,	Boston, Mass.	One	"	100
Chas. W. Story,	Boston, Mass.	"	"	100
E. W. Meddaugh,	Detroit, Mich.	Five	"	500
Jacob Hoffner,	Cumminsville, O.	One	"	100
John Weiss,	Boston, Mass.	"	"	100
W. C. Russel,	Ithaca, N. Y.	"	"	100
A. W. Leggett,	Detroit, Mich.	"	"	100
B. F. Dyer,	Boston, Mass.	"	"	100
James Purinton,	Lynn, Mass.	"	"	100
F. A. Nichols,	Lowell, Mass.	"	"	100
J. S. Palmer,	Portland, Me.	"	"	100
Robt. Ormiston,	Brooklyn, N.Y.	"	"	100
Mrs. A. L. Richmond,	Lowell, Mass.	"	"	100
Mrs. Benj. Ireson,	Lynn, Mass.	"	"	100
J. E. Oliver,	Ithaca, N.Y.	"	"	100
E. H. Aldrich,	Providence, R.I.	"	"	100
Geo. L. Clark,	Providence, R.I.	"	"	100
W. M. Jackson,	Providence, R.I.	Two	"	200
Mrs. E. B. Chase,	Valley Falls, R.I.	"	"	100
L. F. Garvin,	Lonsdale, R.I.	One	"	100
James Damon,	Ipswich, Mass.	"	"	100
Joseph A. Barker,	Providence, R.I.	"	"	100

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING SEPTEMBER 5.

R. H. Hubbard, 25 cts.; Wm. Pfafflin, $2; B. Greene, $5; Henry Schnull, $4; Mrs. S. M. Carroll, $1.50; Sawtelle and Humphrey, $1 25; Hettie Bateman, $2; Chas. M. Weatherbee, $2; B. F. Smith, $2; B. R. Wright, $3.75; J. M. Macomber, $3; A. Erlebach, 75 cts., Franklin Muir, $3; Edward Denney, $1.50; W. H. Fitch, Jr., $3; W. B. Kingsley, $3; S. H. Headle, $3; L. C. Childs, $3; Mrs. L. West, $1; S. G. Haynes, $5; D. C. Potter, 30 cts.; S. B. A. Haynes, $3; Bennett Allen, $2; J. Berry, $2; W. J. Gill, $3; Watson Gill, $3; Pulaski Carter, $3; Grove Brothers, $5.50; D. M. Jenkins, $5; B. F. Kennedy, $6; C. C. Renebael, $5.75; Henry Pearson, $2; J. C. Euwer, $3; Hugo Keech, $3.25; G. A. Kolbe, $4.25; Jacob Mueller, $3; P. L. Kessler, $3.75; T. B. Forbush, $3.75; G. W. Mead, $5.25; W. W. Laundon, $1.75; Wm. K. Cunningham, $2.50; A. L. White, $3.50; Robert Law, $7.50; Max Jungbluth, $2.75; John Hamm, $7; Wm. Peter, $4; E. W. Koch, $9; J. C. Klotz, $4.30; George Jerome, $5.70; D. J. Davison, $7.50; D. V. Bell, $3.25; Charles Robinson, $3.25; O. A. Rogers, 50 cts.; S. S. Fernald, $3; K. Kohler, $3; Asa C. Pierce, $3.75; James Purinton, $4.50; John Baxter, $6; F. Fischer, $3; G. S. Bowen, $3; G. N. Smith, $3; E. D. Wileman, $3; L. S. Judd, $2; Andrew J. High, $1.75; Herman Lieber, $6; H. C. Neville, $1.60; David Porter, $3; D. S. Grandin, 10 cts.; A. Dickerson, 23 cts.; G. H. Foster, $1.16; A. Erlebach, 25 cts.; W. F. Perkins, $1.40; J. S. Ford, 25 cts.; W. A. Moore, 25 cts.; A. K. Loring, 20 cts.; Larkin Tufts, $3; A. S. Hopkins, $1.50; Mrs. C. B. Tilden, $5.75; W. C. Gannett, $3; A. Reynolds, $3; Sam'l D. Bardwell, $3; Eliza A. Babbitt, $3; A. W. Russell, $5; Richard Russell, $5; J. H. Allen, $3; Joseph Haskins, $1.50; George W. Piper, $2.10; F. W. Munroe, $2; Caroline Wellington, $3; J. H. Buffum, $3.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—Postage on THE INDEX is five cents per quarter, dating from receipt of the first number, payable in advance at the place of delivery.

N. B.—When writing about a former remittance, always give the date of such remittance as exactly as possible.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either,

The Index.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY

BY

THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

NO. 1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

Toledo Office: No. 35 Monroe Street. Julius T. Frey, Agent and Clerk.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

Francis Ellingwood Abbot, ... Editor.
Abram Walter Stevens, ... Associate Editor.
Octavius Brooks Frothingham, Thomas Wentworth Higginson, William J. Potter, Richard P. Hallowell, William H. Spencer, Mrs. E. D. Cheney, Rev. Charles Voysey (England), Prof. Francis W. Newman (England), Editorial Contributors.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

BOSTON, SEPTEMBER 10, 1874.

SUNDAY LECTURES.—The Editors of The Index will lecture occasionally on Sundays, if desired, within a convenient distance of Boston.

The Independent has concluded to class the "advocates of the Religious [Christian] Amendment," as well as the readers of The Index, with "the unlettered sceptics of the West." This sly thrust, which is so worded as not to be noticed by a casual reader, seems to be prompted by a statement in the Christian Statesman of August 29 that the "frank, unconcealed assaults [of The Index] on Christianity and the Christian features of our government secure on every hand a measure of respect which the Independent, nominally a Christian journal, but really following the same flag at a safer distance, will never win."

One of the most esteemed citizens of New York State has an indignant article in another column on the mobbing of Mr. Francis D. Moulton. It should be read by every one. Yet it must be said that Mr. Moulton's intemperate language, notwithstanding the provocation of it, could hardly have produced any other effect at such a time. It takes a better head than ours to discover the truth in this whole business, and it is too much to say that Mr. Moulton is "doing battle for the right" beyond a doubt. Somebody is doing desperate battle for the wrong, and uncertainty as to the wrong-doer is no proof of demoralization anywhere. But we can see our way clear to unqualified condemnation both of Mr. Moulton's passionate word and the mob's passionate reply.

From the just published Proceedings of the Seventh Annual Meeting of the Free Religious Association, we propose to reprint (by permission) the three addresses by Messrs. Calthrop, Higginson, and Abbot, on the true relation of Free Religion to Christianity. The first of these is published to-day, and will be followed by the other two in their order. Mr. Calthrop's plea for Christianity, though brilliant and able, as was to be expected, would have been more satisfactory to us, if what he defended had been really Christianity; but he defends a view of his own which he calls Christian, while he totally ignores all that has given Christianity its real power in the world. We wish that a Catholic could have been found to plead the cause of Christianity, for he alone could really speak for it.

The man who wrote this paragraph in the Brooklyn Catholic Review of September 1, and did not know that he was firing off a blunderbuss of sober argument at a bubble of sheer fun, must have ears as long as the Atlantic cable: "The Boston Index publishes a little paragraph in which it affirms that the Catholic Review compliments it with the title of the 'Sacred Congregation of the Index.' What makes the thing amusing is that this egregious blunder immediately precedes another paragraph in which the editor dissents from the view of a contemporary who says that 'patient study and thought' are 'precisely what the Free Religionists lack,' and claims that for his own part, at least, although the results of his study and thought may not be valuable, their patience he would 'modestly testify to.' How much patient study would have been required to ascertain the fact that there is in Rome a 'Sacred Congregation of the Index,' a part of whose duties might be, were the Boston Index less ridiculous or sufficiently influential and well known, to indicate it as undesirable and unsafe reading?"

"WOMAN'S RIGHT TO THE SUFFRAGE."

An unusually vigorous and by no means hackneyed argument by Mr. Smith against woman suffrage will be found in another column under the above heading. It seems to demand a reply point by point, and we will try and do it justice.

1. Because we admit that the right of suffrage does not inhere in the individual as such, Mr. Smith argues that there is a "logical impropriety in saying that women have a right to vote," or even that men have a right to vote. He thinks we should have said that only some women and some men have this right, since the exercise of the right depends upon fitness—upon a certain development of reason and conscience. Hence, he concludes, "both of us are clearly upon grounds of expediency."

The difference between rights which inhere in the individual and rights which inhere in society as such seems here to be overlooked; and it is fundamental to our position on this question. The individual's right to exist is contained in the very fact of his existence; it naturally inheres in him as an individual being until he forfeits it in some way (for we hold that no right whatever is absolutely "inalienable"). But the individual's right to vote is not contained in the mere fact of his own existence, since he can be conceived to exist alone, in which case suffrage is meaningless. His right to vote, however, is contained in the fact that many individuals co-exist in such close relations that the acts of each affect every other. In other words, the right of each individual to vote is contained in the bare fact of society's existence; for no reason can be assigned why (other things being equal) one individual has not as good a right to influence the decision of questions of common interest as any other individual. In the absence of all "divine right to rule" on the part of a favored individual, all the individual members of society have an equal right to decide them, since all have an equal interest at stake. Some special reason must be shown why any particular individual should not be allowed to vote; the presumption is wholly on his side, until rebutted by some positive evidence that his right has lapsed. In this manner we deduce the right of suffrage, not from the nature of the individual as such, but from the nature of society itself, as composed of a number of individuals: all being necessarily supposed to have equal rights until disparity of rights has been fairly proved. But all rights are "natural" which result from natural relations, or the nature of things; and for this reason we consider the right to vote as a natural right, resulting, however, from the nature of society rather than from the nature of the individual.

Mr. Smith will perceive, therefore, that we are not "both upon grounds of expediency." We, at least, are upon grounds of natural right—natural right which is absolute until proved by special reasons to have lapsed in special cases. Woman's right to vote, then, if we are correct, rests solely upon the fact of her membership in society, as an individual whose right to vote cannot be proved to have lapsed. While Mr. Smith apparently holds that fitness must be proved before the suffrage can be granted, we hold that fitness must be disproved before the suffrage can be taken away: a most important distinction, since it throws the burden of proof on the opponents, not the advocates, of woman suffrage. Democratic or free institutions are all built on the assumption of equal human rights; and whoever would introduce discriminations is bound to show good reasons for them.

2. We "insist upon a degree of [mental and moral] fitness," as a condition of voting, because man is a mental and moral being who is not born full-grown, but rather as an infant, whose faculties very slowly develop. All the interests of society being ultimately mental or moral, the absence of either mental or moral fitness is precisely the evidence required to suspend the exercise of a particular individual's right to vote. Hence children, idiots, lunatics, and criminals are disfranchised. The requisite degree of fitness should be determined by a purely utilitarian standard: but women as a class cannot be disfranchised, unless it can be proved that no woman attains to this requisite degree of fitness. Mr. Smith very excellently states the true principle as to fitness: "Its minimum must not be less than sufficient to insure free institutions against destruction by unfitness." To exclude women as such, therefore, from the polls, it must be shown that all women are unfit to vote to a degree below this minimum of fitness. But Mr. Smith concedes that this cannot be shown, when he says: "Let me say at the outset that I make no discrimination against women as women."

3 and 4. Mr. Smith's argument under his third and fourth heads is directed, not towards the disfranchisement of women as such, but towards the disfranchisement of the Christian Amendment party, as proving themselves by their very enterprise to be below the requisite minimum of intelligence or moral fitness. His reasoning is so forcible that we confess it has momentarily staggered us. Certainly the success of that enterprise would be the death of republicanism; and the attempt to make it successful is, in fact, the worst species of treason against the republic. If it was justifiable to disfranchise Southern rebels (and we never doubted that their rebellion was a crime for which disfranchisement was the mildest possible penalty), we cannot deny that the attempt to carry the Christian Amendment by force would demand at least as severe a penalty. But if the secessionists had confined their efforts to appeal and peaceable persuasion, we could not justly have disfranchised them; speech must be kept free, even if irrational or treasonable, so long as treason or unreason does not take up arms or proceed to overt acts; even solicitations to national suicide, so long as no attempt to commit national murder is made, must be tolerated. Similarly, so long as the Christian Amendment party operate by peaceable means, no matter how treasonable their enterprise is in fact, they cannot be disfranchised without violation of our own principles. As a matter of expediency, such a course would be a great blunder, giving the Christianizers all the glory and prestige of martyrdom for their cause. Let it be remembered that free discussion always helps our side, not theirs, in this great controversy between Christianity and Freedom; and the victory will assuredly be ours, if we lose not faith in the weapons of Freedom. Perhaps it is true that the Christianizers prove themselves, by their very undertaking, to be really unfit for suffrage in a democratic republic; nevertheless, in advance of some actual crime against the government, we cannot justly disfranchise them, any more than we could disfranchise a man whom we suspected of meditating burglary or murder. Wait till the crime is committed, before you proceed to punish it. Criminals may not vote; but they must be actual, not prospective, criminals. Let us defend ourselves against the suspected crime by such means as are truly republican, and not stoop to "fight the devil with fire."

5. We cannot admit that "the power to rule best is a 'divine right to rule,' whether the sovereign be king or people." That smacks too much of Carlyle, who is no true democrat. It is necessary to-day to adhere inflexibly to the equal rights of mankind, and to carry out our great democratic experiment, in spite of all buffeting winds and waves. Give us no "despotism of intelligence and virtue"! We want here no oligarchy of saints or philosophers; we want to make the people themselves "virtuous and intelligent," and the only way to do it is to throw them upon themselves. If they blunder, let them smart for it, and be wiser next time. If we put our standard of fitness so high as to rule out the great bulk of the people, freedom will languish and die. No! Let us stand by our ship, and, if need be, go down with it to the bottom. Better die with faith in man in our hearts than live to have faith only in the few!

6. The people to-day wofully "abuse" the ballot—no doubt of that! So every one of us more or less "abuses" the freedom he would die to defend. If only "right use determines right," what right has any man? Let us rather say, imperfect use must precede right use; otherwise, no man will ever possess a right.

7. Mr. Smith very frankly admits that there is no more reason for disfranchising the female than the male advocates of the Christian Amendment, but urges that the men, being already enfranchised, cannot be disfranchised, while it is still possible to prevent the great accession of strength to that treasonable enterprise which would result from indiscriminately enfranchising women. This, we frankly allow, is the only argument against woman suffrage which has ever weighed much with us; and we concede its full force. There can be little doubt, we think, that a majority of women could easily be persuaded to favor and vote for the Christian Amendment; while a respectable minority would doubtless vote against it. The great probability that a formidable increase of the ecclesiastical party would result from the immediate establishment of woman suffrage has conduced to a feeling of resignation over its postponement; yet, when called to vote directly on that issue, it would be impossible for us to deny our profoundest convictions of right by voting against her. It is not our habit to count consequences in a question of equal justice; and so long as Christianizing men have the suffrage, we cannot help saying that Christianizing women have exactly as good a right to it as they. We must put our confidence in the common sense of thé whole people, men and women together. It is our own individual duty to vote as we believe; we believe that women, as women, have the same right to the ballot that men have, as men; and, break what may, we can never vote otherwise. The peril to liberty that would undoubtedly result from the universal suffrage of women might be the very provocative that is needed to rouse the liberals from their present dangerous torpor: who knows? Be this as it may, what have we to trust in, if we cannot trust in the eternal expediency of justice? For one, we stand by that till the crack of doom.

8. The question of "intolerance" in the abstract is not specially interesting in this connection: the question of equal rights is the one now under debate. Are we not all in favor of equal rights?

9. There is no way so sure to "save fanatics from themselves," and win them to the love of liberty, as that of showing them how tender we can be of their rights, even when they trample upon ours. If there is anything omnipotent in this universe, it is justice.

10. It is not enough, in order to justify withholding the ballot from women, to show that the "mass of women" are unfit to exercise it: it must be shown that all women are unfit. Otherwise we shall be withholding the ballot from those who, by our own showing, are fit for it. The one thing we will never be a party to is the doing of evil that good may come; and all our radicalism is smoke if it does not teach that principle. Sooner or later the ballot will be given to women, as it has been to negroes; certainly as large a proportion of women are fit for it as of negroes; and does Mr. Smith regret the establishment of negro suffrage? Some do; but we do not, despite all the incidental evils that have followed in its wake. For America is the Land of Equal Rights; and we see no hope of its future but by holding up that banner with steadfast courage and unflinching adherence to the logic of liberty. "Hoc signo vinces!"

F. R. A. ANNUAL REPORT.

The Report of the Proceedings of the last Annual Meeting of the Free Religious Association (1874) has been printed in pamphlet form, and is now ready for distribution.

It contains the annual report of the Secretary, and verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonneschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes with regard to Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian."

Members of the Association are entitled to the tract gratis. Price to others, single copy, 35 cents; package of four or more, 25 cents each. It can be obtained in Boston at A. Williams & Co. s, and at the office of the Association, No. 1 Tremont Place. Applications for it from abroad may be sent to the office in Boston, or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER, Secretary.

LETTER FROM SCOTLAND.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Sir,—I did not intend to recur to the subject of free love in your columns, seeing how my former letter roused the angry feelings of its champions. But I think the late events in New York justify me in the endeavor to improve the occasion by pointing out afresh the moral and social dangers to which we should be exposed were the principles of free love to prevail.

I would first remark that Mrs. Woodhull's reply to me in THE INDEX was no reply at all. With singular ability she urged certain changes in the present matrimonial conditions which I should be quite as anxious to see carried out as herself; but she studiously avoided the advocacy, and even the bare mention, of that part of her theory which I attack. Many persons ignorant of her other writings, and supposing that her letter in THE INDEX contained the principles which I combat, naturally thought that I had been unjust and unreasonably severe. Let them read more of her lectures and judge for themselves.

In reference to the Beecher scandal, I wish to say nothing personal. I would not for the world pollute your columns with the details of which every decent member of our communities must be quite sick. Nor would I venture to give an opinion upon a matter which can only be decided by a court of law exercising the most exact and elaborate scrutiny. In all such cases there is always hard lying, and the discovery of the truth is nearly impossible. But it is within my province to call attention to this case as an illustration of the dire mischief which must follow upon any degree of tampering with the sanctity of the marriage tie.

Take first the hypothesis of Mr. Beecher's innocence of the actual crime of adultery. He has, we will assume, kept within the legal limits of intimacy and familiarity. Even, let us suppose, that there was not a single act of endearment, such as a caress, or warm and significant pressure of the hand. I ask this question: Is Mr. Tilton less injured in having been robbed of his wife's affections than if the graver offence had been committed? As a man, I affirm that the injury, the irreparable wrong, was done when the wife's heart was enticed away and fixed upon another to the detriment of her former sole attachment to her husband.

I indignantly repudiate as sheer nonsense the suggestion that Mrs. Tilton only felt that kind of grateful affection to Mr. Beecher which naturally and purely springs from the relation of pastor and flock. That would never have caused the pastor any remorse, nor the husband any ground for jealousy. If a lady had been in the position of the pastor, Mrs. Tilton's affections would never have gone beyond the purely spiritual and innocent degree. But as the pastor was a man, and his disciple a woman, the inevitable consequence of too great intimacy and too much spiritual counsel was that the disciple was betrayed into becoming a lover. And this condition, I aver, was in itself the greatest wrong that could have been inflicted on a married couple. Now we will suppose that these persons, the pastor and the wife, never met again, never exchanged a kiss or caress; could that wife ever again feel the same spotless affection for her husband, or the husband for the wife? I say no; like a broken pearl the rounded lustre of their love could never be restored.

But some of the advocates of free love are urging more and more of this sort of Platonic friendship between married persons and third parties. Leaving aside the extreme danger of gross adultery into which such persons may be tempted, I say that the total destruction of domestic peace and joy takes place in and through the first alienation of the heart, whether of husband or wife. That is the most cruel of wrongs, and being the first step in a downward course ought to be guarded against with the utmost care.

By this time, Mr. Tilton's eyes must be sadly opened to see the fruits of his persistent advocacy of free love in the pages of the Golden Age. It is a cruel retribution that his own home has been shattered, and perhaps his own heart broken, by the practical application of those very principles which he has so honestly yet so blindly espoused.

And so I would say that granting Mrs. Woodhull to be herself the model of purity—the blessed Virgin Mary of modern times,—her principles and philosophy include the inevitable corruption of domestic happiness, and bear the bitterest fruit of domestic misery. Let her do her utmost to liberate married women from the brutal tyranny of husbands who do not deserve the name of men. To these efforts I would say "God speed." But let her, in the name of all that is precious in earthly bliss, in the name of all that is pure and elevating in domestic life, refrain from encouraging Platonic loves, still more from advocating the indulgence of unlawful fancies—fancies unlawful, not because they happen to lead to a breach of the marriage laws, or to a violation of ecclesiastical obligations, but unlawful because they are unspeakably demoralizing, and are deadly to peace between husband and wife.

On the most charitable construction of Mr. Beecher's conduct, and on the hypothesis of his entire legal innocence, the relations between him and Mrs. Tilton have nevertheless resulted in the utter ruin of her home. Must have done so inevitably, even if Mr. Tilton himself be innocent of the counter charges brought against him.

If I am right in fixing the central injury in the first tampering with the affections of a married woman—or man,—we have no need to consider the moral aspect of what the world calls the graver crime. If I have understood Mrs. Woodhull, she teaches that if Mrs. Tilton preferred Mr. Beecher to her own husband as the father to her offspring, she had a perfect right—nay, it was her duty,—to act as wife towards her pastor. It is this kind of teaching which must be forthwith justified on the eternal principles of right, or it must be denounced with all the indignation one can summon, as one is bound to attack every foe to human happiness and progress, and most of all bound to attack those foes who approach under the garb of friends.

No epithets that I have previously used are too strong to apply to the teachings of which I complain —if I am right in regarding them as fatal to domestic purity and peace. God knows we want more and not less moral restraint to control the most imperious of our passions; and, while I unfeignedly express my pity for those who find them ungovernable, I as unfeignedly express my detestation of those who would make our passions more ungovernable still.

I am, sir, very truly yours,

CHARLES VOYSEY.

SCOTLAND, August 17, 1874.

Communications.

ON THE CHRISTIAN PANTHEISM OF THE NINTH CENTURY.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

Mr. Gannett says of Picton (The Mystery of Matter, INDEX, May 21): "In him the happy hymns of a new faith have begun to sing themselves." "For intellectual men, he [Picton] thinks, there is no future to religion" other than that of a "Christian pantheism." Religion in this form, says Mr. Gannett, "is sure, and never was form so grand and true; . . . the deeper views of the universe are dissipating the common theistic notions of creation—providence, personality, and design,—and replacing them with ideas of the One-in-All in process of transcendent evolution. But to-day's pantheism does not, like Spinoza's, pretend to explain the Great Fact. It simply accepts it, ignoring the barren puzzle of beginning and ending, and recognizing in the Eternal Unity the living substance of all that has been, is, or can be."

Mr. Gannett admits that the early Christian fathers were unjust in their attempts to exalt Christianity by vilifying the Greek pagan religions, and treating the deities of the old faith as "demons, powers of darkness and evil." Those are unjust who endeavor to exalt the Protestant Church by vilifying the populations under the ancient Roman Catholic Church, and representing her as having exercised from the fifth to the tenth century the power (which she had not) of absolute and complete control over the thoughts and conduct of men; of having caused the ninth century to become a barbarous age of darkness, and dismal night of ignorance (which it was not); and of having caused in the tenth century the people of Western Europe, almost without exception, to be sunk in the most brutish and barbarous ignorance. It is equally unjust to exalt the Christian pantheism of to-day by denying the fact that a Christian pantheism existed in the ninth century, founded on the principle of "the philosophy of ignorance," which gives the pantheism of to-day its superiority to the pantheism of Spinoza. This Christian pantheism was patronized by the Emperor of France, Germany, and Italy, and was expounded by his director of the school of the palace, John Scotus. The great reputation of this Irishman, and the extensive influence of his writings, are attested by the historians and by the great heresy of the Albigenses in the thirteenth century.

The obscuring of this fact of Scotus' pantheism is unjust, because it supports the popular notion that the human mind in Western Europe had become debased in an unparalleled degree during the so-called Dark Ages. The Protestant historians of theology and philosophy hold opposite opinions regarding this ignorance. Leibnitz says that there was more learning and knowledge in the tenth century than in the succeeding ages, particularly the twelfth and thirteenth centuries. Mosheim calls this "an extravagant assertion," and so Brucker regards it. Hallam, Buckle, and Lecky indorse Mosheim's opinion. Ingersoll and Underwood say that "during that frightful period known as the 'Dark Ages'" Faith reigned, with scarcely a rebellious subject; that the Church exercised absolute and complete control over liberty of thought and action; that the people are now beginning to think, to reason, and to investigate; and that now a few infidels have made it possible for the genius of the nineteenth century to revolutionize the cruel creeds and superstitions of mankind. It is surprising that they do not know that the infidels of the nineteenth century do but reproduce the arguments of the infidels of the Dark Ages. Mr. Frothingham says that the Protestantism of the thirteenth century was an indication that the human mind was beginning to stir; but that in the fifteenth century the time had not come for theological doubt on the Orthodox dogmas of faith,—trinity, incarnation, atonement, fall, and redemption. Luther and his disciples did all they could to prevent doubt on these questions. You say that, "faithful to the Author and Finisher of its faith, the Christian Church, as soon as it got established, proved itself the unhesitating and uncompromising foe of mental freedom. Christianity annexed the State to the Church, and used the tremendous power of both to subjugate the individual, and absolutely to control his faith and conduct. There really was no freedom in the Church for centuries; the rule of authority excluded personal independence. Every free tongue was bound; every free voice was hushed. The ecclesiastical mandate was supreme. The 'Dark Ages' indeed prevailed."

That the Church always strove to be and to effect what you describe, I will not deny; but during the five centuries from the sixth to the tenth, the Church was not strong enough to make the attempt, and, when she attained her greatest strength, she did not succeed in debasing the human mind to the extent which is popularly supposed. Guizot says that the period comprising the eighth, ninth, and tenth centuries was not one of apathy and moral sterility, and without intellectual activity. It was eminently otherwise. John Stuart Mill said, in the Edinburgh Review, 1845: "When the history of what are called the Dark Ages . . . shall be written as they deserve to be, that will be seen by all which is already recognized by the great historical inquirers of the present time,—that at no period of history was human intellect more active or society more unmistakably in a state of rapid advance than during a great part of the so much vilified feudal period." Guizot says: "Impartiality will never be popular; the masses are governed by exclusive ideas and passions, and there is no fear of their ever judging too favorably of the social and intellectual state of the Dark or Middle Ages."

JOHN CHAPPELLSMITH.

NEW HARMONY, Indiana, July 20, 1874.

[Mr. Chappellsmith is substantially correct. The broad generalization needs to be supplemented by the careful qualification. But it is true that, while the Church has fostered thought in accordance with its creed, it has always done its best to suppress thought not in accordance with it; that this repression has succeeded in proportion to its power; and that it made the "Middle Ages" certainly "dark" in comparison either with Græco-Roman civilization or with the civilization of modern science.—ED.]

THE PROHIBITION QUESTION.

EDITOR INDEX:

Dear Sir,—Allow me to presume upon your patience so far as to say that the "explanation" called for in my article on "Prohibition," in THE INDEX of August 6, is not satisfactory, and by your permission I will state why.

You say: "Selling liquor for gain is not a crime." Here we join issue. Correct definitions are always in order. Webster defines crime to be: "1st. Any violation of law, either divine or human." I need scarcely say that it was not in this sense that I used the word, because violations of law are not always crimes (instance, the Fugitive Slave Law and the Sunday Law); and crimes are not always violations of law (instance, selling men and women into slavery, and selling alcoholic poisons as a beverage under license). "2d. Any aggravated offence against morality or the public welfare." This latter was the definition had in view. Now the question arises, Does selling liquor for gain come under this head? I answer, it does. I do not assert that selling alcohol for any purpose is a crime; my desire to be brief prevented me from saying so in my last communication. I meant selling it for gain as a beverage, knowing that it would be used as such.

"The only crime in the case is the subsequent abuse of the liquor sold. Of course, if the liquor-seller knows or believes that the liquor will be abused, he becomes an accomplice in the crime; but this does not justify society in punishing him simply for selling. There is no getting over or round or under this fact."

I am surprised that one usually so clear and forcible in argument should give us both law and logic in such questionable shape. Suppose an apothecary sells arsenic to a customer to poison rats; would not the act be right in every sense of the word? It would, because the death of the vermin would conduce to the happiness of the individual and to society at large; utility being the standard of morality. But if the apothecary had heard the customer declare his intention to use the arsenic to poison himself or his neighbor, would not the selling become a crime, and would not society be justified in punishing the vendor, and does not the law itself recognize him as a criminal?

Now let me ask further. How many of the 175,000 saloon-keepers in the United States believe that the 13,000,000,000 glasses of poison they annually deal out will be used for medical or mechanical purposes? It is the height of absurdity to suppose them ignorant of the misery, destitution, and crime which their hellish traffic entails. If they sell, knowing the effects of the traffic, but persist because "it pays," are they not legally and morally guilty? And has not society a right to restrain them?

"One and the same principle requires compulsory education and forbids prohibition." This is an assumption based upon two other assumptions; namely, that the vendor of alcoholic poisons plies his trade innocently, and that society proposes coercion for other purposes than self-protection. No one has claimed the right to coerce or restrain the liquor-seller on any other grounds than the protection of society.

I confess my inability to appreciate a philosophy which characterizes the "free love" theories of Austin Kent as "disgusting" and "hideous" because of the evils which it is feared may flow from them, if put in practice, and at the same time advocates free liquor, the evils of which are real, tangible, and present,—felt in every household, and mourned over by every one who hopes for a better future for our race. The same spirit which declares against prohibition would condemn the Chinese for legislating against opium, and laud the amiable Englishmen who forced it down the throats of the obstinate Celestials.

Yours for the right, HARRY HOOVER.

CURWENSVILLE, Clearfield Co., Pa.,
August 16, 1874.

[May we without discourtesy say that Mr. Hoover's reply is itself not "satisfactory"?

1. In this discussion the word crime should be used in the sense of "an offence against society which society has the right to prohibit or to punish." Lying is an "aggravated offence against morality or the public welfare;" but only certain kinds of lies are crimes in this sense. If all "aggravated offences against morality or the public welfare" may be properly prohibited or punished, we demand forthwith a sweeping statute against lying. Lying is always injurious, directly or indirectly, as undermining that mutual confidence without which society is impossible; but society will have its hands full, if it undertakes to deal with remote consequences. It can deal only with immediate consequences; and this principle must limit its right to prohibit or punish.

2. The apothecary who sells liquor for medicine sells it "for gain," but he confessedly commits no crime. Mr. Hoover now admits (if we understand him) that selling liquor for gain is not always a crime, thus modifying his former unguarded statement. He now says that "selling it for gain as a beverage" is a crime. But this is not true, unless the use of it "as a beverage" is a crime. Will he maintain that all use of it as such is a crime? If he does, we must decidedly take contrary ground. But Mr. Hoover must either maintain this hazardous position, or else admit that "selling liquor for gain as a beverage" is not always a crime, and still further modify his first statement.

3. The illustration of the arsenic is all on our side; for it only shows that, while selling arsenic for rat-poison is innocent, selling it for man-poison is criminal. Precisely; that is what we urged. Selling liquor for temperate use, even as a beverage, is innocent; selling it for intemperate use is criminal.

4. The saloon-keepers will like our doctrine just as little as the teetotallers, for it binds them to a conscientious discrimination among their customers. Sale to any one whom they suspect of the least excess is just as wrong on our principle as on Mr. Hoover's; and society has a right to hold them as accomplices in any subsequent excess.

5. The "vendor of alcoholic poisons," by Mr. Hoover's own previous admissions, does sometimes "ply his trade innocently;" it is, then, no more our assumption than his. But he evidently has not perceived the full force of the argument so inadequately met.

6. The closing paragraph of the above letter "strikes out wildly"—too wildly to be replied to. One thing at a time; and, above all, don't misrepresent. But Mr. Hoover is far too ingenuous and fair-minded to intend any misrepresentation at all. The spirit of his article is all that could be wished.—ED.]

PLEDGES AND CONTRACTS.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT, ESQ.:

Dear Sir,—I have read very carefully your very able argument published in THE INDEX, August 20, 1874, on "Temperance and Total Abstinence," and beg to say that I heartily concur in every word you have to say on the subject.

It has been suggested to me that the second ground of argument presented by you (see page 398) is as applicable to the marriage tie as to the pledge of "total abstinence" from liquor. That is, suppose that the marriage-pledge were the pledge under discussion, in what respects would your arguments not be pertinent? Yours truly, H.

[1. The temperance pledge is an attempt to enter into a contract with oneself for the non-performance of a particular act, and thereby to add to the real force of a voluntary resolution the artificial sanction of a formal external bond. But, the party contracting and the party contracted with being identical, the contract itself is an illusion, or what might be called a "moral fiction." The pledge has no more power to prevent the performance of the given act, than an internal, secret resolve not to perform it, except so far as the pledge-taker calls the world to witness that he has made this resolve and fortifies himself against temptation by imprecating social contempt as the penalty for yielding to it. The pledge is therefore a public confession of moral weakness, and so far tends to lessen the protective power of self-respect; the artificial contract it creates is merely a device to reinforce by external aids that sturdy self-reliance which, though the essence of all moral strength, is felt to be deficient. As a help to feeble wills, therefore, the pledge is practically of value, though logically absurd, while to a strong will it becomes an irritant, and adds nothing but a sense of quasi-degradation—as if a whole man were to walk the streets on crutches.

2. The marriage tie is a real contract between two different parties, which is necessary for the protection of mutual happiness and the welfare of children. Its essence is not in any legal formula, but in the solemn recognition by both parties of a sacred obligation to each other. For the sake of a greater good, each surrenders the right to form sexual alliances with any other party than the one contracted with; it is a contract freely formed, but, like all contracts, it limits subsequent freedom of action in some respects. The objections we bring against the unreal contract of the pledge do not apply to the real contract of the marriage tie, unless the principle of freedom requires the abolition of all contracts; which we deny. Moral strength is perfectly consistent with reverence for the force of all real contracts, or else society is impossible except among moral weaklings.—ED.]

WHAT IS "LEGAL MARRIAGE"?

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

A notable feature of the free-love controversy is that opponents continually defend and extol, not the present marriage institution, but an ideal marriage, more or less high and pure according to the character of the individual. Hence it is necessary clearly to define marriage, adultery, divorce, prostitution, etc., before any intelligent, candid, and dispassionate discussion of these subjects can be had. Thus Mr. Abbot demurs to our statement that ownership of the wife is the corner-stone of marriage as it is, and proceeds to tell us what is the corner-stone of that institution. But he favors us with no indisputable citations of fact: he only talks of "mutual contracts," "the freely formed union of equals," "true husbands," etc.; all of which must form part of some marital Utopia, as they can very seldom be affirmed of the present marriage system.

In considering the nature of the civil contract called marriage, it may be held that that alone is marriage which is so recognized in the law courts of to-day. But following the rule that obtains in respect to civil law in general, we shall make it to include universal and immemorial usage and tradition. According to Bishop's Law of Marriage, it is "a civil contract by which two persons of opposite sexes, who have arrived at the proper age, mutually agree to take each other for husband and wife so long as both shall live."

"No form of ceremony is necessary." "The consent of the parties, in the presence of any respectable witness, is sufficient." Under the head "Evidence of Marriage," we find, however, that marriage may be inferred thus:—

"The admission of the parties that they are husband and wife;

"The fact of their passing for husband and wife;

"Their general reputation as husband and wife;

"Their holding out of each other to friends, neighbors, and the world, as husband and wife,—

"Are, in law, sufficient to prove that they are husband and wife."

Here we have a legal peculiarity, which is ludicrous, and would be laughable, if it were not for the terrible liability entailed. We refer to the trap-like provisions under which even an agreement of "one and one," unwitnessed, is held (however differing in its character and terms) to be marriage in all its express terms; and two persons to whom "legal marriage" might be utterly repugnant could not associate intimately, even upon the highest, purest plane of social life, without incurring the liability of "the hated bond" by having "the general reputation of husband and wife" fastened upon them by gossipping neighbors. Marriage "for better or worse," in which scarcely an honorable divorce, except the divorce of death, is provided, seems to be implied, however the parties may have contracted with each other. It might be likened to a net catching and holding unsuspecting victims.

In considering critically the terms and phraseology of the marriage bond itself, we are led to ask if, after all, the whole thing be not farcical, since the wife's unconditional vow of life-long love becomes an impossibility, should a certain contingency arise, in which case the promise would be null and void if made in relation to any other matter. The life-long vow of obedience under those conditions simply makes the wife a slave, for she solemnly vows to "obey" in the absence of both love and honor, both on her own and her husband's part. It is notorious that in every feature of this contract the man is given "the inside track." A contract is only valid and to be respected to the extent that it is possible to fulfil it, and it has been objected to the marriage vow that it wholly ignores the nature of love, treating it precisely as something within the control of the parties covenanting.

Pope's immortal couplet was never better quoted than in this connection:—

> "Love, free as air, at sight of human ties > Spreads his light wings, and in a moment flies."

This is manifestly its nature, confessedly the one great essential element in marriage; yet by the terms of the contract it is wholly subverted, and other elements the most base and mercenary take precedence.

It is an old adage that a bad promise is better broken than kept, and we stoutly assert that the marriage obligation is such a promise, simply because it is not made conditional. Free-lovers are much maligned and misrepresented; but on this point do not let us be misunderstood. We say most emphatically that love, par excellence, is first and all, N.B., though it does not in our view necessarily imply either sexual commerce or offspring; and we inquire if it is not the one genuine guarantee of the "permanence of the home," with all relations appertaining thereunto.

Much of the criticism of the advocates of social freedom and their views is a sad muddle, because it is wanting in the important ingredient—knowledge. Believing that the true relation of the sexes is as yet unknown to the human race, and believing that the laws of that relation can never be discovered, confirmed, and applied to the extinction of sexual evils and the elevation of mankind except through conscientious, scientific sexual experimentation, we remain "open," pledged to abide the issue of social freedom as defined to mean, not a broader license for passion, but the opportunity (or, shall we say the possibility) for such experimentation.

Studying the sexual relations of animals, birds, etc., we do not discover that coercive power has been vested in the males; but it would seem that man has assumed it, or by both the terms and traditions of marriage he becomes "clothed upon" therewith.

THE INDEX may ignore, or may wish to waive the consideration of the total effect of this sexual subjection of women; but surely THE INDEX may not deny the immemorial sad fact. Many great minds in the past have regarded the power or influence which has operated to keep women bound to exclusive sexual servitude during life, or what is almost as bad, doomed her to ignominy, should she seek alliances with man in obedience to the primal instincts of her motherhood outside of marriage, as the monster evil of humanity. Dr. Rosch observes: "If it were possible to bring home simultaneously to the minds of mankind its undeniable truth, we should have made an advance which would outweigh the wisdom of ages." Mill sturdily says: "The law of servitude in marriage is a monstrous contradiction to all the principles of the modern world." And again, in this connection: "Marriage is the only actual bondage known to our law. There remain no legal slaves, except the mistress of every house." (See Mill's Subjection of Women; page 147.)

Let THE INDEX, then, be assured that our warfare is not Quixotic, and has not been initiated without a full comprehension of the magnitude of the revolution needed to effect the removal of this bondage, which has been justly regarded as the curse of the ages. There is already much agitation of the fundamental questions of society, and the omens indicate that ere long it will become evident to all earnest reformers that an emancipated motherhood is the bottom rock on which the new divine temple of society must be builded.

We are very glad THE INDEX agrees with the free-lovers at least so far as to give its chaste and noble word in favor of agitation, looking to the incoming of that fair millennial era,—

> "When woman's life no more shall be
> The play-ground of hypocrisy,
> But earnest, natural, and free;
> And Love shall stay unfrighted,
> And reign in sacred, sweet content,
> And offer service reverent
> For marriage shall be sacrament,
> When this old earth is righted."

Thanking THE INDEX for its courage and liberality,

I remain, A. BRIGGS DAVIS.

CHARLTON DEPOT, Mass.

[1. It is an equally "noticeable feature of the free-love controversy" that advocates of that doctrine argue on the assumption of an ideal social state which requires everybody to be perfect; whereas all laws, including marriage laws, are based on the fact that nobody is perfect.

2. In order to refute our statement that the idea of a civil contract, and not that of ownership of the wife by the husband, is the corner-stone of marriage, Mr. Davis quotes a legal authority which defines marriage simply as a "civil contract," and in terms which treat both parties to it as absolutely equal! This supports our statement, and nothing else; and it is difficult to see why Mr. Davis should quote an authority which annihilates his own case.

3. The husband, as much as the wife, makes the "unconditional vow of life-long love." So far, then, marriage is as much the wife's ownership of the husband as the husband's ownership of the wife.

4. The vow to "obey" is rapidly growing obsolete. It is already disused in the majority of marriages; and it is not quite fair to consider it otherwise.

5. The marriage contract, it is true, ought to be made on equal terms in all respects; this we have already admitted.

6. We cannot admit that love is wholly beyond control. On the contrary, we hold it to be both a possibility and a duty to prevent the formation of an attachment known to be in violation of a solemnly recognized obligation. It is a miserably weak character which surrenders itself to the absolute guidance of emotion, and moth-like rushes into the flame.

7. No marriage ought ever to be formed where love does not already exist; and the marriage contract ought to be based wholly upon it. How, then, is love "wholly subverted" by marriage?

8. Whoever wants to make his marriage promise "conditional" proves that he or she does not love enough to make the promise at all. No whole-souled love can admit the possibility of its own death. This is the justification of the unconditional promise.

9. Mr. Davis inquires if love "is not the one genuine guarantee of the 'permanence of the home.'" If so, the unconditional promise can be safely made. But if not, the free-love doctrine evidently threatens the permanence of the home.

10. The experience of mankind for thousands of years has decided that the "true relation of the sexes" is marriage; and it is as preposterous as it is revolting to suppose that "scientific sexual experimentation" could throw the least additional light upon it. There have been, and are, too many experiments in that direction, to countenance any such Utopian notion.

11. "Coercive power" is an abuse possible only to human brutes. It is no part of marriage as defended by any one.

12. THE INDEX is as decidedly opposed to the "subjection of woman" as Mr. Mill or anybody else. The duty of conjugal fidelity is as absolute for man as for woman, whatever lax notions on this point may prevail in immoral quarters. If this is "sexual servitude," it includes husband and wife impartially; but the servitude which is simply mutual fidelity is the highest possible freedom, namely, freedom from all outside interference to obey the natural laws of right.

13. Neither "emancipated motherhood" nor emancipated fatherhood nor emancipated donkeyhood is the rock on which any "divine temple" will be built. It is "Quixotic" in the highest degree to suppose that the social welfare of humanity can depend on anything but the permanence, the purity, and the sanctity of home.

14. THE INDEX certainly favors the brave and open agitation of all questions of public concern, believing that repression is always the worst possible policy for the truth. The utmost possible agitation can do nothing but deepen both man's and woman's reverence for faithful wedded love.—ED.]

SIGNS OF REACTION.

BEAVER, BEAVER CO., Pa., 19 August, 1874.

MR. F. E. ABBOT:

My dear Sir,—You have thought it proper to publish my views in regard to Mrs. Victoria Woodhull's "Free-Love" doctrine. Permit me to make the following addenda, in justice to myself and in view of the fact that my communication was dated June 23d, and that, consequently, the famous number of her Weekly containing your quotation from an editorial on the Beecher-Tilton Scandal had not then appeared.

As long as the principles Mrs. Woodhull advocated could be formulated into the following propositions, I think she was entitled to an audience; but when she appears in her new rôle defending adultery and seduction, and proclaiming an [assumed] miserable hypocrite as the Messiah of the coming Social Revolution, then I agree with you that it is time to protest, even if I do not believe it necessary to baptize her new social republic "hell," as you do.

Her propositions formerly were as follows:—

"1. Marriage-laws that would be consistent with the theory of individual rights would be such as regulate all other associations of people. They should only be obliged to file marriage-articles, containing whatever provisions may be agreed upon as to their personal rights, rights of property, of children, or whatever else they may deem proper for them to agree upon."—Principles of Social Freedom.

"2. These, then, are our deductions:—

"We demand for woman that she shall be emancipated from dependence upon the individual man for physical support; that such an order of industry shall be inaugurated as will make it unnecessary for women to depend upon or surrender their sex for maintenance, which they now do almost wholly, whether in or out of marriage; that their relations to man shall be such that their maternal functions shall remain under their own control absolutely; that they shall never be called upon to submit to sexual intercourse except at their own election, and that they shall be so enlightened about the science of generation, procreation, and gestation, that hereafter none but the best children, physically, mentally, and morally, may be born."—Weekly, Aug. 15, 1874.

There is nothing in these propositions which is shameless, immoral, or calculated to encourage vice, adultery, seduction, crime. Here Mrs. Woodhull follows in the footsteps of such earnest social reformers as John H. Noyes, Ann Lee, Robert Owen, Robert Dale Owen, Frances Wright, Margaret Fuller, and Wolfgang Goethe. There has been a very ignorant cry raised against Goethe's Wahlverwandtschaften (Elective Affinities), as very dangerous reading for the young, the uneducated, the ignorant; "as if dull and ignorant people wanting insight and imagination would not find the highest literature of every land,"—says Hepworth Dixon, in his Spiritual Wives, "be it profane or be it sacred, the work of Homer, Dante, Shakspeare, Cervantes, the Bible, the Talmud, the Vedas, the Koran,—to be dangerous reading for the young."

So far, then, Mrs. Woodhull was an earnest reformer; but she did even more than her noble predecessor, that inspired rhapsodist of free love, Frances Wright, the female companion of Dale Owen, who preached the new gospel of emancipation before large audiences, who publicly declared that the law of marriage, as enforced by the Church, makes every woman who adopts it a slave. Mrs. Frances Wright was also in favor of free divorce, and described the wedding days as symbols of the chains of female slavery. She published the Free Enquirer in New York, and no doubt the advanced thoughts on social, political, and religious questions published through that fearless paper very often shocked the more pious and conservative minds. Yet no American mob ever attempted to tar and feather, or to insult, her or her noble companion.

It is not very long since THE INDEX contained the following words from Mr. A. W. Stevens: "We do not expect the truth ever to become popular; it will always be too 'new' and 'radical' for any but the bravest and most rational minds to receive." So it was to be expected that Mrs. Woodhull would have to suffer a little martyrdom. But she was persecuted; in her person the entire American press was outraged; and the silence of the large, influential journals of New York at the time of her arrest and her imprisonment in Ludlow Street jail was cowardly and contemptible.

My dear Mr. Abbot, I do not endorse Mrs. Woodhull's flank movement; indeed, I find not even an explanation for it. I sincerely regret her step, as it will probably result in a general reaction. There is no necessity to disguise the fact that through Beecher's fall liberalism suffers a loss, a great loss; but Mrs. Woodhull's panegyric of Beecher's [assumed] crime will be more than a loss,—the whole liberal movement will have to bear the stigma, the odium, for years to come!

In silentio et spe!

Fraternally, HUGO ANDRIESSEN.

[So frank a repudiation of the repulsive extreme to which Mrs. Woodhull has carried her doctrine (we must say that it seems to us only a logical development of it), and by one who has more or less sympathy with this doctrine in its undeveloped form, ought to exert a very wholesome influence. But we must enter here a protest against the conclusion that "liberalism" will ever have to suffer the odium of Mr. Beecher's as yet unproved crime. It will be a perilous and fatuous blunder for Orthodoxy to attempt to make such capital as that out of the Brooklyn scandal: a crushing retort will be ready, which we forbear even to hint till the crime is proved beyond a reasonable doubt. If the Orthodox do not go crazy, they will shrink from any such assault on liberalism as is here suggested; for the charge will be a boomerang of the most deadly description. That the Orthodox are not unconscious of this fact is clear enough from the desperate energy with which Mr. Beecher has been defended. Let them beware of dealing a foul blow against the free thought which they have hitherto attacked as being "mere morality." If they ever turn about and charge it with being "mere immorality," let them look to their weapons; for they will have to fight every inch of their way.—ED.]

A VETERAN'S OPINIONS.

SPARTA, Wis., July 16, 1874.

DEAR INDEX:—

Enclosed find $3.00 for one year's subscription. I like you now, after over twelve months' acquaintance. Did not, when a friend induced me to receive your weekly visits. At first, I was determined you should discontinue them; reason, war in your household, which looked too much like Christians. "Liberal" men don't quarrel. When they do, they are illiberal. I like you now "muchly;" though not because your religious faith (excuse the word) harmonizes with mine, but for your free inquiry. This is the only panacea for the ills of this life. As for the next, I know nothing about it, and don't care to know, until we learn how to use the one we have. If there be one, it will take care of itself.

Speculation about another world lies across the path of science, while creeds choke out the reason. I am an old man; have watched the progress of events for fifty years, and am not discouraged at the result.

When very young, I learned the difference between knowledge and belief. The persecution of my father for harboring Frances Wright opened my eyes wide, though I was but fourteen years old; though I never knew a time when they were shut tight enough to be a Christian. I never had any faith in what is called religion, never took stock in any people's God. If I did, it would be the heathen's God, as I like tangible things. I have not read much of late years except current events; I was one of the earliest supporters of the Investigator, when it cost something to be a heretic. I left it at the time I considered its influence was on the side of the slave power. I believe its principles now harmonize with mine more than THE INDEX; though I believe your correspondents are good thinkers, and thinking is what is to save the world, not the Christs. I was much interested in Mr. Potter's essay published some time since, though unable to comprehend his God any better than I can the "God of Abraham, Isaac, and Moses."

Matter and its laws to me are sufficient. To speak of mind or intelligence apart from matter, or to separate thought from brain, is to me as incomprehensible as to talk of the secretion of bile or the digestion of food separate from a stomach or liver. Intelligence without a brain, to me is nonsense. I am content to know that brain thinks, not what makes it think.

An intelligence behind all, and over all, is no solution of the problem,—only causes the fancy to wander beyond facts into the realms of superstition. If death, as we call it, is to develop new light, I can wait; I am not dead. If it brings new life and new duties, I hope to be able to meet them. But, dear INDEX, I did not intend to bore you.

I say, go on! Make men wiser and better, if you can; for better we must be, or it's of little consequence what we believe.

If free thought can, after a fair trial, do no more for man than Christianity has, it had better die now.

Yours truly, J. LAMBORN.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions,			10c per line.
" 13 " 25	"		8	"	"
" 26 " 51	"		6	"	"
" 52	"		5	"	"

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

CIRCULATE! Circulate!! Circulate THOSE PETITIONS. Don't feel satisfied when your petition is a yard long, unless you have asked every one to sign it. Get good, influential names.

GET EVERYBODY.

Don't neglect to show the petition to any one, because he is a stockholder in some church, or other exempted property, as many such persons admit the justice of the demand; and those who will not should be made to take the responsibility of refusing to sign it.

Don't delay! We want the petitions returned early.

Per order of EXEC. COMM. of the BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,

has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, assisted by ABRAM W. STEVENS, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
THOMAS W. HIGGINSON, Newport, R.I.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS
OF
LEADING INDEX WRITERS.
Including
O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 4.

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:
FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

ASSOCIATE EDITOR:
ABRAM WALTER STEVENS.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:
O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
T. W. HIGGINSON, Newport, R.I.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
F. W. NEWMAN, England.
CHARLES VOYSEY, England.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS,

OF THE FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. Abbot, D. A. Wasson, T. W. Higginson, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. Wasson on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. Abbot, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. Wasson on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. Abbot on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age;" an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. Higginson on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potier on "Religion Old and New in India;" also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Sympathy of Religions, by T. W. Higginson. 25 cents.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 10 cents, singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

Price.

ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets 1.50
Concord Days 1.50
Records of a School. A new edition 1.50

ALCOTT (LOUISA M). Little Women. Two vols 3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories 1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl 1.50
Little Men 1.50
My Boys, &c 1.00
Shawl-Straps 1.00
Work; A Story of Experience 1.75

ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS. 1.50

ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism 2.00
New Poems 2.00
Literature and Dogma 1.50

AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. 1.50
Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine 2.00
Edelweiss 1.00
German Tales 1.00

BACON'S Essays 1.00

BAGEHOT on the English Constitution 2.25
Physics and Politics 1.50

BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy 1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol 1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol 5.00

BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms. 2.50

BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations 3.00

BARTOL (Rev. C. A). Radical Problems ... 2.00
The Rising Faith 2.00

BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols 5.00

BIBLE in the Public Schools.
Records, Arguments, and Decision in the case of John D. Minor et al. vs. the Board of Education of the city of Cincinnati; et al. in the Supreme Court of the City of Cincinnati 2.00
Arguments of Ramsey, Sage and King in favor of the use of the Bible ..... .50
Arguments of Stallo, Hoadley and Mathews against the use of the Bible ..... .50
The Opinion and Decision of the Supreme Court of Ohio in the above case ..... .25

BRACKETT (ANNA C.) The Education of American Girls 1.50

BROOKS' (CHARLES T.) Translations. The Layman's Breviary 2.25
The World-Priest 2.25
The Tall Student ..... .75

BUECHNER'S Force and Matter 3.25

BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols 6.00

CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol ..... .80

CARPENTER (Dr. W. B.) The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions 3.00

CERVANTES' Don Quixote 1.50

CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing 1.50

CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet Naturalist. With Memorial Verse. 2.00

CHENEY (Mrs. E. D). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside 1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience 1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated 1.50

CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions 3.00
Common-Sense in Religion 2.00

CLARKE (Dr. E. H.) Sex in Education 1.25

CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World ..... .75

COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. 3.00
Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays 5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age ..... .20

CONWAY (MONCURE D.) The Earthward Pilgrimage 1.75

CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol 2.00

CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE; Its True Aims and Requirements A Series of Addresses, By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans 2.00

DALL (Mrs. CAROLINE H). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship 2.50

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I, "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies" 1.50
The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor" 1.00

DARWIN'S Origin of Species 2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols 4.00
Journal of Researches 2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals 3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated 6.00

DESCARTES (RENE.) Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences 2.25

DICKENS' Child's History of England 1.50

DUHRING (JULIA.) Philosophers and Fools. A Study 2.00

ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each 1.00
Comprising—
Adam Bede.
Romola.
The Mill on the Floss.
Felix Holt.
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life.
The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols 3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols 3.50
Wit and Wisdom of 1.25
The Spanish Gypsy 1.50
How Lisa Loved the King ..... .50

EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series .. 2.00
Essays. Second Series 2.00
Miscellanies 2.00
Representative Men 2.00
English Traits 2.00
Conduct of Life 2.00
Poems. With Portrait 2.00
May-day and Other Pieces 2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold 1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold 1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols 5.00
Society and Solitude 2.00

EVANS (C. P., Ph. D). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanase Coquerel the Younger 1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols 5.00

FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion 2.00

FEUERBACH (LUDWIG.) The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation. 3.00

FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.. 2.00

FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity 1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers ..... .20
Child's Book of Religion 1.00
Life of Theodore Parker 3.00

FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols 9.00

GALTON (FRANCIS.) Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences 2.00

GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol 5.00
Elective Affinities 1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols 3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham 1.00

GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life 2.00
Literary and Social Judgments 2.00
Creed of Christendom 3.25

GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait 5.00

HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France 1.50
Thoughts about Art 2.00
The Unknown River 6.00
The Intellectual Life 2.00
Chapters on Animals 4.00

HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second 1.00
Child World. Part First 1.50

HAMILTON'S Lectures.
1. Metaphysical Lectures 3.50
2. Logical Lectures 3.50

HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol 2.00
Twice-Told Tales.
Mosses from an Old Manse.
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.
The Marble Faun.
The English Note-Books.
The American Note-Books.
The French and Italian Note-Books.
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.

HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers ... 1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance 1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment 1.50
Atlantic Essays 2.00
Oldport Days 2.50

HOWELLS'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey 2.00
Suburban Sketches 2.00
Venetian Life 2.00
Italian Journeys 2.00
A Chance Acquaintance 1.50

HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "'Ninety-Three".. 1.75

HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits 10.50

HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life 1.75

HUNT'S (Mrs. HELEN). Verses 1.25
Bits of Travel 1.50

HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature 1.25
On the Origin of Species 1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism ..... .50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals 2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews 1.75

INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems 2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen 1.50
Songs of Seven 2.50

INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skelligs 1.75
Studies for Stories 1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series 1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours 1.25
Mopsa the Fairy: A Story 1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect ..... .60

INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures 2.00

INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES.
No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall 1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot. 1.50
III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith 1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain 1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq 1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr 2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine 1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aëronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew. 1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D 1.50

JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers. 1.50

JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India 5.00

JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian 2.50

JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols 12.00

KERR (ORPHEUS C). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous 2.00

LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols 4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols 6.00

LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings 4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics 2.00

LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham 1.50

LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. 3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols 4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed 3.00

LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life. 1.50

LEWIN (Rev. RAPHAEL, D'C). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews 1.00

LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols 4.00
Prose Works. Portrait 4.00

LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols 4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series 1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series 1.50
Among my Books 2.00
My Study Windows 2.00

LOWELL (Mrs. A. C.) Posies for Children. .75

LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man.. 2.00
Pre-historic Times 5.00

LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols 8.00
Elements of Geology 3.50

MACDONALD (GEORGE.) The Vicar's Daughter 1.50

MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife 3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. 3.00
Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848 ..... 3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann 1.25

MARTINEAU (JAMES.) Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol 2.50
The New Affinities of Faith ..... .25

MAURICE (Rev. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind ..... .75

MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire 1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations 1.50

MILL (JOHN STUART.) Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each 2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each 2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. 1.50
Political Economy. New and revised edition 2.50
The Subjection of Women 1.25
Essay on Liberty 1.25
Representative Government 1.50
Autobiography 2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works ... 1.0

MILLER (JOAQUIN.) Songs of the Sierras. 1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands 1.50

MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species 1.75

MORLEY (Prof. JOHN.) Voltaire 2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols 5.00

MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-Time Stories 1.50

MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series 2.50
The Same. Second Series 3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume 2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion 2.00

NASBY (PETROLEUM V). Swingin' Round the Cirkle 1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky 1.50

NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy 4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed 2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations. 2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy 1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical 4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism. .25
Against Hero-Making in Religion ..... .25

PARKER (THEODORE.) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion 1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols 4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols 3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings 1.50
Historic Americans.—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham ... 1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence ... 1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations.—A.D. I. and MDCCCLV. A Christmas Story ..... .60

PARSONS (THEOPHILUS.) The Infinite and the Finite 1.00

PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar 1.50
The Trotty Book 1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts 1.50
Hedged In 1.50
The Silent Partner 1.50
What to Wear? 1.00

PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition 2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates 2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena 1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts 4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc 5.00
The Expanse of Heaven 2.00

ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante 2.50

SCHELLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies 6.00

SCIENCE PRIMERS:
1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S... .50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe ..... .50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With illustrations ..... .50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth ..... .50

SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols 31.25

SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition 2.00

SMILES'S (SAMUEL.) Self-Help 1.50

SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical 1.25
First Principles 2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Æsthetic 2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers 2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed 2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols 5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols 5.00
Philosophy of Style ..... .50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.. 2.00
Sociology 2.00

SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus ..... .25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics 9.00

STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny 1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin ..... .00

STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New 2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols 12.00

TAINE'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols 7.50
The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske 2.50

TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems 1.75

THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.. 1.25
Vanity Fair.
The Newcomes.
Adventures of Philip.
Pendennis.
The Virginians.
Esmond, and Lovel the Widower.
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol. 1.25

This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.

1. Barry Lyndon, Hoggarty Diamond, &c.
2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.
3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c.
4. Four Georges, Humorists, &c.
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unreprinted Pieces.

THAXTER'S (Mrs. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals 1.50

THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods 2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.. 2.00
The Maine Woods 2.00
Cape Cod 2.0
Letters 2.00
A Yankee in Canada 2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimac Rivers 2.00

TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind 2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols 5.00

TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer 1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People 2.00
Light and Electricity 1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps 2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion 2.00
On Sound 2.00
Radiant Heat 5.00
Forms of Water 1.50
Lectures on Light 1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall ..... .50

TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures 1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings 1.50

VOYSEY (Rev. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each 3.00
Vols III. IV. and VI., each 3.75
The Voysey Appeal ..... .50
Voysey's Defence at York ..... .50

WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden 1.00
Saunterings 1.50
Back-Log Studies 2.00

WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion 1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols 6.00

WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life 1.50
Essays and Reviews 3.00
Character and Characteristic Men 1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.... 1.50
Success and its Conditions 1.50
Washington and the Revolution ..... .30

WHITNEY'S (Mrs. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life 1.50
We Girls: A Home Story 1.50
Real Folks 1.50
The Other Girls 2.00
Pansies. A volume of Poems 1.50

WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols 4.00
Child Life 3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place, Boston.

$25 A DAY GUARANTEED using our WELL AUGER AND DRILL in good territory. HIGHEST TESTIMONIALS FROM GOVERNORS OF IOWA, ARKANSAS AND DAKOTA. Catalogues free. W. GILES, St. Louis, Mo.

ROWLAND CONNOR,

Having finished his engagement with the Free Congregational Society of Florence, will answer invitations to lecture for liberal societies. Address at JAMAICA PLAIN, MASS.

CHARLES SUMNER.

A fine likeness of Massachusetts' great Senator, tne copy of a recent Photograph by Black, is for sale at THE INDEX office, and will be sent by mail to any address on receipt of the price—fifty cents.
Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE BOUND INDEX FOR 1873.

The bound volume of THE INDEX for 1873 (Volume 4) will be promptly forwarded to any address on receipt of $3, by express, at the purchaser's expense. A complete file for the year can be furnished in no other form.
Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

PENN MEDICAL UNIVERSITY,

OF PHILADELPHIA.

The regular course of Lectures in this Institution will commence on the first Monday in October, and is open to both sexes. The school is liberal and progressive, and thorough in its teachings. For announcement giving terms and other particulars, address
E. D. BUCKMAN, M.D., DEAN,
No. 1030 Spring Garden St.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.

To THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.
Yours truly,
HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address
THE INDEX,
No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston.

CHARLES SUMNER'S

GREAT WORK.

PROPHETIC VOICES

CONCERNING AMERICA.

By CHARLES SUMNER.

Fine Edition, Tinted Paper, with Steel Portrait, Crown 8vo., Cloth extra, $2.

Aside from its literary and historical merits, this volume has a special interest, from the fact that it was the last work on which r. Sumner was engaged before his death.

"PROPHETIC VOICES" will be found of great value to all who take an interest in the history of our country, so full is it of passages in which the unexampled prosperity of our land has been foretold by philosophers, poets, statesmen, and orators, of whom the lamented author has also given interesting sketches.

Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price.
Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A NEW, SEARCHING, TIMELY BOOK, entitled

"THE GENESIS AND ETHICS OF CONJUGAL LOVE."

By Andrew Jackson Davis.

Treatment of all the delicate and important questions involved in Conjugal Love is straightforward, unmistakably emphatic, and perfectly explicit and plain in every vital particular. Mr. Davis has recently examined the whole field of Marriage, Parentage, Disaffection, and Divorce, and this little volume is the result; which now comes into the world because it is now both wanted and needed by all women and men.

"Our friend Andrew Jackson Davis has written a book this time that concerns everybody, and on this side of the great river. It certainly touches their bosoms if not their business, and people who do not care a pin what Mr. Davis thinks of the Summer Land will be interested to see what he knows about conjugal love, and the duties of the marriage relation. His book has a table of contents as attractive as a Delmonico bill of fare.—Golden Age.

Price, in paper covers, 50 cents; in handsome cloth, 75 cents; in full gilt and extra binding, $1. Postage free. The trade supplied on the most liberal terms. Published by the "Progressive Publishing House" of A. J. DAVIS & CO., No. 24 East Fourth Street, New York City.

STUDENTS FITTED for any College.
Please address
EMILY J. LEONARD,
Meriden, Conn.

CONSTANT EMPLOYMENT.—At home, male or female, $30 a week warranted. No capital required. Particulars and valuable sample sent free. Address, with six-cent return stamp. C. ROSS, Williamsburg, N. Y.

FREE DISCUSSION

is held at HOSPITALLER HALL, 593 Washington Street, Boston, every Sunday, at 10½ A.M., 2½ and 7½ P.M. All that relates to the Religious, Political, and Social interests of mankind constitute the subjects for discussion. THE INDEX and Index Tracts are for sale every Sunday at Hospitaller Hall.

WEST NEWTON ENGLISH AND CLASSICAL SCHOOL.—The twenty-first school year of this Family and Day School, FOR BOTH SEXES, will begin Wednesday, September 16, 1874.
For particulars address
NATH'L T. ALLEN, Principal,
West Newton, Mass.
At home Saturdays.

TO NEWSPAPER PUBLISHERS.

Having conveniences for doing the best of newspaper printing at reasonable prices, I should like to contract for composition alone, or for composition, press-work, and mailing, for one or more weekly papers.
Best of references given, and satisfactory work guaranteed. GEO. H. ELLIS,
7 Tremont Place, Boston.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.
Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c., of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing
THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX.

Bound volumes of THE INDEX for 1871, 1872, and 1873, will be sent by express (at the purchaser's expense) on receipt of $2.50, $2.50, and $3.00 respectively. These volumes are exceedingly valuable singly, irrespective of each other; for the important essays and other articles they contain are of permanent interest, and will furnish as instructive reading twenty years hence as to-day. No more valuable present could be made to a friend struggling out of Orthodoxy than one of these volumes.
Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

WARREN'S

TRUE CIVILIZATION.

Price 50 cents.

PRACTICAL DETAILS,

showing the workings of the

COST PRINCIPLE.

Price 25 cents.

For sale by

S. H. MORSE,

25 Bromfield St., Boston.

FOR SINGING CLASSES!

THE

SONG MONARCH!!

By H. R. PALMER, assisted by L. O. EMERSON.

A book admirably fitted for the use of Singing School Teachers, having, in addition to a compact theoretical course, more than 180 pages filled with Glees, Quartettes, Airs, Tunes, &c., &c., pleasant to sing anywhere, and constituting a most agreeable course of study. A good book also for College Choirs, for Seminaries, and Social Sings.
Price 75 cts., or $7.50 per dozen.

FOR CHOIRS AND CONVENTIONS.

THE LEADER!!

is the Leader of all Church Music Books for 1874 and 1875, being the first in the field, and of a character that cannot be excelled.
By H. R PALMER, of Chicago, assisted by L. O. EMERSON, of Boston, containing also compositions from the hands of large numbers of American Music writers.

For CONVENTIONS, CHOIRS and SINGING CLASSES.

The LEADER has 86 pages of Singing School Music, the same as that in the Song Monarch, and large numbers of new Tunes and Anthems, all by the best composers.

Price $1.38, or $12.00 per dozen.

Specimen copies of the above book mailed, post-paid, for retail price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO.,
BOSTON.
CHAS. H. DITSON & CO.,
711 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE.

Our organization some time since decided to direct its efforts for the present towards securing the

Repeal of the Laws

whereby church and other corporate property is unjustly exempted from its share of the burden of taxation,

As a means to this end, we have published for general circulation several thousand copies of a

TRACT

on Church Exemption, being the article by Mr. Abbot which appeared in THE INDEX of Nov. 27.

We have already issued three editions, the last of which is nearly exhausted.

We desire soon to issue

Another Large Edition

of this and other tracts on the subject, so that we can place a copy in the hands of

EVERY VOTER IN THE STATE,

and generously to supply the calls for them in other States.

To do this, we need funds; for, although we have made arrangements for printing the Tract at very low cost, it is impossible for the Boston League, with its various other expenses, to bear the entire expense alone.

Will not, then,

All Friends of the Movement

come forward and help us with liberal donations?

We frequently receive communications from parties wishing tracts to distribute, asking how much they shall pay. To such we reply that the cost to us is about $2.50 per thousand, and we shall be pleased to furnish them at this price per thousand, or 30 cents per hundred, to all who will circulate them. But all additional donations will be gratefully received for the purpose of circulating them gratuitously throughout the country.

Last winter this subject was brought before the Legislature of the State, and many petitions were presented asking a repeal of these unjust laws.

The matter is still in their hands, and at the next session will undoubtedly be acted upon. Meanwhile the

Voice of the People,

favoring justice and equity, should be distinctly heard.

We shall soon be ready to send out

BLANK PETITIONS AGAIN,

thus giving an opportunity to those who have not already done so, to protest against this continued wrong.

Let us make it

THE LARGEST PETITION

ever presented to our legislative body.

Will those willing to assist in circulating these petitions please

SEND IN THEIR NAMES?

We would say, also that we feel deeply the need of

Other Organizations

in this State, to coöperate with us in securing equality and justice, by pressing the "Demands of Liberalism." If, in any locality, there are those who are inclined to

Form a Liberal League,

we are ready to render such assistance as lies in our power.

LIBERALS!

If all will unite and work, the results sought can be accomplished

Address

BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE,

NO. 1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

Per order of the
EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

NONPAREIL Farm Feed, Bone, Drug, and Hand-grinding MILLS. Ten Sizes. Also Cotton-Seed Hullers. Illustrated pamphlets free. Address
SEDGEBEER, SHEPARD & MILLER,
181 East Front Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

THE AMERICAN EDITION

OF

MONCURE D. CONWAY'S

SACRED ANTHOLOGY,

A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES,

has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.
Address THE INDEX,
1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,

BANKERS,

LEROY, MINN.

Branch Office, 137 Broadway, N. Y.

Money Invested in First Mortgages on Improved Farms in Minnesota and Iowa, running three to five years, with Coupon Interest Notes, drawing 9 per cent. annually in advance, or ten per cent. paid semi-annually in advance, or 12 per cent. per annum, annually, free of expense to the Loaner.
☞ 10 per cent. paid on receipt of money at the Bank, or in New York, till invested.
For Full Particulars, send for Circular.

137 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

REAL ESTATE SECURITIES, paying 8 to 10 per cent. interest, or

Investments in Real Estate in Chicago and vicinity,

if judiciously made, are the best and safest modes of employing capital. The old

Real Estate and Loan Agency

OF

ERNST PRUSSING, 143 RANDOLPH STREET

Chicago (Established 1853),

Guarantees perfect title and ample security in all its Real Estate Loans.
Firstclass securities always on hand. Interest and principal collected without charge. Real Estate Investments made on commission or on shares; taxes paid, &c.
Orders of capitalists and real estate owners respectfully solicited.

REASONS FOR USING THE

EUREKA SPOOL SILK.

It is full length. It is full size. It is smooth and elastic, and is equally adapted to hand or machine use.

Many kinds of spool silk are a perfect fraud, being not only shorter in length, but a much finer size than they are represented to be, and of so poor a quality as to be unfit for use. The ladies will always find the Eureka Silk exactly as represented. Every spool is warranted, and the manufacturer's name indelibly branded on every spool. Call for it.

RADICAL AND LITERARY

LECTURES

BY

JOHN WEISS,

RADICAL LECTURES.

The Idea of Hereafter.
An Act of Faith.
Intelligence in Religion.
Religion and Science.
Heart in Religion.

SHAKSPEARIAN LECTURES.

FIRST SERIES.

1. Cause of Laughter.
2. Irony and Humor.
3. Dogberry, Malvolio, Bottom, Touchstone.
4. Ajax in Troilus and Cressida: The Porter in Macbeth: The Fool in Lear.
5. Falstaff.
6. Hamlet.

SECOND SERIES.

1. The Women of Shakspeare.
2. Portia.
3. Ophelia.
4. Macbeth and Lady Macbeth.
5. " " " "
6. Contrast in Shakspeare's Characters.

Address JOHN WEISS,
32 E. Brookline St., Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year. LIBERTY AND LIGHT. Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 5. BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 17, 1874. WHOLE NO. 247.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF ——.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in ——:

Also, as soon as five hundred such Liberal Leagues shall have been formed in different places, to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be hereafter called, in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the needed reforms.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the National Convention of Liberal Leagues when called together.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

So far as I am concerned, the above is the platform of THE INDEX. I believe in it without reserve; I believe that it will yet be accepted universally by the American people, as the only platform consistent with religious liberty. A Liberal League ought to be formed to carry out its principles wherever half a dozen earnest and resolute Liberals can be got together. Being convinced that the movement to secure compliance with these just "Demands" must surely, even if slowly, spread, I hope to make THE INDEX a means of furthering it; and I ask the assistance and active co-operation of every man and every woman who believes in it. Multiply Liberal Leagues everywhere, and report promptly the names of their Presidents and Secretaries. Intolerance and bigotry will tremble in proportion as that list grows. If freedom, justice, and reason are right, let their organized voice be heard like the sound of many waters.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

BOSTON, Sept. 1, 1873.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State; and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation.

GLIMPSES.

GUIZOT DIED on September 13, at the age of nearly eighty-seven.

WHAT Uriah Heep was it who exclaimed, "I'm the Publican, not the Pharisee—thank God!"

THE COMPLETE "Address" of Professor Tyndall, in neat pamphlet form, will now be mailed from this office, postpaid, on receipt of the price, twenty cents.

GUIZOT'S History of Civilization is a striking illustration of our thesis that Protestantism is a mechanical mixture of Christianity and Free Religion—two elements that have no chemical affinity whatever for each other.

MATTERS ARE COMING to a crisis in Louisiana. Two things only are certain—that the government of the United States will be sustained by the people, and that the equal rights of both whites and blacks will be defended by the government.

THE REPORTED whipping to death of a little child only five years old, at the New York Five Points House of Industry, is too sickening to be believed without absolute proof. Nobody but a loup-garou could be capable of such fiendishness.

SWITZERLAND has decreed "free marriages." That is, marriage has been redeemed in that country from the obstructions and superstitious regulations imposed upon it by Catholicism, and henceforth will be subject only to such laws as the people themselves determine. Another step forward.

WHEN FATHER HYACINTHE says that he wants to reform the old Church, not found a new one, the Golden Age responds that "he might as well try to reform the Alps." Yet the Age itself is trying to reform the religion of the same old Church; and we in our turn make the same response.

IN WOONSOCKET, Rhode Island, F. C. Birtle, a photographer, was fined $1.00 and costs before a Justice Court (so-called), for taking a picture on Sunday for a customer who could not come on a week-day. So says the Woonsocket Daily Reporter of August 31. Only clergymen are allowed to work on Sunday.

PROFESSOR SEELYE, of Amherst College, one of the most distinguished advocates of the Christian Amendment, is presented as candidate for Congressman by his friends. What is to hinder his election? For all that the liberals are doing or likely to do, men of his well-known opinion can be elected in every Congressional district throughout the Union.

"THE PATRIOTIC SONS OF AMERICA" is the name of an organization (numbering in all 26,000 members) which on September 5 held a picnic in Cumberland County, Pennsylvania. One of their objects is to oppose all encroachments upon liberty by Roman Catholics; and they profess to be equally opposed to encroachments by Protestants,—their principles requiring Church and State to be separate and distinct. These statements are made on the authority of a confidential letter which we are not at liberty to quote. Having never before heard of this organization, we shall be grateful to any one who can give us further information on the subject.

THIS EXTRACT from a private letter which we have received under date of August 30, 1874, from an old resident of Louisiana, is mournful corroboration of the reports with which the daily press is now teeming: "Colfax, where seventy-six negroes were ruthlessly murdered, is only thirty miles from here. Some three or four negroes have been shot in this parish since I have been here, say about three weeks. No arrests have been made, so far as I have yet heard. In fact, the people here have been so inured to crime, to cutting and shooting, for the past forty years, that they look upon these acts with as much indifference as they would upon the killing of a domestic animal."

VICTOR HUGO declined to attend the Peace Conference at Geneva because he thinks another war has got to be waged between France and Germany—a duel between republicanism and monarchy. When the Germans marched on Paris after Sedan, instead of peaceably going home when they had destroyed the Empire that attacked them, they put themselves in the wrong before the world; and we expressed this opinion at the time in a lecture in THE INDEX. Germany chose to trample her foe into the mire; the royal victor cunningly took advantage of his people's ancient grudge to strengthen his own throne; and the wrong then done will undoubtedly work out its own retribution in more blood by-and-by.

"IF WE NEEDED a proof," says the London Spectator, "that this age feels the meaning of that mysterious descent of power from above as much as ever, it would be afforded by the reception which was given to Ecce Homo a few years ago,—a book the great literary point of which was to set forth the absolutely imperative character of Christ's personal claims." The words we have italicized emphasize a fact from which all Liberal Christianity studiously averts its eyes; and notably the Golden Age. To hunt for the secret fountain-head of Christianity's power over mankind in any other thing than faith in the personal Christ, is to walk directly away from the object sought. Free Religion can thrive only on ideas, and perishes in person-worship; but Christianity evaporates wholly except as it flows through the sap-channels of its own Vine.

THE FOLLOWING telegraphic despatch from Washington, under date of June 22, seems worth reviving now that General Butler is running again as candidate for Congress. It proves that politicians who care only for popularity find their interest in catering to sectarianism in a most dangerous way, although liberals persist in seeing no danger anywhere. "There was a vigorous discussion in the House, this afternoon, over the item in the sundry Civil Appropriation bill, inserted by the Senate, to appropriate $25,000 for the Roman Catholic charitable organization known as the Little Sisters of the Poor. When the bill was first before the House, Judge Hoar tried to have this provision inserted, but failed; to-day, Mr. Garfield made a strong speech against giving away the nation's money to any sectarian organization, putting it on the broad ground of wise public policy to avoid all such acts. On the other side there appeared Judge Hoar, Gen. Butler, and Mr. Packer, of Missouri, and they carried the House with them. There was also left on the bill an appropriation of $25,000 for erecting a building for the Young Women's Christian Association of this city." No one of these gentlemen except Mr. Garfield ought to receive a single liberal's vote.

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walters; Secretary, E. M. Bridgman.
WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—President, J. B. Bassett; Secretary, Anton Grethen.
NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
BALBEC, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
SAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.
AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Vaux, Secretary.

Christian---Extra-Christian---or Anti-Christian?

THE ANTI-CHRISTIAN'S PLEA.

ADDRESS OF FRANCIS E. ABBOT, AT THE SEVENTH ANNUAL MEETING OF THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION, IN BOSTON, MAY 29, 1874.

It falls to me in this discussion to take the least attractive and the least lovely attitude of the three positions to be represented on this platform to-day. I am conscious of speaking, therefore, at a certain disadvantage, because I know that to almost all of you, perhaps to all, the word "Christian" is associated with the holiest and tenderest feelings of your own childhood; with your mother's love; with the best thoughts and the best sentiments that have surrounded you from your infancy up. It is no gracious task to intimate anything that should withdraw from that word any of these associations. It is sufficiently disturbing to see that one stands aloof from the word, regarding it without a positive allegiance. It is still more disturbing, and must be, for one to say that that word stands for something which must be religiously opposed. I repeat that, when it falls to me to say this and to represent this attitude before you, I am conscious of doing so at a great disadvantage; for I can hardly count upon the sympathies of many, if of any, in your number. Nevertheless, I must speak the word that comes to me.

The first question to be settled, when we are discussing the relative truth of the Christian, the Extra-Christian, and the Anti-Christian positions, must be, What is Christianity? And who shall define it? Now is it fair, is it just, to go to the heretics of Christendom to get the true definition of Christianity? Is that the method of scholarly criticism, to go to those who are not recognized by the great bulk of Christians as representing the Christian faith, and take your definition of Christianity from them? Does that seem to you the exact, the fair, and the just course to pursue? Would you then go to the Liberal Christians—to the Unitarians, to the Universalists, to any other of the small handful of so-called Liberal Christians,—and take from them your definition; or would you go to the hundreds of millions of Orthodox Christians, whose substantial faith, notwithstanding great diversities of church polity and minor points, is yet essentially one and the same thing everywhere? Who, if not the Christian Church, as a whole, has the right to define Christianity? I must deny absolutely the right of any other party in this broad world to define Christianity than the Christian Church itself, by its universal consensus. That seems to me just; that seems to me fair; that seems to me to be the only course that a scholar or even an honest man can pursue, at least if he sees the real nature of the case. That is why I go to the Christian Church—the great Orthodox Christian Church, including the Greek, the Roman, and the Evangelical Protestant—for my definition of Christianity, rather than to the rationalistic or so-called liberal bodies of Christendom. I believe that this first question must be answered then, in this manner: It is the Christian Church itself that must give the definition of Christianity, and not the avowed heretics and the reputed infidels of the Christian communion.

What, then, is the answer that this great Christian Church (by which I mean all the institutions which have grown up out of the Christian religion) gives to our question, What is Christianity? I will not tire you with going through the list of doctrines; you know them all. I will simply sum them up as Christian Orthodoxy itself,—the fundamental doctrines of the fall of man, the depravity of man, the wrath of God, and salvation by faith in Christ alone: doctrines in which three hundred millions of Christians agree as essential and fundamental to their faith,—doctrines which only a small handful of two or three hundred thousand exiles believe to be unessential. The characteristic principle of AUTHORITY, now represented by the Church, now by the Pope, now by the Bible, determines what Christianity is, leaving us no option to evolve a new or fantastical definition out of our own modernized ideas of what is true and right. In all its forms the Orthodox Christian Church claims to hold still the same great fundamental doctrines on divine authority, and defines Christianity substantially in the same way. Christianity, it says, is the religion of Christians; and Christians are those who depend for their salvation on faith in these chief doctrines of the authoritative Christian gospel. This is the answer given to our question by the Church itself: justice and common fairness, as well as scholarly criticism, demand that this answer be accepted as the definition of Christianity.

It is not true, then, when I am criticised for having or framing a narrow definition, that I have any definition at all of my own. I make none. I have none. I simply find, and accept what I find. It would be an impertinence to come before you, or before the world, and say, "This is my definition, and I call upon you to accept it." I have no definition of my own. I say, "There is the Church's definition of Christianity; there is the definition which Christianity has written out on the great page of history for itself: take that." By that must the radical's position be determined, if I am sound in my view; by that definition of Christianity must we settle the question, Which is the true position to hold, the Christian, the Extra-Christian, or the Anti-Christian?

It would be a very long and tiresome task, were I to go through the whole history of Christendom, and trace out for you what has been the working of Christianity, thus defined, in the world,—what it has done for man and what it has left undone; what good and what evil it has accomplished in the long course of the ages. Enough for me to say that in fairness we must credit to the Christian Church, and to Christianity thus defined, both the good and the evil they have done. We must recognize in Christianity all the conserving and evolving powers it has called into play; we must recognize the great historic place that the Church filled in the middle ages, and still fills to a large extent to-day; we must accept with generous approval and hearty applause all the noble words that have dropped from the lips of Christian teachers, all the divine and beautiful deeds that have been done by Christian believers, all the sweet and beneficial influences that have proceeded from Christian souls; yes, amen to all that! I do accept them, and I am grateful for them. Far be it from me to disparage a single one of those noble and beautiful things.

No! But I insist also upon the other side; I insist that you must also credit to the Christian Church the long story of persecutions,—the black and hateful record of crimes which have been done in the name of the Church, in the name of Christ, in the name of Christianity. These things have happened, not by accident, but through intense devotion to the claims of Christianity upon the obedience of humanity. The Inquisitors were not bad men; they were simply Christians of fiery earnestness, and they carried their devotion to Christianity so far as to over-ride and violate the inalienable rights of the human soul. Charge up, then, to Christianity all the doings of all its followers [i.e., all which are the logical consequences of Christian doctrines], and from this large survey you will derive the only truthful and just estimate of its real character. Institutions express the nature of ideas,—the innermost nature of ideas. What institutions do in the world is what the ideas tend to do. What the ideas contain in themselves are germs of action; and I insist that this is the only fair, just, and proper way to consider the history of Christianity. Thus, therefore, would I treat it.

Is it not true, then, looking at the working of the Christian Church in this light, that from its birth down to last Tuesday the influence of Christianity has been thrown against freedom of thought? Has it not been everywhere and always the opponent of the scientific spirit, the free spirit, the secular spirit that would disincline men to accept Christian doctrine,—the spirit which would sow distrust of the great fundamental ideas of the fall of man, the depravity of man, the wrath of God, the atonement and salvation by Christ alone? These ideas have been the very centre of the Christian faith. Whatever called them in question must be put down and crushed; and so it has been from the very start. Freedom, at every point of history, has been brought in direct collision with this great Christian system,—a system of faith which has been the great enemy of light, and progress, and modern thought. I cannot go into any lengthened argument or bring up illustrations. I must leave my argument in the brief, sketched as best I can sketch it in charcoal only; for the time is short and there is much to say. But I must take this position, that whoever faithfully studies the history of the Christian Church, crediting it with both the good and the evil it has done, as recorded on the historic page, must come to this conclusion: that the net influence of Christianity in history has been to repress, and not develop, the freedom of the human mind.

This ground may seem dogmatic and unsupported by truth; but I must take it, and go on. To say that Christianity is essentially an organized slavery of the human mind, may seem dogmatic, may seem harsh, may seem bitter, may seem malevolent; but it is the honest and earnest conviction of at least one man in this audience, and I can speak for no more. It is my deep conviction that the innermost spirit of Christianity is hostile to the natural evolution, the free development, of human thought; and for that I must unflinchingly stand. Come what may, stand what may, fall what may, freedom of thought is infinitely precious to mankind. The principle of freedom is not negative, but positive. It means to be untrammelled and unhampered by any human authority, by any church, or by any State, in the search for truth; and that, I say, is the one principle for which we are called upon in this age to stand. It is this positive principle, it is this love of freedom, that has made me Anti-Christian: that, and that alone. I have no personal quarrel with the Christian Church; I will bring forward no private grievances, for I have none; I have entered my own path, and abide by its results; I have no reasons why I should be angry with the Church, and tear it down or hurt it. There is nothing personal about my position. The simple fact is that my position is not a voluntary one. It is not one I have chosen for myself; but I find in this age, from which I draw my mental as well as my physical nutriment, a great stream of tendency, a great onward movement of the human race towards larger liberty, and this great wave has caught me up and thrown me where I am. It is no will of mine, no choice of mine; no! But I see whence I came and whither I am going; I see that I have been borne out of the very heart of the Christian Church to the heart of the Anti-Christian camp, if you choose to call it so. I simply accept my position, not made by me for myself, but made for me by the times and by my own simple wish to be true to the duty of the hour. This, then, I want to emphasize: the Anti-Christian position is not the main one—it is the incidental one. Anti-Christianity is anti-slavery, and anti-slavery is pro-freedom. That is where I am. I am for freedom; and whatever fetters or limits freedom, that I am against, call it what you please. I say, therefore, that the Anti-Christian position is simply the position of one who is burning in his very heart's core with the passion for freedom, and sends out his thought everywhere in all directions, to find out and bring back what truth it may. The positive side is the free side. "Pro-Freedom" is the word, not Anti-Christianity; that follows of course, if Christianity is opposed to freedom. Let me emphasize this thought that the Anti-Christian attitude is simply incidental, while the great positive thing is a burning devotion to the spirit and the principle of spiritual liberty. That is the great human truth for which I stand here to-day; and I care nothing whether it be Anti-Christian or Christian, provided I can have that truth and that principle preserved.

If I am correct, then, in holding that Christianity itself is a denial of freedom, that this denial is in its very warp and weft, and cannot be got out except by destroying the whole fabric, then I say that all freedom-lovers, whether they know it or not, are Anti-Christians. I hold that every Protestant is more or less an Anti-Christian. I hold that every Liberal Christian is still more an Anti-Christian; I hold that the American Unitarian Association is in its drift an Anti-Christian association; I hold that the Free Religious Association is an Anti-Christian association; I hold that any and every body of men who try to live by freedom are, just in that proportion, Anti-Christian. The Catholic Church—which none would admit in this audience, I suppose, to be other than hostile to liberty,—we know its history; we know its intense activity to perpetuate slavery of the mind,—I suppose there is none here, except it be perhaps a stray Catholic, who will deny that the Catholic Church is opposed to freedom. Very well, then; so far as the Protestant agrees with the Catholic, so far he is against freedom. Does not the Evangelical Protestant plant himself on the same substantial theology? Does he not profess also to believe the fall of man, the depravity of man, the wrath of God, and salvation by Christ alone? Is not that in both their creeds? But the fall of man—that is denied by Darwinism. The total depravity of man—that is denied by experience. The wrath of God—that is denied by justice. The atonement and salvation by Christ alone—that is denied by reason and common sense. The man outside of Christianity denies all this, and thinks freely. The old dogmas can only be held to men's attention by the chains of ecclesiastical authority and the greater chains of ignorance. That is the reason why the Catholic Church cannot educate the people, and why it keeps the Scriptures in an unknown tongue, and concentrates learning and intelligence in its own clergy. So is it everywhere; wherever Christianity has prevailed, intellectual darkness has brooded over the land. That is the reason, friends, why the Protestant Evangelical body comes forward, every now and then, with a new case of heresy, like that of Prof. Swing, of Chicago; a man whom it would be an honor to any denomination to hold within its communion, and yet a man who has been hounded down by persecution and obliged to withdraw from his own denomination because he dared to think. This is not because his persecutors have been unfair and unjust, but because they have been true to the fundamental principles of their religion. I do not blame Prof. Patton or the other prosecutors of that case. I charge the evil of the trial, and the misery it brings, and the public scandal it causes, all to the demands of the ideas themselves,—to the system which those men were enlisted to defend. I have no quarrel with men; it is ideas that interest me. I can throw open my arms as wide as you please, and take in every honest man; but I take him as a man, and not as a sectarian. I cannot take in a Catholic as a Catholic; but as a man I would do the utmost in my power for him. So I charge to the Christian system every such case as Swing's.

Last Tuesday, I listened all day to a similar case in our own city, tried before a tribunal which in numbers is not great, but in character and intelligence is very respectable,—the Unitarian Association, I mean. I was drawn there by an intense desire to witness the last battle between Christianity and freedom. I went to listen to the debate on the Year Book and the exclusion therefrom of our friend Mr. Potter's name; and through all the debate I saw the same issues staring me in the face, and I wondered how they could fail to be equally plain to every other there. I saw those good men (good on both sides; conservatives good, radicals good; both earnest, both honest in the main, and filled with a good spirit), I saw them battling and striving to get over an historic necessity which was too strong for all their efforts. They were all pledged at the outset to be Christians; they were all pledged, radicals and conservatives alike, not to call into question that name, "Christian-Unitarian;" and the radicals among them were trying to discover how it was possible to retain that as the name of their body, and yet to admit into it one who will not call himself a Christian. Well, friends, it is no discredit to any man to say he cannot accomplish a contradiction; there is no reason to blame the Unitarian Association that they could not see their way clear to retain the fellowship of a man whom they all seemed to love and respect, without falling into a contradiction. They had to choose between one of two things: they must either take in a Non-Christian and thereby sacrifice the Christian ground they profess to occupy, or else they must exclude their friend for the sake of remaining all Christian. How could they help themselves? It was not their fault: it was the fault of Christianity, if fault it be; it was the fatality of the case that decided that question. In the most liberal branches of the Christian Church, even those that profess unbounded fealty to freedom, you see the same historic necessity, which is at bottom a logical necessity, working and compelling them to exclude members whom they love and honor from their common fellowship. Certainly they themselves perceive this same truth in the case of Evangelical and Catholic churches. This seems to me to be the hard fact which we cannot get over: that Christianity always includes, with all the beautiful things which it has said and done, this suppression of individual liberty.

A few weeks ago we were all of us horror-struck, aghast, at the news of the great calamity in Mill River,—a terrible flood bursting from the Williamsburg Reservoir and carrying destruction to three or four villages. In reading the accounts of it, I saw a statement that through the lower side of that great dam had been noticed for some time little rills of water spouting out, which were supposed by the people to be springs that had made their way through the embankment, and not to have come from the waters behind. They came really from the vast mass of water behind the dam. If they could have spoken, they would have said, "We do not want to break down this dam; we do not want to remove this precious barrier, which protects these simple and unpretending villages; we only want to get out of the reservoir; we only want to be outside; we do not want to hurt the barrier; we don't want to do any harm; we only want to get through for ourselves; we only want to escape from the confinement." Well, did they not, in coming out, carry out part of the dam, atom by atom, down the valley? Did they not prepare the way, at last, for that ruthless rush of the flood which swept away the barrier and brought ruin and destruction so far and wide? It is, it seems to me, just so with every man among you who says he is Extra-Christian, but not Anti-Christian. In making your own way out, you weaken the great barrier which I, instead of wanting to break down, pray to remain; for it protects the world from the tremendous floods of superstition behind. Let that barrier stand; I would not break it down. The water is there behind it; but I would open the flood-gates and draw off the water, and let the river take its natural course. That is the way I would go to work. I would not try to tear down the barriers between the churches or the sects. I would try to enlighten the masses in the Christian Church by the method of instruction, give larger truths and ideas, and thus draw off this confined terrific power from behind the barriers; then we can remove the barriers at our leisure and plant our grain in the water's bed. So, I say, every little rill which is bursting forth from the Christian Church is Anti-Christian. Every such rill is carrying away that which makes the dam, and is helping to bring on the impending catastrophe that must follow.

It has been said in the New Testament that Jesus declared to his disciple Peter, "Thou art Peter, and on this rock will I build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." That is true; the gates of hell will never prevail against any religion whatever. By the great surging attacks of licentiousness, of vice, of disregard for all social and moral law, never will Christianity be removed from the world, or the walls of the Christian Church be broken down. No. There is no power in vice, no power in error, to break down or even to shake a genuine truth; but there is a power in the truth itself to supersede all limitations of itself with a more perfect faith. The Church of Christ, though built upon a rock, is washed by the great waves of the broad ocean of truth; and those waves are grinding, grinding, grinding away at the solid rock on which the Church rests, until by-and-by the waters will flow over the place where it stood. That I believe. The religion of the future will come from the ruins of all those special religions, which are mutually antagonistic, and whose "special claims" never can "shake hands." That is a fond dream; they never can shake hands while yes is yes and no is no. These religions must all give place to a broader one, a cosmopolitan one, one which must be boundless in its nature, one that is not identical with any one of the special religions, but is greater than them all. All these special faiths must give way to that at last; and then for the first time will the spirit of Anti-Christianity, which is simply the spirit of pro-freedom, become universal throughout the world. That is the coming of the unbroken human fellowship, and the unfettered union of soul with soul in the love of truth and the love of man, and the common upsurging of the human heart to that Power which we so little know, but from which we cannot withhold the allegiance of our inmost being.

[For The Index.]

ECCLESIASTICAL TRIALS.

BY BISHOP FERRETTE.

I suppose everybody is now sick of them; and my adopting the above title is perhaps not wise, as it may expose what I have to say to be skipped over. My object, however, is merely to sum up, in a practical conclusion, what is the result of my own, and should, in my opinion, be that of the public's, observations in matter of ecclesiastical trials; and this I can do without at all meddling with scandalous matter, or taking side, or naming persons.

I do not contest the legitimacy or propriety of either a church, or a family, or any private society, instituting a private inquiry as to any delinquency of its members which has not become public, and applying to it, without scandal to the community at large, such spiritual disciplinary remedies as either justice or mercy may suggest: provided that he who is the object of such discipline be not thereby injured in any of his civil rights, such as his reputation, his liberty, or his property.

But I absolutely deny that in a civilized community, where there are regular law courts, any church, or corporation, or individual, should have the right of assuming the offices of a court, and publicly trying any one, even with his own consent, for any criminal offence. Private individuals, in a civilized community, have delegated their right of doing justice to the collective sovereign power of the land; and for individuals to exercise it after delegating it thus, whether they do it by duelling, or by lynching, or by constituting themselves a court, should be considered as dishonest as selling the same horse to two different parties. All such attempts should be at once put down by the civil authorities, as they would certainly be in France and any European country except England. Even in England and in this country the attempt of individuals at exercising other offices of sovereignty, such as those of levying war or establishing a separate post-office, would no doubt be instantly repressed; and it is difficult to see why an exception should be made in favor of the private exercise of the judicial power, unless it be on account of its edifying results. Those edifying results are before us. This country has been for several months deluged with sickening literature and talk, loosening to the morals of young and old alike, simply because the Brooklyn Grand Jury or District-Attorney either neglected or was not legally enabled to deal with the case from its beginning in the only way in which it could be efficiently dealt with; that is, by prosecuting before a regular court either the one party for adultery or the other for calumny. A regular court has efficient modes of procedure, and compulsory means of bringing before it documents and witnesses. A church has no such means, and can only proceed in an incomplete, bungling way, and make itself a public nuisance by stirring up three times more scandal than a legitimate court would do in doing real and complete justice to the case.

I have given some study to the laws of this country, and it seems to me that, in most of the States, if the law does not furnish the means of directly restraining ecclesiastical bodies from indulging in the mock solemnities of public criminal trials, this could be done indirectly by the action of the Grand Jury evoking the whole affair, from its first stages, before the legal courts. The ecclesiastical court might then, perhaps, choose to go on with its own trial, but would more probably desist from it, and adopt the conclusions of the legal one. Even when the Grand Jury does not act, it seems to me that no church is placed in the necessity of dealing by itself with the case. Whether the accused person is the pastor of the church or one of its members, why should not the church committee write to him an official letter somewhat like the following:—

"Sir,—You have been accused by So-and-So of such-and-such conduct. These charges, if true, being inconsistent with the position which you hold in connection with us, we are under the necessity of suggesting to you the propriety of your demanding from So-and-So a formal retraction, and, he failing to give it, of obtaining reparation from him at the hands of the civil courts. Should you not choose to adopt this course, we should demand your resignation."

It seems to me wonderful that the churches of this country have not thought ere this of adopting a mode of procedure so simple.

The only cases which should ever publicly come before ecclesiastical courts are those concerning the respective Orthodoxies of the various sects, as a court of law "will be no judge of such matters." That is, in most countries it will not, but in England and America it will, as the great modern revolution which, in Europe, separated the Church from the State, never really extended to countries governed by the Anglo-Saxon law. So in England and in most of the American States, if not in all, when a legacy has been made, say to the first Presbyterian Church of such a city,—if a part of the congregation with the minister, as the age is progressing, happen to adopt views less absurd than those of the Confession of Faith for the support of which the legacy was made, a court of law has gravely to sit as a theological court; and, though composed of Jews and Papists and infidels, to decide on the precise amount of depravity of Presbyterian babies, and to say whether the pastor, as a good Presbyterian within the terms of the Confession of Faith, is to be maintained in his emoluments, or whether he is to be turned out as a heretic. The sheriff then executes the sentence, by force if it is needed.

Such a relic of mediæval rubbish in the codes of the enlightened American States, as late as nearly the last quarter of the nineteenth century, belongs really to what we may call The Humors of Law, and absolutely calls for legislative reform. Additional legislation is also required for putting down the public nuisance of criminal trials by so-called ecclesiastical courts, or by any other private parties.

[For The Index.]

INTOLERANCE AT THE SOUTH.

Alexandria, La., August 29, 1874.

Mr. Editor:—

There is no doubt of Mr. Pillsbury's position that the Christians of the South universally justified the institution of slavery by the teachings of the Bible, and that through their influence the people were encouraged in the most inhuman treatment of their slaves; and finally, with a religious fervor scarcely equalled in the annals of history, to enact with pious zeal the most barbarous laws that ever disgraced a statute book.

These facts I have verified by actual observation and study in the South since 1850. Up to the close of the war it was worth a man's liberty, if not his neck, in many places, to proclaim abolition sentiments.

Political and religious intolerance was and still is the marked characteristic of the Southern mind. This is manifested in the ostracism attempted, as well as the many brutal murders that have disgraced the country since the war.

Viewing the matter from my standpoint, I think I can safely say from experience, without fear of successful contradiction, that the Christians all over the South have not only been the most barbarously inhuman masters, but they have in politics vied with each other as holy inquisitors in ferreting out and persecuting people of supposed antislavery sentiments; while on the contrary the free-thinkers generally were the notoriously humane.

My mind now rests, as I hurriedly write, upon three prominent examples at this place.

Gov. J. M. Wells, an old-line whig, and the staunchest Union man of the State, was a heavy slave-owner, a humane master, an emancipationist, and free-thinker; and finally, to save his life, he was with his sons compelled to flee to New Orleans for the protection of the Government and army under General Banks.

Smith Gordon, also a heavy slave-holder, was a free-thinker, and notoriously one of the most humane of masters. He died before the war.

Dr. J. Casson, one of your subscribers (and, by the way, one of the ablest physicians and most learned men in our State), was notoriously one of the most humane and kind-hearted of masters. Many years ago when he inherited eight slaves from his parents (all the property he then had save a little landed property), he at once took them to Ohio, set them free, and provided for their education.

On returning to this parish (Rapids), his native home, the religious and political fanatics had so poisoned the public mind against him on account of his acts that he removed to California, where he followed his profession for several years. He has since returned, and now enjoys a large if not lucrative practice. The fanatical prejudice against him has not yet died out; his superior acquirements, however, together with the result of the war and his charitable nature, has disarmed intolerance of its venom. He, too, is a freethinker. I might mention hundreds of others all over Louisiana. It might be a pleasure to place in contrast the many bright sides of the picture, for surely there were many deserving of notice which to a casual observer served to ameliorate the foul blot of slavery upon the pages of our nation's history; but these softening scenes sprang not from the Christian side of the picture, but from the liberal and atheistic side.

The truth is that Christianity, from about the year 1840, attempted in the South to justify, if not sanctify, this vile institution by Bible authority against every principle of natural morality and the dictates of human nature.

Christianity furnished an excuse for every species of villany and oppression, sanctified it by the so-called word of God and the laws of man. Strange to say, the religious portion of the community, together with the worst class of thoughtless young men of Louisiana, are to-day our White-Leaguers, the human butchers of the country.

It is they who patronize such vile sheets as the New York Day Book, wherein I notice a leader in the issue of July 11, 1874, speaking of Gerrit Smith, the renowned scholar and humanitarian, in the following language:—

"What a life this old heathen has lived, to be sure! the sole consistency in which is his warfare against the Christian religion; for not only has he done this openly and directly, but all his other labors, and especially those in regard to the negro, necessarily tend to blot it out utterly."

It is painful to charge home to Christianity in the South the many iniquities I know to be facts,—to accuse Christians of being the sycophantic followers of public passion, of justifying the "peculiar institution" in all of its horrid enormities, instead of attempting to direct public sentiment and morals.

The priesthood, whether Catholic or Protestant, have heretofore fostered and still foster public depravity. They scout at all reforms wherein humanity is most concerned, as a violation of Bible doctrines and the Divine dispensation.

The exertion of The Home Mission Herald of New York is the only apparently healthy effort, outside of our public school system, I have seen put forth by any Christian sect since the war.

Although the negroes have made rapid advances in some sections towards acquiring the fundamental branches of an education, still as a general rule their progress has been so slight as scarcely to be appreciable.

Out of 280,000 educable children in Louisiana, only about 53,000 attended our public schools last year. Fully seventy-five per cent. of our entire population can neither read nor write. The most indifferent teacher finds no trouble in earning from fifty to seventy-five dollars per month. The colored people are anxious to learn, but have no suitable teachers, or next to none, comparatively.

It is the nature of those who from want of mental discipline are incapable of reasoning for themselves, to rely upon authority. Christ, Sumner, and Lincoln are the authoritative triad of the colored people generally.

The politicians and priests alike seek to delude these people, and inflame their passions; none seem willing to instruct them even in the rudimental branches. There is a strong prejudice here, mainly originating from the Catholics, against a compulsory education law; hence we have as yet failed to enact one.

There is a wide field in the South for the liberal-minded teacher which the Liberals of the North and elsewhere ought to improve.

Out of the 4,600,000 recently enfranchised slaves, very few have any education whatever. The elder ones can never expect to receive any moral or mental training farther than what can be acquired from the pulpit, the stump, or the rostrum of the public lecturer. Their natural preference is for teachers, preachers, and lecturers of their own color.

The antagonism manifested in the South between the two races springs mainly from the following causes:—

1. Labor has always been regarded as disreputable by the white people of the South, and now they are too poor to hire laborers, and too proud to be seen at work themselves.

2. Their priests have so long taught them to hate the Yankees, that in their absence they make the negro the scape-goat of their own idleness, as the visible cause of all their poverty and wretchedness.

3. The negro, in his growing appreciation of his manhood as a freeman, is led to assert his rights as a man under the law, which his former master will in no wise allow or tolerate; hence the negro labors for him indifferently,—is sullen and morose.

The first great duty of the public press, the politician, the lecturer, and the teacher toward the Southern people is to teach them that labor is honorable, and the quaint old adage of Franklin is true:—

> "He who by the plough would thrive, > Himself must either hold or drive."

Yours, J. M.

SCIENCE AND RELIGION.

CONCLUSION OF THE ADDRESS BY PROFESSOR TYNDALL BEFORE THE BRITISH ASSOCIATION FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE.

At the outset of this address it was stated that physical theories which lie beyond experience are derived, by a process of abstraction, from experience. It is instructive to note from this point of view the successive introduction of new conceptions. The idea of the attraction of gravitation was preceded by the observation of the attraction of iron by a magnet, and of light bodies by rubbed amber. The polarity of magnetism and electricity appealed to the senses, and thus became the substratum of the conception that atoms and molecules are endowed with definite, attractive, and repellant poles, by the play of which definite forms of crystalline architecture are produced. Thus molecular force becomes structural. It required no great boldness of thought to extend its play into organic nature, and to recognize in molecular force the agency by which both plants and animals are built up. In this way out of experience arise conceptions which are wholly ultra-experiential. The origination of life is a point lightly touched upon, if at all, by Mr. Darwin and Mr. Spencer. Diminishing gradually the number of progenitors, Mr. Darwin comes at length to one "primordial form;" but he does not say, as far as I remember, how he supposes this form to have been introduced. He quotes with satisfaction the words of a celebrated author and divine, who had "gradually learned to see that it is just as noble a conception of the Deity to believe he created a few original forms, capable of self-development into other and needful forms, as to believe that he required a fresh act of creation to supply the voids caused by the action of his laws." What Mr. Darwin thinks of this view of the introduction of life I do not know. Whether he does or does not introduce his "primordial form" by a creative act, I do not know. But the question will inevitably be asked, "How came the form there?" With regard to the diminution of the number of created forms, one does not see that much advantage is gained by it. The anthropomorphism, which it seemed the object of Mr. Darwin to set aside, is as firmly associated with the creation of a few forms as with the creation of a multitude. We need clearness and thoroughness here. Two courses, and two only, are possible. Either let us open our doors freely to the conception of creative acts, or, abandoning them, let us radically change our notions of matter. If we look at matter as pictured by Democritus, and as defined for generations in our scientific text-books, the absolute impossibility of any form of life coming out of it would be sufficient to render any other hypothesis preferable; but the definitions of matter given in our text-books were intended to cover its purely physical and mechanical properties. And, taught as we have been to regard these definitions as complete, we naturally and rightly reject the monstrous notion that out of such matter any form of life could possibly arise. But are the definitions complete? Everything depends on the answer to be given to this question. Trace the line of life backwards, and see it approaching more and more to what we call the purely physical condition. We reach at length those organisms which I have compared to drops of oil suspended in a mixture of alcohol and water. We reach the protogenes of Hæckel, in which we have "a type distinguishable from a fragment of albumen only by its finely granular character." Can we pause here? We break a magnet and find two poles in each of its fragments. We continue the process of breaking, but, however small the parts, each carries with it, though enfeebled, the polarity of the whole. And, when we can break no longer, we prolong the intellectual vision to the polar molecules. Are we not urged to do something similar in the case of life? Is there not a temptation to close to some extent with Lucretius, when he affirms that "Nature is seen to do all things spontaneously, without the meddling of the gods"? or with Bruno, when he declares that matter is not "that mere empty capacity which philosophers have pictured her to be, but the universal mother, who brings forth all things as the fruit of her own womb"?

The questions here raised are inevitable. They are approaching us with accelerated speed, and it is not a matter of indifference whether they are introduced with reverence or with irreverence. Abandoning all disguise, the confession that I feel bound to make before you is that I prolong the vision backward across the boundary of the experimental evidence, and discern in that matter, which we in our ignorance, and notwithstanding our professed reverence for its creator, have hitherto covered with opprobrium, the promise and potency of every form and quality of life. The "materialism" here enunciated may be different from what you suppose, and I therefore crave your gracious patience to the end. "The question of an external world," says Mr. J. S. Mill, "is the great battle-ground of metaphysics." Mr. Mill himself reduces external phenomena to possibilities of sensation. Kant, as we have seen, made time and space "forms" of our own constitutions. Fichte, having first, by the inexorable logic of his understanding, proved himself to be a mere link in that chain of eternal causation, which holds so rigidly in Nature, violently broke the chain by making Nature and all that it inherits an apparition of his own mind. And it is by no means easy to combat such notions. For when I say I see you, and that I have not the least doubt about it, the reply is that what I am really conscious of is an affection of my own retina. And if I urge that I can check my sight of you by touching you, the retort would be that I am equally transgressing the limits of fact; for what I am really conscious of is, not that you are there, but that the nerves of my hand have undergone a change. All we hear, and see, and touch, and taste, and smell are, it would be urged, mere variations of our own condition, beyond which, even to the extent of a hair's breadth, we cannot go. That anything answering to our impressions exists outside of ourselves is not a fact but an inference, to which all validity would be denied by an idealist like Berkeley, or by a sceptic like Hume. Mr. Spencer takes another line. With him, as with the uneducated man, there is no doubt or question as to the existence of an external world. But he differs from the uneducated, who thinks that the world really is what consciousness represents it to be.

Our states of consciousness are mere symbols of an outside entity which produces them and determines the order of their succession, but the real nature of which we can never know. In fact, the whole process of evolution is the manifestation of a power absolutely inscrutable to the intellect of man. As little in our day as in the days of Job can man by searching find this power out. Considered fundamentally, it is by the operation of an insoluble mystery that life is evolved, species differentiated, and mind unfolded from their prepotent elements in the immeasurable past. There is, you will observe, no very rank materialism here. The strength of the doctrine of evolution consists, not in an experimental demonstration (for the subject is hardly accessible to this mode of proof), but in its general harmony with the method of Nature as hitherto known. From contrast, moreover, it derives enormous relative strength. On the one side we have a theory (if it could with any propriety be so called) derived, as were the theories referred to at the beginning of this address, not from the study of Nature, but from the observation of men; a theory which converts the power whose garment is seen in the visible universe into an artificer, fashioned after the human model, and acting by broken efforts as man is seen to act. On the other side we have the conception that all we see around us, and all we feel within us—the phenomena of physical nature as well as those of the human mind—have their unsearchable roots in a cosmical life, if I dare apply the term, an infinitesimal span of which only is offered to the investigation of man. And even this span is only knowable in part. We can trace the development of a nervous system, and correlate with it the parallel phenomena of sensation and thought. We see with undoubting certainty that they go hand in hand.

But we try to soar in a vacuum the moment we seek to comprehend the connection between them. An Archimedean fulcrum is here required which the human mind cannot command, and the effort to solve the problem, to borrow an illustration from an illustrious friend of mine, is like the effort of a man trying to lift himself by his own waistband. All that has been here said is to be taken in connection with this fundamental truth. When "nascent senses" are spoken of, when "the differentiation of a tissue at first vaguely sensitive all over is spoken of," and when these processes are associated with the "modification of an organism by its environment," the same parallelism, without contact, or even approach to contact, is implied. There is no fusion possible between the two classes of facts; no motor energy in the intellect of man to carry it without logical rupture from the one to the other. Further, the doctrine of evolution derives man, in his totality, from the interaction of organism and environment through countless ages past. The human understanding, for example—that faculty which Mr. Spencer has turned so skilfully round upon its own antecedents,—is itself a result of the play between organism and environment through cosmic ranges of time. Never, surely, did prescription plead so irresistible a claim. But then it comes to pass that, over and above his understanding, there are many other things appertaining to man whose prescriptive rights are quite as strong as that of the understanding itself. It is a result, for example, of the play of organism and environment that sugar is sweet and that aloes are bitter; that the smell of henbane differs from the perfume of a rose. Such facts of consciousness (for which, by the way, no adequate reason has ever yet been rendered) are quite as old as the understanding itself; and many other things can boast an equally ancient origin.

Mr. Spencer at one place refers to that most powerful of passions, the amatory passion, as one which, when it first occurs, is antecedent to all relative experience whatever; and we may pass its claim as being at least as ancient and as valid as that of the understanding itself. Then there are such things woven into the texture of man as the feeling of awe, reverence, wonder—and not alone the sexual love just referred to, but the love of the beautiful, physical, and moral, in nature, poetry, and art. There is also that deep-set feeling which, since the earliest dawn of history, and probably for ages prior to all history, incorporated itself in the religions of the world. You who have escaped from these religions into the high and dry light of the understanding may deride them; but in so doing you deride accidents of form merely, and fail to touch the immovable basis of the religious sentiment in the emotional nature of man. To yield this sentiment reasonable satisfaction is the problem of problems at the present hour. And grotesque, in relation to scientific culture, as many of the religions of the world have been and are—dangerous, nay, destructive, to the dearest privileges of freemen as some of them undoubtedly have been, and would, if they could, be again,—it will be wise to recognize them as the forms of a force, mischievous, if permitted to intrude on the region of knowledge, over which it holds no command, but capable of being guided by liberal thought to noble issues in the region of emotion, which is its proper sphere. It is vain to oppose this force with a view to its extirpation. What we should oppose, to the death if necessary, is every attempt to found upon this elemental bias of man's nature a system which should exercise despotic sway over his intellect. I do not fear any such consummation. Science has already to some extent leavened the world, and it will leaven it more and more. I should look upon the mild light of science breaking in upon the minds of the youth of Ireland, and strengthening gradually to the perfect day, as a surer check to any intellectual or spiritual tyranny which might threaten this island than the laws of princes or the swords of emperors. Where is the cause of fear? We fought and won our battles even in the Middle Ages: why should we doubt the issue of a conflict now? The impregnable position of science may be described in a few words. All religious theories, schemes, and systems, which embrace notions of cosmogony, or which otherwise reach into its domain, must in so far as they do this submit to the control of science, and relinquish all thought of controlling it. Acting otherwise proved disastrous in the past, and it is simply fatuous to-day. Every system which would escape the fate of an organism too rigid to adjust itself to its environment must be plastic to the extent that the growth of knowledge demands.

When this truth has been thoroughly taken in, rigidity will be relaxed, exclusiveness diminished, things now deemed essential will be dropped, and elements now rejected will be assimilated. The lifting of the life is the essential point; and as long as dogmatism, fanaticism, and intolerance are kept out, various modes of leverage may be employed to raise life to a higher level. Science itself not unfrequently derives motive power from an ultra scientific source. Whewell speaks of enthusiasm of temper as a hindrance to science; but he means the enthusiasm of weak heads. There is a strong and resolute enthusiasm in which science finds an ally; and it is to the lowering of this fire rather than to a diminution of intellectual insight that the lessening productiveness of men of science in their mature years is to be ascribed. Mr. Buckle sought to detach intellectual achievement from moral source. He gravely erred; for without moral force to whip it into action, the achievements of the intellectual would be poor indeed. It has been said that science divorces itself from literature; the statement, like so many others, arises from lack of knowledge. A glance at the less technical writings of its leaders—of its Helmholtz, its Huxley, and its Du Bois-Reymond—would show what breadth of literary culture they command. Where among modern writers can you find their superiors in clearness and vigor of literary style? Science desires not isolation, but freely combines with every effort towards the bettering of man's estate. Single-handed, and supported not by outward sympathy but by inward force, it has built at least one great wing of the many-mansioned home which man in his totality demands. And if rough walls and protruding rafter-ends indicate that on one side the edifice is still incomplete, it is only by wise combination of the parts required with those already irrevocably built that we can hope for completeness. There is no necessary incongruity between what has been accomplished and what remains to be done. The moral glow of Socrates, which we all feel by ignition, has in it nothing incompatible with the physics of Anaxagoras which he so much scorned, but which he would hardly scorn to-day. And here I am reminded of one among us, hoary, but still strong, whose prophet-voice some thirty years ago, far more than any other of this age, unlocked whatever of life and nobleness lay latent in its most gifted minds—one fit to stand beside Socrates or the Maccabean Eleazer, and to dare and suffer all that they dared and suffered—fit, as he once said of Fichte, "to have been the teacher of the Stoa, and to have discoursed of beauty and virtue in the groves of 'Academe.'" With a capacity to grasp physical principles which his friend Goethe did not possess, and which even total lack of exercise has not been able to reduce to atrophy, it is the world's loss that he, in the vigor of his years, did not open his mind and sympathies to science, and make its conclusions a portion of his message to mankind. Marvellously endowed as he was—equally equipped on the side of the heart and of the understanding,—he might have done much towards teaching us how to reconcile the claims of both, and to enable them, in coming times, to dwell together in unity of spirit and in the bond of peace. And now the end is come. With more time, or greater strength and knowledge, what has been here said might have been better said, while worthy matters here omitted might have received fit expression. But there would have been no material deviation from the views set forth. As regards myself, they are not the growth of a day; and as regards you, I thought you ought to know the environment which, with or without your consent, is rapidly surrounding you, and in relation to which some adjustment on your part may be necessary. A hint of Hamlet's, however, teaches us all how the troubles of common life may be ended; and it is perfectly possible for you and me to purchase intellectual peace at the price of intellectual death. The world is not without refuges of this description, nor is it wanting in persons who seek their shelter and try to persuade others to do the same. I would exhort you to refuse such shelter, and to scorn such base repose—to accept, if the choice be forced upon you, commotion before stagnation, the leap of the torrent before the stillness of the swamp. In the one there is at all events life, and therefore hope; in the other none.

I have touched on debatable questions, and led you over dangerous ground—and this partly with the view of telling you, and through you the world, that as regards these questions science claims unrestricted right of search. It is not to the point to say that the views of Lucretius and Bruno, of Darwin and Spencer, may be wrong. I concede the possibility, deeming it indeed certain that these views will undergo modification. But the point is that, whether right or wrong, we claim the freedom to discuss them. The ground which they cover is scientific ground; and the right claimed is one made good through tribulation and anguish, inflicted and endured in darker times than ours, but resulting in the immortal victories which science has won for the human race. I would set forth equally the inexorable advance of man's understanding in the path of knowledge, and the unquenchable claims of his emotional nature which the understanding can never satisfy. The world embraces not only a Newton, but a Shakspeare; not only a Boyle, but a Raphael; not only a Kant, but a Beethoven; not only a Darwin, but a Carlyle. Not in each of these, but in all, is human nature whole. They are not opposed, but supplementary—not mutually exclusive, but reconcilable. And if, still unsatisfied, the human mind, with the yearning of a pilgrim for his distant home, will turn to the mystery from which it has emerged, seeking so to fashion it as to give unity to thought and faith,—so long as this is done, not only without intolerance or bigotry of any kind, but with the enlightened recognition that ultimate fixity of conception is here unattainable, and that each succeeding age must be held free to fashion the mystery in accordance with its own needs,—then, in opposition to all the restrictions of materialism, I would affirm this to be a field for the noblest exercise of what, in contrast with the knowing faculties, may be called the creative faculties of man. Here, however, I must quit a theme too great for me to handle, but which will be handled by the loftiest minds ages after you and I, like streaks of morning cloud, shall have melted into the infinite azure of the past.

THE RELIGIOUS CONDITION OF FRANCE.

The distinguished French divine, Dr. E. de Pressensé, contributes to the International Review for September a very interesting and instructive survey of the present religious condition of France. The chronic instability of French political institutions he explains by the general unwillingness to sacrifice preference to judgment; and by the fact that the contending parties are actuated by religious rather than political motives, clericalism (in the form of royalism having formed the project of reconquering France. Since the wild outbreak of the Revolution, the Ultramontane school has grown in importance every day. Liberal Catholicism was absolutely prostrated by the Council of 1870, with its affirmation of the dogma of Papal Infallibility. Henceforth the pulpit teaching of Ultramontanism is nothing more than a feverish exaltation of the Papacy. The miracles of Lourdes and La Salette coined money for the church treasury; and in the pilgrimages to these shrines the acclamation "Long live Henry V." has been blended with the cry "Long live the Pope and his temporal power." The Catholic party has domineered over public instruction, discarding the great system of compulsory education; it has clamored for great Ultramontane universities in order to create a breach in similar lay institutions; it seeks to usurp authority over the national army; and it inspires the Government with prejudices against universal religious liberty.

Antagonized to this oppressive Church influence is found a radical unbelief, which does not contend simply against religious observances, but against religion itself. The positivism of Comte, the materialism of Büchner, the pantheism of Rénan, with the school of English scepticism, have resulted in a marked intellectual movement tending to lead the minds of men far from the cause of Christianity, and from all that is spiritual. This tendency has been accelerated by the antipathy aroused by the extreme demands of Ultramontanism, and it is this, in the opinion of Dr. Pressensé, which constitutes the gravest side of the situation. From an absolute faith men have sunk to the depths of a fearful scepticism, or a materialism which neither acknowledges the soul nor God. This unbelief, instead of being confined to the cultured and scholarly circles of society, has pervaded the laboring classes, inspiring them with a furious hatred for everything which suggests religion.

Between these two extremes, of absolute devotion to the Papacy on the one hand, and a revulsion into unbelief on the other, there exists an important body of the people which takes little regard of the changes which have come over Catholicism, and still looks to it for spiritual comfort and guidance. The situation is, nevertheless, a grave one, in Dr. Pressensé's opinion, and there is a great falling off in the influence exercised by Christianity, evidenced in the domains of literature and art as well as public morals.

Concerning French Protestantism, Dr. Pressensé chooses to say but little in the present article, deeming it worthy an article by itself, which we hope he will give us soon. This Reformed Church is split into two factions, one clinging to the old faith, and the other drifting into rationalism. The Orthodox section is in the ascendant, and the Government conceded its right to convene a Synod, at which a profession of Christian faith was adopted. In spite of these divisions, Evangelical Protestantism has accomplished a great deal of work, and has won some valuable victories over Catholicism. Notwithstanding all that is discouraging in the moral and religious aspects of France, Dr. Pressensé indulges the hope that something better is in store for her; and he closes his article with these words:—

"We dare to hope that she will turn at last to that which alone can say to society in general, as well as to each individual, Ascend! France retains all her material and intellectual vitality. The day upon which she accepts the gospel of liberty she will discover the secret of her regeneration, which she has sought for in vain until now in a religion without liberty, and in a philosophy without God."

It is gratifying if even this much of hope can be gathered from the present situation of affairs in France. Founded upon such various and so bitterly hostile religious opinions, it is not strange that little but political chaos should come out of the efforts of the French people at self-government. All well-wishers of the Republic must join in Dr. Pressensé's prayer for fuller religious liberty and a more settled religious belief. With these there must come a better condition of public morals, and an end of the apparently ceaseless social and political agitation which distract the popular mind and heart.—Boston Journal.

REPRODUCTIONS OF ORGANS IN FISH.—Darwin's statement regarding the new growth of pectoral and tail-fins of various fresh-water fish has been proven in the aquarium of the Boston Young Men's Christian Union. The discovery was made by Prof. F. W. Clarke, who communicated the fact to the American Naturalist. It appears that in the spring of 1873 a fish-fungus made its appearance in the tank, and several fine fishes died. Among the specimens attacked by the fungus was a young gold-fish, which, by some unknown means, had lost its tail-fin. The fungus covered the whole stump of the tail; the fish became sick, and was apparently dying. Mr. Clarke's attention having been called to the case, he at once concluded that he had some parasite to deal with, and resolved to exterminate it. He applied a few drops of nitric acid to the tail-stump, allowing it to remain a moment or two, and put the fish back in the tank. The parasite, of course, was killed; the patches of fungus sloughed off, and the fish was soon well. In the course of a few days he thought he saw the fungus again appearing on the affected part; but, on looking closely, found that the appearance was really due to the growth of new rays. A month later, a new tail-fin, about a fourth of an inch long, had appeared, and three months from the time of the experiment the fish was undistinguishable from others of the same species in the aquarium.—Commonwealth.

ENGLAND'S DEBT AND WEALTH.—The whole national debt of Great Britain, amounting to $3,700,000,000, and all British municipal debts, estimated at $500,000,000, are held by English capitalists. Bonds of other nations, including those of political and municipal subdivisions of other countries, are owned in England to an estimated amount fully equal to the total British debt. The debts of all kinds due to the capitalists of Great Britain by the nations of the East yield, it is stated, $500,000,000 per annum, indicating, at a general average of from six to seven per cent. for interest, a principal of $8,000,000,000.

Poetry.

[For THE INDEX.]

A PRISONER.

A captive bird with broken wing,
I strive to soar, I strive to sing;
Unheard my feeble warblings die,
Repeating oft one eager cry:
"Better one hour of liberty
Than ages of captivity!"

I watch the flight of upward wings;
From azure heights the rapture rings
Through morning's sunny hours, while I,
Imprisoned, only gaze and sigh,
And beat my bars and watch and wait,
Unhoping freedom soon or late.

I mind me of those earlier days
When life was filled with tuneful lays;
The shady wildwood's green retreat,
Where just to be alive was sweet;
While fair the future stretched serene,
Lost in a haze of heavenly sheen.

When this brief life is overpast,
A heap of ashes at the last,
Shall I return to mother earth,
And never know another birth?
What matter whether free or chained,
If naught beyond this life be gained?

Nay! I am sure that God doth keep,
Beyond Death's pale, mysterious sleep,
Some recompense for such as I;
He will not mock me with a lie!
He gave my soul's unquenched desire
For something nobler, purer, higher.

And fairer regions now unknown
Will be my spirit's final home,
While each high longing here repressed
Will find its utmost aim expressed:
A life of endless growth will be
The sweetest joy of being free!

GRACE MORVEN.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING SEPTEMBER 12.

G. H. Foster, 45 cents; W. Willicutt, 40 cents; H. D. Lyman, 75 cents; A. Williams & Co., 68 cents; F. A. Angell, 35 cents; A. J. Davis & Co., $1.35; Mrs. Davis, 42 cents; C. W. Storey, $3; Charles I. Church, $3; R. M. Whipple, $6; B. C. Magie, 75 cents; Lewis G. Janes, $4; Austin Ross, $2; John Hardy, $3; W. S. George, $3; S. P. Putnam, $3; T. J. Crouse, $3; M. E. Martin, $4; H. B. Buck, $2; J. F. Adams, $5; A. Klebe, $3; T. H. Evarts, $3.25; John S. Baldwin, $2; J. F. Trazer, $2; Sarah J. Derby, $3; J. H. Mason, $3; Marshall Pierce, $1.50; M. H. Isbell, $1.50; Judson A. Gager, $1.50; D. R. Lamson, $1; C. Hazeltine, $1; J. P. Smith, $3; H. L. Hall, $1.50; S. S. Hunting, $3; James Dillaway, $3; Henry J. Hathaway, $2; Elizabeth N. Copeland, $1; Henry Deering, $2; John L. Butin, $1; G. G. Briggs, $5; C. N. Harlow, $2; A. Van Brakle, $5; E. S. Cross, $5; D. E. de Lara, $3; Henry C. Finney, $2; Julia E. Miller, $3; E. Levezey, $1; G. H. Stockman, $6.50; E. A. Willats, 75 cents; A. d'Erlach, 75 cents; S. H. Holmes, 75 cents; G. Shields, 75 cents; W. B. Pennington, 50 cents; S. R. Honey, 75 cents; Frank J. Mead, $4.10; Wm. Barker, $1; Benj. S. Brice, 75 cents; A. K. Loring, 24 cents; S. Barnard, 35 cents.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—Postage on THE INDEX is five cents per quarter, dating from receipt of the first number, payable in advance at the place of delivery.

N. B.—When writing about a former remittance, always give the date of such remittance as exactly as possible.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

RECEIVED.

Pamphlets and Periodicals.

PLATO, PHILO, AND PAUL: or, The Pagan Conception of a "Divine Logos" shewn to have been the Basis of the Christian Dogma of the Deity of Christ. By Rev. J. W. Lake. London: Thomas Scott. [Price, one shilling. pp. 76.]

HALF-HOUR RECREATIONS IN POPULAR SCIENCE. No. 12. The Circulation of the Waters on the Surface of the Earth. By H. W. Dove. What is Actinism? Boston: Estes & Lauriat.

THE GENESIS AND ETHICS OF CONJUGAL LOVE. By Andrew Jackson Davis. New York: A. J. Davis & Co. Boston: Colby & Rich. 1874.

NO LEGISLATING FOR TEMPERANCE.—WOMAN'S WAR UPON THE DRAMSHOPS.—THE BIBLE FOR "TOTAL ABSTINENCE." —Three Letters by Hon. Gerrit Smith, Peterboro, N. Y.

THE WORTH OF HEREAFTER: The Sermon before the National Conference of Unitarian and Other Christian Churches at Saratoga, Sept. 15, 1874. By Robert Collyer.

PROTECTION OF ANIMALS. By George T. Angell, President of the Mass. Soc'y for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. Boston: Am. Soc. Science Asso. 1874.

EVILS OF THE DAY AND THEIR REMEDY.—THE TREE IS KNOWN BY ITS FRUITS.—CONSCIENCE.—By Samuel Keese, Great Neck, Long Island.

COMIC TRANSLATION OF THE FIRST AND FOURTH BOOKS OF THE ÆNEID. Winsted, Conn.: Winsted Herald Office. [Price, 25 cents: good.]

JOURNAL OF SPECULATIVE PHILOSOPHY. July, 1874. St. Louis: Gray, Baker & Co.

UNITARIAN REVIEW AND RELIGIOUS MAGAZINE. September, 1874. Boston: L. C. Bowles.

BRITTAN'S JOURNAL OF SPIRITUAL SCIENCE. July, 1874. New York: Standard Spiritual Library Association.

OLD AND NEW. October, 1874. Boston: Roberts Brothers.

HERALD OF HEALTH. September, 1874. New York: Wood & Holbrook.

SANITARIAN. September, 1874. New York: 234 Broadway.

MEDICAL MIRROR. September, 1874. New York: A. K. Butts & Co.

The Index.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY
BY
THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,
AT
NO. 1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.
Toledo Office: No. 35 Monroe Street. Julius T. Frey, Agent and Clerk.

Francis Ellingwood Abbot, ... Editor.
Abram Walter Stevens, ... Associate Editor.
Octavius Brooks Frothingham, Thomas Wentworth Higginson, William J. Potter, Richard P. Hallowell, William H. Spencer, Mrs. E. D. Cheney, Rev. Charles Voysey (England), Prof. Francis W. Newman (England), Editorial Contributors.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

BOSTON, SEPTEMBER 17, 1874.

Part of Professor Tyndall's address is republished on another page. If we had not begun to reprint the three addresses on Christianity, just before securing a complete copy of it, we should have reproduced it in full. What we now republish is enough to accompany our editorial comments without injustice to the distinguished Professor.

TYNDALL'S ADDRESS.

The address of Professor Tyndall before the British Association at Belfast, on August 19, is attracting a degree of attention which shows afresh the wide and deep interest taken in seemingly abstract speculation. It is marked by the usual lucidity and elegance of his style, and also by a somewhat baffling vagueness of thought on the fundamental problems he discusses. Professor Tyndall ranks very high among the students, promoters, and expositors of science, and has won a world-wide reputation by the charms of his literary culture and the exquisite beauty of his spirit; but those who look to him for a permanent enlargement or advancement of the philosophy of science will scarcely be helped by his present address. Some criticisms and reflections suggested by it will not be out of place here, though it will not be possible to go into a detailed discussion of the points involved.

Apparently Professor Tyndall makes a "new departure" in the direction of "materialism," or at least is supposed quite generally to do so. "Abandoning all disguise," as he expresses himself, he now "feels bound" to "make a confession" that he discerns in matter the "promise and potency of every form and quality of life." But it is difficult to see what disguise he has abandoned. He had already said as much, and quite as explicitly, before. In his address on "The Scope and Limit of Scientific Materialism," delivered before the mathematical and physical section of the British Association at Norwich, August 10, 1868, he said: "You see I am not mincing matters, but avowing nakedly what many scientific thinkers more or less distinctly believe. The formation of a crystal, a plant, or an animal, is in their eyes a purely mechanical problem, which differs from the problems of ordinary mechanics in the smallness of the masses and the complexity of the processes involved." In this same address, however, he also says: "In affirming that the growth of the body is mechanical, and that thought, as exercised by us, has its correlative in the physics of the brain, I think the position of the 'materialist' is stated, so far as that position is a tenable one. I think the materialist will be able finally to maintain this position against all attacks; but I do not think, in the present condition of the human mind, that he can pass beyond this position. I do not think he is entitled to say that his molecular groupings and his molecular motions explain everything. In reality they explain nothing. The utmost he can affirm is the association of two classes of phenomena, of whose real bond of union he is in absolute ignorance. The problem of the connection of body and soul is as insoluble in its modern form as it was in the pre-scientific ages. . . . On both sides of the zone here assigned to the materialist, he is equally helpless. If you ask him whence is this 'matter' of which we have been discoursing, who or what divided it into molecules, who or what impressed upon them this necessity of running into organic forms, he has no answer. . . . Let us lower our heads, and acknowledge our ignorance, priest and philosopher, one and all."

We cannot see that Professor Tyndall has said any more than this in his recent address. He now says: "Molecular force becomes structural. It required no great boldness of thought to extend its play into organic nature, and to recognize in molecular force the agency by which both plants and animals are built up." But he also says still, as emphatically as before: "We can trace the development of a nervous system, and correlate with it the parallel phenomena of sensation and thought. We see with undoubting certainty that they go hand in hand. But we try to soar in a vacuum the moment we seek to comprehend the connection between them. . . . The same parallelism, without contact, or even approach to contact, is implied. There is no fusion possible between the two classes of facts [physical and psychical]—no motor energy in the intellect of man to carry it without logical rupture from the one to the other."

In both these addresses, therefore, the one delivered in 1868 and the other in 1874, Professor Tyndall advances substantially the same propositions; namely, that physics alone will account for the brain and all its motions,—that brain-motions are correlative with all thought-processes,—but that neither class of phenomena will explain the other. To him who would take advantage of his admissions to infer that "matter" can be taken as "explaining everything," Professor Tyndall replies by urging the arguments of idealism,—"and it is by no means easy to combat such notions." He seems to admit that he himself is unable to combat them, when he says: "The 'materialism' here enunciated may be different from what you suppose, and I therefore crave your gracious patience to the end;" and when, after stating the idealist's position as represented by various thinkers, he winds up with these words: "Considered fundamentally, it is by the operation of an insoluble mystery that life is evolved, species differentiated, and mind unfolded from their prepotent elements in the immeasurable past. There is, you will observe, no very rank materialism here."

In fact, neither of these two addresses, if carefully analyzed, will be found to state anything more pronounced in the direction of materialism than is contained in an article of our own published in the Christian Examiner for March, 1866,—more than two years before the earlier address of Professor Tyndall was delivered. We shall be pardoned for quoting from this paper a few sentences here, though it was republished in The Index for July 20 and 27, 1872. It will be seen that Professor Tyndall takes the identical position on this subject which we then took with equal precision and explicitness: "Two synchronous series of phenomena take place in the life of every human being, the one physical, the other mental. Admitting that all changes in the physical organism are changes of position among its component atoms, according to a certain order, it does not follow that all changes in the formation of intellectual and moral character are also re-arrangement of atoms; these are changes quite as real as the former, yet only rash and presumptuous hypothesis will pronounce them to be mere atomic re-distributions. The connection between these two orders of phenomena may be as close as you please, and it is undoubtedly very close; yet the want of parallelism between them is too great to suffer a true Positivism, at least in the present state of science, to fuse the two, or regard one as the efficient cause of the other. . . . Positivism, which is simply science true to herself, finds two radically distinct orders of phenomena presented to her observation and study,—the one material, the other mental; and, in her present stage of development, she can neither reduce one to the other, nor yet trace their ontological connection. Any hypothesis as to their ontological dualism or monism is at present premature, or at best can serve only as a convenient supposition which may turn out either a reality or a fiction. The philosophic instinct favors, perhaps, the theory of monism; but, until this instinct shall be either inductively or deductively justified by verification, the question between monism and dualism must remain an open one. All fanciful guesses, however plausible, must be rigorously shut out from the sphere of science, and never elevated to the rank of positive results. . . . If physical science sneeringly objects that mental science proceeds on a sheer assumption of mind, the retort is cogent and crushing that physical science proceeds on the sheer assumption of matter. Who ever yet demonstrated the existence of either? Something must be given, as a basis, as the condition of all science, whether physical or mental; and the problem of the connection between these two bases, if it cannot be positively solved, may be indefinitely postponed. But this is clear, that, starting from matter alone, science can never arrive at mind; and, starting from mind alone, can never arrive at matter."

Nothing can be more clear, on close analysis, than that Professor Tyndall has not adopted "materialism" in the sense that "matter explains everything," or in the sense that it explains the "phenomena of sensation and thought." We repeat, then, comparing his two addresses, that we do not see what "disguise" he has "abandoned." Even the special form of "scientific materialism," which he has openly professed at least since 1868, seems to introduce elements into the conception of matter which make the term "materialism" far less descriptive of his philosophy than the term monism, which denotes the inherence of all phenomenal qualities in one sole substance. Referring to the reticence of Darwin and Spencer as to the origination of life, he says: "We need clearness and thoroughness here. Two courses, and two only, are possible. Either let us open our doors freely to the conception of creative acts, or, abandoning them, let us radically change our notions of matter." This is what he does. He idealizes matter, so to speak, by discarding the old Democritean conception of atoms for a conception which endows them with inherent polar forces, and reduces the "activity of each animal" to the "transferred activities of its molecules." (By the way, why does Professor Tyndall, in his account of the atomistic philosophy, mention Democritus and Empedocles, but pass over Leucippus and Anaxagoras,—the latter of whom was forty years older than Democritus, and whose doctrine of homoiomerē, or semina rerum, undoubtedly suggested to Democritus the atomic theory itself?) But it is precisely here that the difficulty of materialism in all its forms centres. So long as all motion is communicated from without, the laws of mechanics can be conceived as applying equally to molar and molecular motions; but how can they be conceived as applying to motions originating from within? For instance, the polarity of the whole magnet, according to Professor Tyndall, is the sum of the polarities of its molecules; all polarity must be traced ultimately to the molecule itself. That is, each molecule spontaneously manifests a polar force not referable to any outside cause, while this polar force acts as an outside cause upon all other molecules. The fundamental conceptions of physics break down here; they cannot explain why the opposite poles of the molecule should manifest opposite attractions, or indeed any attraction at all. When Professor Tyndall comes to ponder more profoundly the enormous difficulty here indicated, we suspect that he will be driven to make a still more "radical change" in his "notions of matter." In fact, whether the notion of matter itself must not absolutely melt into that of force, is the next question; and how much even of "scientific materialism" will remain when that question is answered, is another question of absorbing philosophical interest. It will, we believe, be found that the present materialistic conception of substantial atoms permanently endowed with inherent forces or qualities must dissolve, under the influence of the new doctrine of the Conservation of Energy, into that of pure forces manifesting themselves under fixed conditions of extension in space and of permanence in time; and this atomo-dynamical conception, as it might be termed, is the reverse of materialistic in the ordinary meaning of the word. The analogies it suggests are more in harmony with the ordinary notion of "spirit" than with the ordinary notion of "matter," though neither of these words has, it is true, any strictly defined signification in popular use. Moreover, the assumption of an independent existence in the old atoms, which reduces the universe to a multiplicity insoluble in any real unity, must in some way give place to a philosophy which shall preserve equally the many and the one in its treatment of matter; and this, too, is a result of the atomo-dynamical theory. When the essential idea of matter has been thus fundamentally revolutionized, it is of little consequence whether matter or spirit is selected as the most fitting name for the one reality underlying all things. The distinctness of the two orders of phenomena, physical and psychical, will be preserved, without postulating two substances absolutely irreducible one to the other, while at least a path leading to their ultimate reduction will have been opened. Professor Tyndall has not carried his thought to the consideration of these root-problems, and leaves his subject, therefore, shrouded in no little obscurity. His arbitrary and unsatisfactory stoppage in "mystery" is not a procedure likely to prove universally imitable; while his admission of two ultimate orders of phenomena, coupled with his statement that "no fusion is possible" between them, however closely "correlated" they may be, is likely to act only as a powerful provocative of further speculation. A new philosophy is demanded by the present state of science, as the absolute condition of its advance beyond the bog in which it seems just now stuck fast; and sooner or later it will be developed.

Following Herbert Spencer with a fidelity to which that philosopher is by no means entitled, although his merits in many respects are indubitably great, Professor Tyndall settles down into the recognition of an "insoluble mystery" as the last word of modern science. "In fact, the whole process of evolution," he says, in an exposition of Spencer's thought which he apparently gives as also his own, "is the manifestation of a Power absolutely inscrutable to the intellect of man." Are we, then, shut down to the submissive acknowledgment that evolution is the manifestation of a Power which does not manifest itself? If so, science is degraded to the rank of the theological cosmogonies which Professor Tyndall so energetically repudiates, and the human intellect is driven to the hara-kiri of a new sacred contradiction, which it must accept by a new species of "faith." For one, we repudiate such science as we repudiate the theology of which it is the bastard offspring. Science that deserves the name will refuse to admit the existence of any "insoluble mystery." She must, by the very law of her being, assume that every mystery is soluble, and forthwith proceed to solve it. She recognizes the co-existence of the known and the unknown, and admits that the latter is probably vaster, nay, inconceivably vaster, than the former,—an admission she justifies solely on the ground of her own past experience; but she cannot possibly recognize the existence of the "unknowable," since even to affirm it would be to affirm some knowledge of it. The "Power" which manifests itself in "the whole process of evolution" manifests itself, does it not? It cannot, then, be "inscrutable to the intellect of man." The business of science is to study the manifestation of it, and not to cut her own throat by the confession that the "manifestation" of anything under heaven is "inscrutable" to her. The unutterable shallowness of this Spencerian philosophy of "the unknowable," now so fashionable, is the intellectual disgrace of the century. It makes a quasi-God out of "the unknowable" by printing its name with a big U as "the Unknowable;" it sets aside "theism, pantheism, and atheism" as equally untenable, notwithstanding the fact that, by the law of contradiction, either theism or atheism must be true (pantheism being merely one form of theism); and so it contrives to cheat its deluded followers into believing that philosophy sits between yes and no on the little end of nothing whittled down to a point. It is enough to make every thinker blush with shame to see philosophy so villainously impaled. Most certainly the humiliating spectacle will be a brief one. Compared with this farce of a philosophy, straight-out atheism is infinitely respectable. The issue raised by modern scientific reflection is a serious and honest one; does God exist or not? The answer must be as honest as the question: yes or no. Science herself must give the answer, for science herself propounds the question; and, as our readers already understand, we believe her answer will be yes. That is the true state of the case; and we are sorry to see Professor Tyndall helping to confuse the public mind still further by reiterating Herbert Spencer's meaningless jargon on the subject. There is no religion in ignorance; but there is religion in a knowledge that seeks to lessen its own ignorance. There is no religion in mystification, or in the apotheosis of "insoluble mystery;" but there is religion in the modest recognition of a mystery which we are here to solve, and thereby to convert into known and nutritious truth. That we shall solve it all, least of all in our own day, is not to be expected; but to give up the attempt to solve it on the plea that it is insoluble, is to bury our talent in the earth because we know that we have a hard master.

For one, we refuse to juggle, or be juggled with, by this empty gibberish of "the unknowable" or "the inscrutable." The "Power" which confessedly manifests itself in the process of evolution is not only to be studied but known in and through its manifestations or effects; that is, in and through the grand order of Nature, the adaptation of part to part in the organic and limitless whole, the eternal series of sequences according to law by which it has been developed. Admitting that but an "infinitesimal span" of the wondrous "cosmical life" is as yet known to us, science has already taught us to seek its explanation in one omnipresent cause. If we consider this one cause to be matter, even in Professor Tyndall's enlarged use of the word, we are defeated in the search for real unity, which is excluded by his illimitable multitude of self-subsistent molecules; we can find it only in such a philosophy of atoms as shall show them to be indeed "manifestations" of a unitary energy or "Power." That is, the way out of Tyndall's imperfect materialism is clear through it into a philosophy which may be called materialistic or spiritualistic as you please, yet which shall recognize the infinite "cosmical life" as embracing our little human life, not as an alien thing, but as part and parcel of itself. What we require is a more radical treatment of science itself, sure that such a treatment will leave abundant room for every sentiment that now ennobles man, without imposing on him the dire necessity of pouring contempt upon his own "understanding," or of narrowing religion down to a mere emotion or feeling, as Professor Tyndall does. We plead for a religion that shall not be at swords' points with thought, but shall thrive in and through thought; as Tyndall refuses to divorce science from literature, we too refuse to recognize the divorce which he himself would make between science and religion; and we thus do only what he gently rebukes Carlyle for not doing—"open his mind and sympathies to science, and make its conclusions a portion of his message to mankind." We too have a "message," none the less true that we cannot clothe it with the garb of beauty and eloquence with which Carlyle has sent forth his message radiant to the world. It is that Religion is the free effort of man to expand, elevate, enlarge, beautify,—in one word, perfect—his own nature in all its aspects, not by any means neglecting his nobler part, his intellect and reason; and that this effort of his to realize his own ideal by a natural process of free development is the mirroring in his little career of Nature's own religion—her own endless striving to realize an unattained better for which there is no name but Evolution.

VIRTUOUS IN SPOTS.

What is it to be virtuous? It is well for us to find out, if we can; because this is the demand which is made upon us by society, and is, moreover, the aim of every thoughtful, earnest man and woman.

Society, I say, demands of us that we be virtuous. The basis of this demand is utility. Society could not exist unless its members were virtuous. Good order, quiet, security for the rights of the individual and the rights of all, could not be maintained unless virtue abided in the character and conduct of each man and woman.

But society not only demands that we be virtuous; it goes farther and prescribes to us a standard of virtue. To a limited extent, this also is necessary and right. We cannot live together in peace except we observe certain general rules and regulations, which no one in particular makes, but which all make, and which each and all agree to live by and maintain. There is a true science of society; and this true science is a general knowledge of, and a general consent to, certain laws and principles which must govern social living.

But society must be very wise in prescribing a rule of conduct to its members. It must not go too far in taking responsibility from the individual. It is individual virtue that is the great desideratum; for, unless we have virtuous individuals, we cannot have a virtuous society. Personal character is, after all, the finest fruit which can be grown in a true society. We demur to the notion that the species is of more consequence than the individual. The species is nowhere without the individual, who is at once its root and its branches. Society, therefore, must encourage the individual to find out for himself what virtue is; and, having found out, to practise it in his own way so far as he can without interfering with anybody else. More or less of experimentation is required even to find out what it is to be virtuous. Let the individual experiment as well as society. The risk is largely his; the responsibility should be, also. Society shall stand by while the individual thus learns from experience; and interference on its part shall be only for self-protection. Public sentiment should be a means of education rather than of coercion,—a warning, an illustration, an encouragement, a counsel, a help; for this public sentiment is really only general wisdom accumulated by individual experience. It is sometimes right, and sometimes wrong. It is never wholly right; and, probably, it is never wholly wrong. But history abounds with clear cases where the individual has known, not only what was best for himself, but what was best for society, much better than society itself has. "One with God is a majority,"—as to wisdom this has been proven true again and again.

But both the individual and society, at the best, learn slowly. There is plenty of conceit and vanity, and foolishness and perversity, and ignorance and stubbornness on both sides. While we are learning what virtue is, in all its broadness and thoroughness, we in the meanwhile are contenting ourselves with being virtuous in spots. One man does not drink intoxicating liquors, and he calls that being temperate. But no person, except he be a "temperance" fanatic, is satisfied with this definition of temperance. The "temperance" of some men is more intemperate than the "intemperance" of some other men. To be truly temperate means a great deal more than to be either moderate or abstinent as to spirituous liquors. The glutton, or the coarse feeder, is not temperate, even though he uses neither wine nor beer nor cider. Cicero, the pagan, had a better notion of temperance than prevails among some of our Christian, and even radical, temperance men. "Temperance," says Cicero, "is that which, either in things to be desired or to be shunned, teaches that reason should be followed." And Plato says: "Temperance consists in not being carried away by the passions, but in holding them in contempt, and keeping them in subjection."

There are other persons, again, who, in addition to eschewing all intoxicating drinks, never smoke or use tobacco in any form, and never swear; and these consider themselves free from all "bad habits" and "small vices." Yet sometimes these same persons are jealous, suspicious, irritable, selfish, and mean. Is it not as bad to "feel swear" and "think swear," as to say "swear words"? When a boy, we once worked for an Orthodox deacon. He never swore at us; he never set us the "bad example" of drinking, smoking, or chewing. But he often made our days miserable by his cross, ugly, and tyrannical disposition.

Some men, because they are the husband of one wife only, esteem themselves, and are esteemed, pure and chaste. We have no doubt that monogamy is the highest state in which man can live, and that one can experience the most complete purity and chastity in such a relation. But we are not so sure that all who live in that relation at present are thoroughly pure and chaste. In order to have every doubt cleared from our mind that any given man who is the husband of only one wife is pure and chaste even under such circumstances, we should want not only his testimony but the testimony of his "one wife." Legal marriage alone does not confer purity and chastity upon the sexual relation. For these we must look deeper than law. We must look into those chivalrous instincts of manly character that make a man bow before the shrine of womanhood wedded or unwedded, and hold him back from the least headstrong thought or wish or gesture which might impair woman's self-respect, or trench upon her sacred prerogative.

To be virtuous is to be self-controlled in all respects and in all directions. To be virtuous is to obey the law of right reason in all things. To be virtuous is to be self-poised and equable,—free and spontaneous, yet steady and firm. Virtue resides not in any one part or function of the body, but in personal character; in the whole animus of the man or woman. It is to be determined, not so much by what one thinks or says or does at a given time, but by the general tone, tendency, atmosphere, and influence of one's personality. Virtue is something essential, not something external. It is not some thing, but something.

Virtue is strength. And yet it is not more strength than it is beauty. "Beauty of holiness," says the Scripture. Yes; and beauty of virtue, too. Some "sinners" are more agreeable than some "saints." "Mother," said the daughter of a distinguished Methodist layman in this State,—"Mother, somehow I like the unconverted young men better than I do those who have experienced religion!" The poor girl could not help it. And why should she? We love what is lovable; and if virtue is austere and cast-iron, or warped and fanatical, or conceited and supercilious, we shall not love it even though we feel we ought to. The thoroughly virtuous person possesses a certain dignity, gentleness, grace, and suavity of character which puts us in love with him or her as irresistibly as with stars and flowers, and beautiful youth and winsome children.

A. W. S.

THE QUAKER CONTROVERSY.

When Dr. Clarke invited Augustine Jones to read a lecture from his pulpit on Quakerism and its relation to the Universal Church, he performed a service to the Quaker society little anticipated by him. The lecture delivered by Mr. Jones, since published in pamphlet form, has given rise to a controversy in th branch of the society of which he is a member which, if it does not ultimately result in a schism, will at least lead to a material modification of opinions hitherto unquestioned. Mr. Jones' discourse purports to portray "The Principles, Methods, and History of the Society of Friends;" the writer has apparently endeavored to give such an account of Quakerism as he finds in the Quaker literature of which he has knowledge. His reading has led him to affirm that the "Inward Light" is the "fundamental doctrine of the society." This statement, so far from being accepted, is repudiated by many of his fellow-members, and is regarded as a heresy to be shunned and denounced.

The most important review of Mr. Jones which has come to our notice is written by Thomas Kimber, of Philadelphia, and is entitled "Early Quakerism Scriptural Christianity." The pedantry and partisanship which mark this production are in strong contrast to the genial and catholic tone of Mr. Jones' pamphlet. By dexterous quotations from the writings of Fox and other early Quakers to sustain his argument, Mr. Kimber attempts to obliterate the essential difference between Quakerism and the many Christian sects so prominent in the time of Fox. These sects, almost without exception, regarded the Bible, not simply as a divine revelation, but as the only revelation from God to man. Fox took issue with them on this point; he proclaimed the all-sufficiency of the Divine Light in the soul of man; this was his "one ideal;" he did not reject the Bible, but made it secondary and subordinate; the book was a sealed book until this Light revealed its meaning to him. In his journal he says: "The Lord opened to me by his invisible power how that every man was enlightened by the divine Light of Christ. This I saw in the pure openings of the Light without the help of any man; neither did I then know where to find it in the Scriptures, though afterwards, searching the Scriptures, I found it." On the same page he says: "They (the Scriptures) will not give a knowledge of Christ." "The letter is carnal and killeth." Robert Barclay speaks of some Friends "who could not read, ... and, being pressed by their adversaries with some citations out of the English translation, and finding them to disagree with the manifestation of the truth in their hearts, have boldly affirmed, 'The spirit of God never said so,' which, when on this account I seriously examined, I really found to be errors and corruptions of the translation." To quote Barclay again: "The letter of Scripture is outward; of itself a dead thing—a mere declaration of good things, but not the thing itself." It seems to us impossible to rise from the study of Fox's Journal, Barclay's Apology, and other Quaker authorities, with warrant for any other statement of the cardinal principle of Quakerism than the one made by Mr. Jones.

Had our friend been as faithful in his study of the history of the society in its later days as he has been careful in his examination of its earlier career, he would have discovered that the controversy now launched by him, so far from being new, is the same as that which has already divided the Quakers in this country into two distinct organizations. Mr. Jones puts the number of yearly meetings in the world at thirteen, utterly ignoring the meetings of the Hicksite branch of the society. He seems to be refreshingly innocent of all knowledge of the separation that took place in this country in 1827, and of the existence of a large and influential body whose claim to the Quaker title is at least as good as that of the organization of which he is a member. About the year mentioned, a strong tendency was manifested by a large number of Friends to forsake the doctrine of the Inward Light for the "Scriptural Christianity" now advocated by Orthodox Friends. Elias Hicks, the most prominent preacher of that day, headed the opposition to this apostasy. Bitter controversy ensued, which resulted in the schism to which we allude. Numerically, the two branches were of nearly equal strength; what we may term the aristocracy of the society, however, having official control, disowned Hicks and those who sympathized with him.

While acquitting Mr. Jones of all intention of making a partisan statement, we cannot forbear to express astonishment at the possibility of any one's attempting to write a "history" of Friends without so much as knowing of, or at least recognizing, a branch of the society in this country which numbers its members by thousands, and has for its most distinguished exponent the venerable Lucretia Mott. In view of this serious defect in Mr. Jones' essay, we are almost compelled to believe that Dr. Clarke was not especially fortunate in his selection of a Quaker representative. This criticism seems the more necessary because the policy of Orthodox Friends since the separation has been to repudiate what they call Hicksism as heresy, their test of Quakerism involving, as is emphatically shown by Mr. Kimber, a confession of faith in the creed of the evangelical churches.

So far from preaching heresy, Elias Hicks simply insisted upon referring to the Inward Light as the great corner-stone of the Quaker faith. Many conflicting doctrinal opinions were held by the early Quakers. From Fox, Barclay, and others, Hicks learned that agreement in doctrine is not essential to true Quakerism. He accorded to each member the right to hold and to interpret doctrines as they were revealed by the Light within. R. P. H.

Communications.

"WHAT IS ATHEISM?"

The communication entitled "What is Atheism?" in THE INDEX of July 30, treats of a subject that must become one of growing interest. But I have found the answers there given to the question strangely unsatisfactory. There is an effort to explain away atheism into nothingness in order to prove that we are not atheists—indeed, that no one is an atheist. Let us not throw aside old ideas till we have found new ones that are better. But this communication from W.F.P., of New Orleans, savors of the struggles of conservative Unitarianism to prove to its Evangelical brethren that it is Christian. By usage or by natural development, words may grow to have a character and signification quite other than the original; but the effort to force upon a word a meaning different from its first and still largely accredited one is up-hill work, and seems not quite an honest use of our intellectual faculties. Our ideas have changed. Then why try to retain an old name, and silence a conscience that rebels at falsehood by explaining new meanings into it! With new ideas let us have new names, or bravely accept unwelcome old ones, and, as generations pass, live a new meaning into them. Let us honestly use old words with their accepted signification, and at least feel ourselves not moral cowards.

Atheist signifies, by derivation, one without God; hence a disbeliever in God. Thus the definition hinges on the signification of the name God. When the word atheist was coined, no one dreamed of any other than a personal God, a Being of power chiefly, to whom was ascribed the creation and ordination of all of which man could not otherwise explain the origin. The progress of science has materially lessened the aggregate of primeval creation, and promises to do so still more. The discovery of the method of natural evolution makes the present as wonderful as the past, and, though it diminishes adoration for the great invisible idol of the past, it deepens and increases honest reverence and humility. The horror that has long attended the name of atheist awakes in sensitive hearts a shrinking dread of it; and the character that can assume and glory in it is often of an aggressive and rudely independent disposition that attracts no followers. Hence we find shambling evasions, and free-thinkers saying: "O yes, I believe in God; listen, this is the God I believe in." For each has a God of his own invention. Loving souls, pitying the distress of the many who cannot recognize the old Trinitarian or Unitarian God, and yet dread atheism, comfort them with a confusion of literal and figurative language, thus: "God is the great cause of all things. 'There is no atheist save he who disbelieves in cause and effect. To believe in a cause of all things is to believe in God.'" So says a heart more kind and loving than brave. It is not honest reasoning. As well say: "God is love; whoever believes in love believes in God." Let us have a heart brave enough to follow where honest reasoning leads.

Many thinkers of to-day have outgrown belief in a personal deity who is first powerful; second, good; and third, incomprehensible to human intellect. Imagination gives place to investigation. "Truth is stranger than fiction." The wonders of daily life—if our eyes be but open to see them—are better fitted to arouse religious feeling than any mystic tale or strange legend the mind of man has ever fabricated. Why puzzle ourselves with infinities and a first cause, eternities and immortality? The words may sound well, but they mean nothing save vague impressions of the vastness of what is unknown; and even these impressions are deeper and more lasting if gained by investigation of what is known and present. Belief in God—giving to the name God its generally accepted signification of personal deity representing always chiefly power—has been and still is in direct ratio to ignorance of the resources of the natural world, and of the possibilities of human nature.

The author of the communication "What is Atheism?" explains away the word altogether, thus: "There is no atheist save he who disbelieves in cause and effect." "Science knows but three states of mind: denial, conviction, and suspension of judgment; the latter is not atheism." Since none but an idiot can practically deny the relation of cause and effect—whatever French fame-seekers may have claimed as theory,—it follows there is no such thing as atheism. "That's nice!"—for those who dread the name. But if we be honest with ourselves, and give to the name God the value and significance most widely accorded to it, it seems to me we are, in greater or less degree, all atheists together; and then "that's nice," too, for the social feeling must be satisfied even if by sacrifice of intellectual exercise and power. Christianity has fought the evil traits, self-assertion, and headstrong aggression, to such good effect, that present generations show moral weakness engendered by such doctrines and ideas as atonement, salvation by faith only, leaning on Jesus, and crying to God to do for them what they might better be at work doing for themselves. Of all the "calling on the Lord" that finds occasion in the name of religion, what proportion is thankful and praise-giving, and what is of a mendicant character? How much of it is born of discontent, discouragement, and despair, and how much of cheerful, brave-hearted, onward striving that first humbly learns the grand laws under which human life exists and develops, and then endeavors to work according to them? There is enough in visible creation as found in the present to call into exercise all the moral sentiments and all the holy feelings of wonder, admiration, and humility that constitute the only valuable, the truly spiritual, part of what we call religion. Sects, denominations, and churches, but offer their own pet patented recipes for arousing the religious feelings. Little as we have learned of the world we inhabit, we are arriving—perhaps are arrived—at a time when, with even stronger religious sentiment than has ever before been known, we can do without, not only miracles and the Trinity, not only Bible-worship and Christ-worship, but without any fetich whatever, living both kindly and honestly, having faith in man, hope in his continual progress and development, charity for his blunders and weaknesses, and a love that shall help each one we meet on his halting way by cheery words of sympathy that will give comfort and also strength to be brave and true. L. M. T.

BERTHIER ENHAUT, C.E., Aug. 10.

[Above all things let us have honesty, in our thinking and our speaking alike. This brave challenge to a higher sincerity must be respected by all the sincere. Perhaps, however, it is not insincerity that causes the reluctance to lay aside the name God, but rather a conviction that this immemorial word is still the container of a truth that is less fittingly expressed by any other. Something else than a "loving heart" (though it would indeed be melancholy to be devoid of that) may make men cling to this grand old Saxon root. Whoever is led by modern thought itself to a conviction that the central, creative, formative, and conservative principle of Nature is intelligent or spiritual in essence, agrees with more than he differs from those who believe in a "personal God," and may without concession to prejudice accept the words still. There is no strangeness or impropriety, in our opinion, in using the name God in any sense which retains the thought of self-conscious being in absolute illimitation; but we do not for an instant doubt that there are those who reject this thought as false,—who therefore are rightly termed atheists, and would be wrongly termed anything else. When we too reject this thought, we will not flinch from the name that would then fitly describe us; but hitherto the whole drift of our philosophy and our life has been rather to confirm than to reject that thought. Let each one stand simply, without ostentation, without fear, without dissimulation, by his own secret conviction; and the world will be the better, if he uses such language to utter it as best suits his own sense of truth.—ED.]

WHAT WAS SLAVERY?

PAINESVILLE, Ohio, September, 1874.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

You compliment me by renewed invitation to continue these hurrygraphs on the old slavery warfare. And as I expect soon to establish headquarters for the present at Toledo, in this State, you may have them, at least a few more of them, with more regularity than heretofore.

My last related to the cruelties of slavery as upheld and practised by the American Church—ministers and members, men and women, in all the great leading Protestant Evangelical denominations, without exception.

The Methodists, by lies and hypocrisy, gained for a time, at the North, an antislavery reputation by a separation into a "Northern General Conference." But two plain facts expose the whole "pious fraud": first, the division, such as it was, occurred by withdrawal of the South from the North for the sake of peace,—not of the North from the South for the sake of purity; and second, the Northern Conference, instead of being Northern in the sense of separation from slavery and slaveholders, retained the whole border territory, including Missouri, Arkansas, and Texas, making in all eight whole annual conferences of slaveholding Methodists, numbering, as was computed by Methodists themselves, not less than 4,000 slaveholders and 27,000 slaves.

So palpable was the fraud that a subdivision followed, and the "Wesleyan" connection of Methodists was organized out of the more conscientious membership of the "Northern General Conference," who would not be partakers in such hypocrisy and guilt as was thus attempted and carried out.

But I am aside from my main line of thought on the cruelties of Methodist and other forms of Christian slavery. I gave in my last a North Carolina proclamation of outlawry affecting some runaway slaves in that State, by virtue of which such slaves might be lawfully killed by their pursuers, "without accusation or impeachment for any crime or offence for so doing."

But the advertisement of the owner should have contained the following, which I accidentally omitted:—

"I will give $100 for each of the above-named negroes to be delivered to me, or confined in the jail of Lenoir County, so that I can get them; or for the killing of them, so that I can see them"!

Now a word as to the manner of hunting slaves. Perhaps it is not known that packs of hounds were trained expressly for the business of hunting slaves, and that the training of puppies for that infernal work was also a lawful, respectable, and (so far as ever appeared) a perfectly pious, prayerful, and Christian calling. At any rate, the Sumner County, Alabama, Whig contained the following advertisement, over date Nov. 6, 1845, and continued it six months in the paper:—

"NEGRO DOGS.—The undersigned, having bought the entire pack of Negro Dogs of the Hay and Allen stock, now proposes to catch runaway negroes. His charges will be three dollars a day for hunting, and fifteen dollars for catching, a runaway. He resides three and a half miles north of Livingston, near the Lower Jones Bluff road.

(Signed) "WILLIAM GAMBEL."

Two presidential candidates during their canvass were charged, and rightfully, too, no doubt, with employing, even importing, from Cuba, bloodhounds to hunt out the Indians from their fastnesses, in our wars with those unfortunate tribes,—one Whig, the other Democrat; Generals Jackson and Taylor. And the fact was used by the opposing party as capital against the candidate in both instances.

But whoever was known to lift voice or pen against the frightful cruelties of a bloodhound slave-hunt in the dreary years while slavery lasted? Surely not the Christian Church nor clergy! As a body they were impliedly accomplices, when not even principals in the fiendish work.

THE INDEX is warring upon their faith, doctrines, creeds, catechisms. That is well. But in all this account behold their works! See here what they did through scores of years!

PARKER PILLSBURY.

"BELIEF" AND "UNBELIEF."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Dear Sir,—I see by a recent number of THE INDEX that your contemporary, the Independent, has lately been discussing in a tone of great disparagement the "Strength of Unbelief." Compared with believers, unbelievers are but a small minority, and the monuments they have erected in brick and stone are in proportion to the exiguity of their numbers. This apparently is the aspect of the question on which your contemporary loves to dwell, and, as the facts are indisputable, and seem to support a very edifying conclusion, it is by no means extraordinary that he should give the preference to so advantageous a basis of discussion. I could not help thinking, however, as I read the article reproduced in your columns, of Robert Browning's fine lines in "Rabbi Ben Ezra:"—

> "Not on the vulgar mass
> Called 'work' must sentence pass,
> Things done that took the eye and had the price:
> O'er which from level stand
> The low world laid its hand
> Found straightway to its mind, could value in a trice."

If we regard churches, denominational colleges, etc., as the "work" of belief, that work must certainly weigh immensely in any scales adapted to brick and mortar; but what it would weigh as the expression of a high moral impulse is a point upon which there may be wide differences of opinion. Believers themselves do not deny that excessively worldly motives prompt to much of that liberality which has its outcome in $100,000 and $500,000 churches. The Jews of old could point to their stately temple and their numerous synagogues; but one whom Christians, and not they alone, revere formed and expressed a very low estimate of the spirituality of that church-building people. And how many of our modern believers would like to invoke the judgment of Christ upon the spirit that has built the temples and synagogues of to-day?

The strength of Christianity, as of every religion that has ever existed in the world, consists in the alliance it has contrived to effect with the desires and passions of mankind. One proof of this is that every age moulds its inherited faith into forms suited to its own character. There is about as much resemblance between the Christianity of to-day and that of the third and fourth centuries as there is between the character of Tertullian and that of Charles Dickens. The modern world finds a gospel—pretty nearly all the gospel it wants—in the writings of the great novelist; the ancient world found the gospel it wanted in a vivid apprehension of a supernatural order of things, and above all in vivid conceptions of a future heaven and hell, the former to be the portion of believers, the latter of unbelievers. And hell, be it remembered, in those days, was hell—not the washed-out article of modern theology, but a good, honest pit, full of fire and brimstone, where men, women, and children were to be tortured eternally for want of faith. And heaven was heaven, in Tertullian's eyes, mainly because it afforded a gorgeous and delightful view of the torments of the lost.

Give any age what it wants—that is, what it likes and craves,—and it will cling to it. The present age does not want the theology of Tertullian, nor yet of Augustine or Luther. These men could all have reared $100,000 churches in their day; but it requires a different language from theirs, and much milder and vaguer doctrines than they would have tolerated, to work the same miracle now. Our contemporaries (of the Protestant world) have worked Christianity into a shape that they like, and, having done so, they are prepared to sustain it by such efforts as may be necessary. And they do sustain it; they build churches and colleges, and organize missionary enterprises, etc.; and the Independent, wheeling round in a well-stuffed arm-chair, says: "Look at the works of belief! What can you poor sceptics show that will in any way balance the account?"

The sceptic's answer to this challenge is already given. He sees in all these monuments and organizations the result of a certain sum of motive, but he wholly refuses to acknowledge that, because this sum of motive is potent, its elements must all be good, or even that they must be mainly good. As to his own work, or rather the work of the spirit he has imbibed, he sees it in the very theology which ten thousand pulpits and hundreds of religious papers preach,—a theology that has lost entirely its old absolute, domineering tone, and tries its best not to come into collision with the spirit or the science of the age; he sees it in the temper of mind of numberless so-called believers who smile evasively when questioned as to the harder portions of their belief, and who would soon reduce the salary or dispense with the services of any clergyman who undertook to administer such doctrinal doses as their forefathers seem to have found palatable; he sees it, finally, in the fact not to be disputed that modern literature in its highest walks is not instinct, as literature once was, with Christian faith, but either tacitly or explicitly claims for the human spirit a freedom which Christianity never has granted, and never can grant.

What has the sceptic to do in the pulpit? He has no system of revealed morality to expound, to supplement, or to render acceptable. He has no texts to mangle, no sophistical tissues to weave, no strained interpretations of history or science to put forward; above all, he has no indulgent congregation with whom it is a recognized duty to be profited by what he says, and who are therefore prepared to place a premium upon the very foolishness of his preaching. Why other men preach is obvious; why the sceptic only preaches when there is a special justification for it, is equally so.

These, Mr. Editor, are some of the thoughts into which I have been led by the perusal of the article to which I referred in the beginning, and in the hope that they may add a little strength to some who are only too sensitive to such taunts as those of the Independent, I place them at your disposal.

I am, dear sir,
Very sincerely yours,
WM. D. LESUEUR.

OTTAWA, Canada, September 2, 1874.

THE RIGHT TO PROHIBIT.

WEST CHESTER, Pa., Aug. 21, 1874.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

In common with a great many advocates of the temperance reform, you seem wholly to lose sight of the important distinction between the merely private, moral offence of rum-drinking, and that which, judged by its results, constitutes one of the most dangerous of public crimes, the infamous practice of rum-selling; while with a boldness born of honest conviction, you adopt the doctrine that the temperance principle, to be established and enforced by moral teaching merely, as contradistinguished from legal prohibition, is the only weapon which the consistent reformer can properly make use of in the great battle which is being waged against the enemies of the cause. No honest seeker after truth, however (and your radical is transformed to a truckling conservative, when he ceases to be such), can afford to exclude the light, come from whatever source it may, and it is in the light of this truth that I make bold to offer a few thoughts upon the subject.

Evil doers alone are the proper subjects of legal restraint, and for them alone are laws made and enforced. The good are always "a law unto themselves." The only proper purpose of civil society is to protect the weak and the innocent from the avarice or the cruelty of the vicious and the strong. Hence wrongs, and their correlative, rights, the primary object of all legal study, are divided into, first, private, such as affect individuals only, and are known as civil injuries; and, second, public, or such as affect the whole community, and are known as crimes and misdemeanors. In the latter class, with which our present discussion leads us particularly to deal, are comprehended all offences in which the public are either directly or indirectly concerned. Thus, if a man kills my neighbor, I am interested in having him properly punished (restrained, if you prefer it), inasmuch as my own safety is intimately connected and interwoven with that of every other citizen. The trouble, however, with that class of radicals above alluded to appears to be, that while they are perfectly willing to concede that such crimes as murder, rape, arson, battery, and the like, are direct injuries, and therefore properly within the sphere of legal cognizance, there is another class which, being indirect and merely consequential in their nature, are not therefore proper subjects for legislative interference; or in other words, that to merely moral evils moral remedies only can properly be applied. In asserting their utter want of faith in that morality which exists only by virtue of legal compulsion, indeed, they lay down a very grand as well as a very valuable moral truth, and it is extremely unfortunate that they should err so sadly in making the application; for while it is an undoubted fact that there is a class of strictly private moral offences which the law should not and cannot properly reach, it by no means follows that offences of an indirect or consequential nature, merely, are necessarily exempt from legal punishment. While it is perfectly true that a man may drink to never so great a degree of drunkenness in his own house with absolute impunity, yet it is none the less true that if he goes into the street in that condition, even although no direct injury be done to any one, he has nevertheless committed an offence against society, for which society may very justly hold him amenable. If a butcher sell tainted meat, he is guilty of a legal crime; so also, perhaps, would be the apothecary who should engage in the indiscriminate sale of poisons; while the storing of gunpowder, or other explosive material, is looked upon as a very grave offence against the community. It may still further be said that no one objects to the law prohibiting the carrying of concealed deadly weapons, while it is universally conceded that the public safety demands that in all our larger cities the erection of inflammable wooden buildings be strictly prohibited. In none of these cases, however, is the injury to society any more direct, nor in fact as much so, as in that of the liquor vender, who grows rich by industriously plying his trade, as the public trainer of criminals.

The only question, as the writer conceives, which can properly present itself in connection with this subject, is, whether or not the public evil be sufficiently great to demand a public remedy. Upon this point it would doubtless be extremely difficult to convince either the rumseller or his victim that the best interests of society demand the abolition of the traffic; but certainly the advocate of temperance should find little difficulty in forming a conclusion. If the doctrine adverted to in the commencement of this article be correct, then every law tending in any degree to restrict or regulate the sale of intoxicating drinks is equally indefensible, since license or restriction is but a modified form of prohibition. The whole subject, therefore, is resolved to the question of prohibition or free rum. Of the latter where is the temperance man who is willing to place himself upon record as the avowed advocate? Against him would arise the ruling spirits of the brothel and the grog-shop, and pour at once upon his defenceless head the full measure of their righteous indignation as a vile and inexcusable corruptor of the public morals.

WM. E. DINGEE.

[Our recent essay must stand as our answer to the above article. But dissentients ought to be heard fairly in THE INDEX.—ED.]

THE IDEAL LIFE.

It is to have clear thought, far and fine vision. It is to see the meaning and the true relation of all things. It is to be free, unprejudiced, unawed by custom. It is to be open to all light, and sincere in the reception and expression of it. It is to have an inward life forever tending to the outward. It is to have the outward forever made splendid by inward illumination. It is to be independent, centred in ourselves, getting the grandest truths from ourselves, yet eagerly yearning for and recognizing the help of others.

It is also to possess the exact means for the utterance of our thought; to have well defined words, strict language, and precise rhetoric. It is to be able to say what we mean without being misunderstood, to put into full expression our most delicate analysis, our deepest logic. It is to know even to a hair's breadth the distinction between our thought and that of another. It is to put our very soul into language as clear as the mountain stream, so that all the winding way of our experience can be seen in the clear sun-light. It is to have people realize just what our moral and intellectual position is, to know us as we know ourselves in the unclouded radiance of pure ideas. This paradise, I am afraid, is afar off. Words! words! words! What terrible barriers they are to the communion of saints! That which is an angel of light to one is a devil to another.

The ideal life is also fellowship of souls, founded not upon similar opinions, or like premises, or like sympathies even, but upon the universal burning desire for truth. He who wishes to know what really is, and live up to it, is my fellow-worker. He who is struggling anywhere for a glimpse of the eternal verities, out on the ocean, or on the mountain-top, or in the solemn church, or gay carnival, or club-house, or silent study,—he is my helper. When will all human goodness recognize the essential loveliness of its most diverse aspects? When shall we realize the grandeur of its multiplicity? That evil only is homogeneous, a dull monotony forever, but that the good is heterogeneous, ever changing into new forms of beauty and power?

The ideal life consists also in congenial work, the doing of that thing which is dearest and sweetest to us, the putting into outward act our best thoughts and noblest aspirations. There is such a vast chasm sometimes between what we think, and feel, and hope, and what we are obliged to do. There is harsh discord between our inward and outward fate. Happy the day when this shall be removed, when each can earn his bread and butter by doing his very best, when the outward toil is the fruitful expression of the inward fire.

S. P. PUTNAM.

SPURGEON says it is a remarkable fact that ministers of the gospel are not able to live on much less than other people. They can't make a shilling go so far as other people can make a sovereign. Some of them try very hard, but they do not succeed. A member once said to a minister, who wanted a little more salary as his family increased: "I did not know that you preached for money." "No, I don't," said the minister. "I thought you preached for souls." "So I do; but I could not live on souls; and if I could it would take a good many the size of yours to make a meal."

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12	Insertions,	10c per line.
" 13 " 25	"	8	"	"
" 26 " 51	"	6	"	"
" 52	"	5	"	"

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

CIRCULATE! Circulate!! Circulate THOSE PETITIONS. Don't feel satisfied when your petition is a yard long, unless you have asked every one to sign it. Get good, influential names.

GET EVERYBODY.

Don't neglect to show the petition to any one, because he is a stockholder in some church, or other exempted property, as many such persons admit the justice of the demand; and those who will not should be made to take the responsibility of refusing to sign it.

Don't delay! We want the petitions returned early.

Per order of EXEC. COMM. of the BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,

has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, assisted by ABRAM W. STEVENS, with the following list of ditorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
THOMAS W. HIGGINSON, Newport, R.I.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, nd every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 4.

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

ASSOCIATE EDITOR:

ABRAM WALTER STEVENS.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
T. W. HIGGINSON, Newport, R.I.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
F. W. NEWMAN, England.
CHARLES VOYSEY, England.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS,

OF THE

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. Abbot, D. A. Wasson, T. W. Higginson, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. Wasson on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. Abbot, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. Wasson on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. Abbot on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age;" an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. Higginson on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potier on "Religion Old and New in India;" also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Sympathy of Religions, by T. W. Higginson. 25 cents.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 10 cents, singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets	1.50
Concord Days	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M). Little Women. Two vols	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl	1.50
Little Men	1.50
My Boys, &c	1.00
Shawl-Straps	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism	2.00
New Poems	2.00
Literature and Dogma	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine	2.00
Edelweiss	1.00
German Tales	1.00
BACON'S Essays	1.00
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution	2.25
Physics and Politics	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations	3.00
BARTOL (Rev. C. A). Radical Problems	2.00
The Rising Faith	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols	5.00
BIBLE in the Public Schools. Records, Arguments, and Decision in the case of John D. Minor et al. vs. the Board of Education of the city of Cincinnati: et al. in the Supreme Court of the City of Cincinnati	2.00
Arguments of Ramsey, Sage and King in favor of the use of the Bible	.50
Arguments of Stallo, Hoadley and Mathews against the use of the Bible	.50
The Opinion and Decision of the Supreme Court of Ohio in the above case	.25
BRACKETT (ANNA C.) The Education of American Girls
BROOKS' (CHARLES T.) Translations. The Layman's Breviary	2.25
The World-Priest	2.25
The Tall Student	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol	.80
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.) The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.	2.00
CHENEY (Mrs. E. D). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion	2.00
CLARKE (Dr. E. H.) Sex in Education	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects.	3.00
Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays	5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age	.20
CONWAY (MONCURE D.) The Earthward Pilgrimage	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE; Its True Aims and Requirements A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans	2.00
DALL (Mrs. CAROLINE H). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies"	1.50
The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor"	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols	4.00
Journal of Researches	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE.) Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA.) Philosophers and Fools. A Study	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each	1.00
Comprising— Adam Bede. Romola. The Mill on the Floss. Felix Holt. Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life.
The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy	1.50
How Lisa Loved the King	.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series	2.00
Essays. Second Series	2.00
Miscellanies	2.00
Representative Men	2.00
English Traits	2.00
Conduct of Life	2.00
Poems. With Portrait	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold	1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols	5.00
Society and Solitude	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanase Coquerel the Younger	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG.) The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.	2.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity	1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers	.20
Child's Book of Religion	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS.) Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol	5.00
Elective Affinities	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments	2.00
Creed of Christendom	3.25
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter s Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France	1.50
Thoughts about Art	2.00
The Unknown River	6.00
The Intellectual Life	2.00
Chapters on Animals	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second	1.00
Child World. Part First	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures. 1. Metaphysical Lectures	3.50
2. Logical Lectures	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol	2.00
Twice-Told Tales. Mosses from an Old Manse. The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance. The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image. The Marble Faun. The English Note-Books. The American Note-Books. The French and Italian Note-Books. Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment	1.50
Atlantic Essays	2.00
Oldport Days	2.50
HOWELLS'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey	2.00
Suburban Sketches	2.00
Venetian Life	2.00
Italian Journeys	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "'Ninety-Three"	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life	1.75
HUNT'S (Mrs. HELEN). Verses	1.25
Bits of Travel	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature	1.25
On the Origin of Species	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen	1.50
Songs of Seven	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skelligs	1.75
Studies for Stories	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours	1.25
Mopsa the Fairy: A Story	1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect	.60
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall	1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.	1.50
III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aëronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialognes of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols.	3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed	3.00
LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life.	1.50
LEWIN (Rev. RAPHAEL, D'C). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series	1.50
Among my Books	2.00
My Study Windows	2.00
LOWELL (Mrs. A. C.) Posies for Children.	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man	2.00
Pre-historic Times	5.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols	8.00
Elements of Geology	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE.) The Vicar's Daughter	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education.	3.00
Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES.) Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol	2.50
The New Affinities of Faith	.25
MAURICE (Rev. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART.) Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte.	1.50
Political Economy. New and revised edition	2.50
The Subjection of Women	1.25
Essay on Liberty	1.25
Representative Government	1.50
Autobiography	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works	1.0
MILLER (JOAQUIN.) Songs of the Sierras.	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species	1.75
MORLEY (Prof. JOHN.) Voltaire	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-Time Stories	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series	2.50
The Same. Second Series	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography, and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion	2.00
NASBY (PETROLEUM V). Swingin' Round the Cirkle	1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations	2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical	4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism.	.25
Against Hero-Making in Religion	.25
PARKER (THEODORE.) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings	1.50
Historic Americans,—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations,—A.D. I. and MDCCCLV. A Christmas Story	.60
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS.) The Infinite and the Finite	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar	1.50
The Trotty Book	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts	1.50
Hedged In	1.50
The Silent Partner	1.50
What to Wear?	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition	2.00
PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena	1.75
Essays on Astronomy. A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc	5.00
The Expanse of Heaven	2.00
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante	2.50
SCHELLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With illustrations	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL.) Self-Help	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical	1.25
First Principles	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Æsthetic	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols	5.00
Philosophy of Style	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition	2.00
Sociology	2.00
SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus	.25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics	9.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin	.00
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols	12.00
TAINE'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols	7.50
The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol. Vanity Fair. The Newcomes. Adventures of Philip. Pendennis. The Virginians. Esmond, and Lovel the Widower. Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1. Barry Lyndon, Hoggarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humorists, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unreprinted Pieces.
THAXTER'S (Mrs. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.	2.00
The Maine Woods	2.00
Cape Cod	2.0
Letters	2.00
A Yankee in Canada	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimac Rivers	2.00
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People	2.00
Light and Electricity	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion	2.00
On Sound	2.00
Radiant Heat	5.00
Forms of Water	1.50
Lectures on Light	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall	.50
TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings	1.50
VOYSEY (Rev. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each	3.00
Vols III. IV. and VI., each	3.75
The Voysey Appeal	.50
Voysey's Defence at York	.50
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden	1.00
Saunterings	1.50
Back-Log Studies	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life	1.50
Essays and Reviews	3.00
Character and Characteristic Men	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth	1.50
Success and its Conditions	1.50
Washington and the Revolution	.30
WHITNEY'S (Mrs. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story	1.50
Real Folks	1.50
The Other Girls	2.00
Pansies. A volume of Poems	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols	4.00
Child Life	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place, Boston.

ROWLAND CONNOR,

Having finished his engagement with the Free Congregational Society of Florence, will answer invitations to lecture for liberal societies. Address at

JAMAICA PLAIN, MASS.

CHARLES SUMNER.

A fine likeness of Massachusetts' great Senator, the copy of a recent Photograph by Black, is for sale at THE INDEX office, and will be sent by mail to any address on receipt of the price—fifty cents.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE BOUND INDEX FOR 1873.

The bound volume of THE INDEX for 1873 (Volume 4) will be promptly forwarded to any address on receipt of $3, by express, at the purchaser's expense. A complete file for the year can be furnished in no other form.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

SPECTRUM ANALYSIS EXPLAINED.

An explanation of this wonderful discovery, and its uses to science, including the received Theory of Sound, Heat, Light, and Color; with chapters on the Sun, Stars, Nebulæ, Comets, and Meteoric Showers. Abridged from the works of Schellen, Roscoe, Huggins, Lockyer, Young, and others, by the editor of Half-Hour Recreations in Popular Science.

12mo., cloth, with two colored plates and twenty illustrations. $1.50.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.

TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston.

CHARLES SUMNER'S

GREAT WORK.

PROPHETIC VOICES

CONCERNING AMERICA.

By CHARLES SUMNER.

Fine Edition, Tinted Paper, with Steel Portrait, Crown 8vo., Cloth extra, $2.

Aside from its literary and historical merits, this volume has a special interest, from the fact that it was the last work on which r. Sumner was engaged before his death.

"PROPHETIC VOICES" will be found of great value to all who take an interest in the history of our country, so full is it of passages in which the unexampled prosperity of our land has been foretold by philosophers, poets, statesmen, and orators, of whom the lamented author has also given interesting sketches.

Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A NEW, SEARCHING, TIMELY BOOK, entitled

"THE GENESIS AND ETHICS OF CONJUGAL LOVE."

By Andrew Jackson Davis.

Treatment of all the delicate and important questions involved in Conjugal Love is straightforward, unmistakably emphatic, and perfectly explicit and plain in every vital particular. Mr. Davis has recently examined the whole field of Marriage, Parentage, Disaffection, and Divorce, and this little volume is the result; which now comes into the world because it is now both wanted and needed by all women and men.

· · · Our friend Andrew Jackson Davis has written a book this time that concerns everybody, and on this side of the great river. It certainly touches their bosoms if not their business, and people who do not care a pin what Mr. Davis thinks of the Summer Land will be interested to see what he knows about conjugal love, and the duties of the marriage relation. His book has a table of contents as attractive as a Delmonico bill of fare.—Golden Age.

Price, in paper covers, 50 cents; in handsome cloth, 75 cents; in full gilt and extra binding, $1. Postage free. The trade supplied on the most liberal terms. Published by the "Progressive Publishing House" of A. J. DAVIS & CO., No. 24 East Fourth Street, New York City.

STUDENTS FITTED for any College.

Please address
EMILY J. LEONARD,
Meriden, Conn.

CONSTANT EMPLOYMENT.—At home, male or female, $30 a week warranted. No capital required. Particulars and valuable sample sent free. Address, with six-cent return stamp. C. ROSS,
Williamsburg, N. Y.

FREE DISCUSSION

is held at HOSPITALLER HALL, 593 Washington Street, Boston, every Sunday, at 10½ A.M., 2½ and 7½ P.M. All that relates to the Religious, Political, and Social interests of mankind constitute the subjects for discussion. THE INDEX and Index Tracts are for sale every Sunday at Hospitaller Hall.

WEST NEWTON ENGLISH AND CLASSICAL SCHOOL.—The twenty-first school year of this Family and Day School, FOR BOTH SEXES, will begin Wednesday, September 16, 1874.

For particulars address
NATH'L T. ALLEN, Principal,
West Newton, Mass.

At home Saturdays.

TO NEWSPAPER PUBLISHERS.

Having conveniences for doing the best of newspaper printing at reasonable prices, I should like to contract for composition alone, or for composition, press-work, and mailing, for one or more weekly papers.

Best of references given, and satisfactory work guaranteed. GEO. H. ELLIS,
7 Tremont Place, Boston.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c., of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing

THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX.

Bound volumes of THE INDEX for 1871, 1872, and 1873, will be sent by express (at the purchaser's expense) on receipt of $2.50, $2.50, and $3.00 respectively. These volumes are exceedingly valuable singly, irrespective of each other; for the important essays and other articles they contain are of permanent interest, and will furnish as instructive reading twenty years hence as to-day. No more valuable present could be made to a friend struggling out of Orthodoxy than one of these volumes.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

WARREN'S TRUE CIVILIZATION.

Price 50 cents.

PRACTICAL DETAILS,

showing the workings of the

COST PRINCIPLE.

Price 25 cents.

For sale by

S. H. MORSE,

25 Bromfield St., Boston.

THE SONG MONARCH!!

By H. R. PALMER, of Chicago, with the distinguished assistance of Prof. L. O. EMERSON, of Boston. These gentlemen, in the SONG MONARCH, present to the public a book unrivalled for the use of

SINGING CLASSES,

whether in the form of SINGING SCHOOLS, or in NORMAL MUSIC SCHOOLS, CONVENTIONS, COLLEGES, or ACADEMIES, and the higher COMMON SCHOOLS.

Price 75 Cents. Per Dozen, $7.50.

Richardson's New Method

FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

The Most Popular Method ever issued; 250,000 already sold, and the book is received, if anything, with increasing favor from year to year. Teachers and Pupils buy

25,000 COPIES ANNUALLY!!

Recently enriched by the addition of "CZERNY'S LETTERS ON THE ART OF PLAYING THE PIANO," and of "SCHUMANN'S MAXIMS." It is now a book of 260 large pages.

PRICE $3.75.

All books mailed, post-paid, for the retail price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO.,

BOSTON.

CHAS. H. DITSON & CO.,

711 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE.

Our organization some time since decided to direct its efforts for the present towards securing the

Repeal of the Laws

whereby church and other corporate property is unjustly exempted from its share of the burden of taxation.

As a means to this end, we have published for general circulation several thousand copies of a

TRACT

on Church Exemption, being the article by Mr. Abbot which appeared in THE INDEX of Nov. 27.

We have already issued three editions, the last of which is nearly exhausted.

We desire soon to issue

Another Large Edition

of this and other tracts on the subject, so that we can place a copy in the hands of

EVERY VOTER IN THE STATE,

and generously to supply the calls for them in other States.

To do this, we need funds; for, although we have made arrangements for printing the Tract at very low cost, it is impossible for the Boston League, with its various other expenses, to bear the entire expense alone.

Will not, then,

All Friends of the Movement

come forward and help us with liberal donations?

We frequently receive communications from parties wishing tracts to distribute, asking how much they shall pay. To such we reply that the cost to us is about $2.50 per thousand, and we shall be pleased to furnish them at this price per thousand, or 30 cents per hundred, to all who will circulate them. But all additional donations will be gratefully received for the purpose of circulating them gratuitously throughout the country.

Last winter this subject was brought before the Legislature of the State, and many petitions were presented asking a repeal of these unjust laws.

The matter is still in their hands, and at the next session will undoubtedly be acted upon. Meanwhile the

Voice of the People,

favoring justice and equity, should be distinctly heard.

We shall soon be ready to send out

BLANK PETITIONS AGAIN,

thus giving an opportunity to those who have not already done so, to protest against this continued wrong.

Let us make it

THE LARGEST PETITION

ever presented to our legislative body.

Will those willing to assist in circulating these petitions please

SEND IN THEIR NAMES?

We would say, also that we feel deeply the need of

Other Organizations

in this State, to coöperate with us in securing equality and justice, by pressing the "Demands of Liberalism." If, in any locality, there are those who are inclined to

Form a Liberal League,

we are ready to render such assistance as lies in our power.

LIBERALS!

If all will unite and work, the results sought can be accomplished

Address

BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE,

NO. 1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

Per order of the
EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

NONPAREIL Farm Feed, Bone, Drug, and Hand-grinding MILLS. Ten Sizes. Also Cotton-Seed Hullers. Illustrated pamphlets free. Address

SEDGEBEER, SHEPARD & MILLER,
181 East Front Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

THE AMERICAN EDITION

OF

MONCURE D. CONWAY'S

SACRED ANTHOLOGY,

A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES,

has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.

Address THE INDEX,
1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,

BANKERS,

LEROY, MINN.

Branch Office, 137 Broadway, N. Y.

Money Invested in First Mortgages on Improved Farms in Minnesota and Iowa, running three to five years, with Coupon Interest Notes, drawing 9 per cent. annually in advance, or ten per cent. paid semi-annually in advance, or 12 per cent. per annum, annually, free of expense to the Loaner.

☞ 10 per cent. paid on receipt of money at the Bank, or in New York, till invested.

For Full Particulars, send for Circular.

137 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

REAL ESTATE SECURITIES, paying 8 to 10 per cent. interest, or

Investments in Real Estate in Chicago and vicinity,

if judiciously made, are the best and safest modes of employing capital. The old

Real Estate and Loan Agency

OF

ERNST PRUSSING, 143 RANDOLPH STREET,

Chicago (Established 1853),

Guarantees perfect title and ample security in all its Real Estate Loans.

Firstclass securities always on hand. Interest and principal collected without charge. Real Estate Investments made on commission or on shares; taxes paid, &c.

Orders of capitalists and real estate owners respectfully solicited.

REASONS FOR USING THE

EUREKA SPOOL SILK.

It is full length. It is full size. It is smooth and elastic, and is equally adapted to hand or machine use.

Many kinds of spool silk are a perfect fraud, being not only shorter in length, but a much finer size than they are represented to be, and of so poor a quality as to be unfit for use. The ladies will always find the Eureka Silk exactly as represented. Every spool is warranted, and the manufacturer's name indelibly branded on every spool. Call for it.

RADICAL AND LITERARY

LECTURES

BY

JOHN WEISS,

RADICAL LECTURES.

The Idea of Hereafter.
An Act of Faith.
Intelligence in Religion.
Religion and Science.
Heart in Religion.

SHAKSPEARIAN LECTURES.

FIRST SERIES.

1. Cause of Laughter.
2. Irony and Humor.
3. Dogberry, Malvolio, Bottom, Touchstone.
4. Ajax in Troilus and Cressida: The Porter in Macbeth: The Fool in Lear.
5. Falstaff.
6. Hamlet.

SECOND SERIES.

1. The Women of Shakspeare.
2. Portia.
3. Ophelia.
4. Macbeth and Lady Macbeth.
5. " " " "
6. Contrast in Shakspeare's Characters.

Address JOHN WEISS,
32 E. Brookline St., Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year. LIBERTY AND LIGHT. Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 5. BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 24, 1874. WHOLE No. 248.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF ——.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in ——:

Also, as soon as five hundred such Liberal Leagues shall have been formed in different places, to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be hereafter called, in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the needed reforms.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the National Convention of Liberal Leagues when called together.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

So far as I am concerned, the above is the platform of THE INDEX. I believe in it without reserve; I believe that it will yet be accepted universally by the American people, as the only platform consistent with religious liberty. A Liberal League ought to be formed to carry out its principles wherever half a dozen earnest and resolute Liberals can be got together. Being convinced that the movement to secure compliance with these just "Demands" must surely, even if slowly, spread, I hope to make THE INDEX a means of furthering it; and I ask the assistance and active co-operation of every man and every woman who believes in it. Multiply Liberal Leagues everywhere, and report promptly the names of their Presidents and Secretaries. Intolerance and bigotry will tremble in proportion as that list grows. If freedom, justice, and reason are right, let their organized voice be heard like the sound of many waters.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

BOSTON, Sept. 1, 1873.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State; and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation.

GLIMPSES.

JAPAN HAS 300,000 members of the priestly class.

"PATERNAL GOVERNMENT" is no novelty; but Mr. Vernon Harcourt has invented "grandmotherly government." We prefer to be governed by our great-grandparents.

DETROIT HAS sixty churches, or one church to every seventeen hundred inhabitants. The edifices are valued at $1,123,510; the sites at $1,700,000. Total, $2,823,510—and of course untaxed.

MR. HARCOURT told Parliament some time ago that "the people will not endure to be put to bed when they want to sit up;" which shows that human nature is about the same in England as in Yankeedom—even on the temperance question.

LADY BARKER'S new Lessons in Cooking, published by Macmillan, is a book highly commended by Nature. She says that "no school-boy ever gets as much nourishing food as he requires." That sentiment will be cheered by the school-boys.

FATHER HYACINTHE is a trifle tiresome. He shies like a skittish horse, and evidently made a great blunder when he set up for a reformer. In default of a natural backbone, he had better procure a substitute from the fireplace, or vacate a chair in which sitting up straight is a necessity.

THE LONDON Spectator thinks that Cosmian Hall, at Florence, Massachusetts, ought to have been baptized Chaotic Hall. The Spectator labors under the disadvantage, common to all Christians, of not being able to distinguish between chaos and cosmos. There is a far profounder cosmos in freedom of thought than in the lifelessness of enforced uniformity.

THE BIG row in England over the right or wrong of a Wesleyan minister's putting "Rev." before his own name on his daughter's tombstone is funny enough. Of course the Bishop who forbade it was a religious coxcomb, and the Dissenters are not unnaturally incensed by his impudence. But then is it wise to get vexed with a fellow who picks a burr off your back?

SEVERAL TELLING ARTICLES have been published by the Lansing (Michigan) Republican, charging the Appletons with "catering to the Roman Catholics" in their New American Cyclopædia, and supporting the charge with evidence that is at least enough to raise a serious suspicion of its truth. Such an offence, if committed, would be akin to the crime of fountain-poisoning. The charge ought to be met with very full and very frank explanations.

THE PROPOSITION to create a new sea in French Africa, 480 miles long and 60 miles wide, illustrates in an impressive manner the widening dominion of man over Nature which is conferred upon him by Science. Captain Roudoire lately had a paper on the subject in the Revue des Deux Mondes. Formerly an immense inland sea filled a series of slimy hollows in Tunis and Algeria, called chotts; but, being cut off from the Mediterranean by the gradually formed isthmus of Gabes, it dried up under the hot African sun. It is now proposed to cut through this isthmus and fill up the sea once more. M. Lesseps estimates the cost of the enterprise at only about two and a half millions of dollars; and the hope is that the constant evaporation from the new sea, followed by rain, would convert the surrounding desert into fertile country. What a gigantic dwarf is man!

THE Nation says with its accustomed keenness: "We trust, too, that in any legal proceedings taken Mr. Henry C. Bowen will be somehow put into the hands of a skilful cross-examiner. The escape of this worthy thus far is one of the most discreditable features in the investigation. The temporary suspension of the business of 'bringing souls to Christ,' in which he says he is engaged, would be a cheap price to pay for having him turned inside out by a remorseless and practised hand in open court." No other paper, so far as we know, has touched on this point, which has seemed to us very important from the first. The strangest thing about the "Investigating Committee" was its total neglect to secure Mr. Bowen's testimony; yet he has the reputation of knowing more than anybody else of the "scandal." There is evidently hard work ahead for the courts, but we hope it will get thoroughly done at last.

THE SOCIAL CHANGES rendered inevitable by the issue of the civil war are thus referred to by one of our correspondents in Louisiana: "The planters here are nearly all hopelessly insolvent, too proud and too lazy to work. The mortgages must necessarily soon foreclose and sell them out. The alluvial lands here are generally some eight or ten feet above overflow, and have never been known to be inundated during the highest water. I have never seen so beautiful or productive a country elsewhere in the United States, either North or South. The lands must soon go into other hands, and, instead of remaining in from two to ten thousand acre plantations, must be cut up into hundred acre farms in the hands of thrifty farmers, when the country will again prosper and smile like a rose. Cleared lands now are scarcely worth ten dollars per acre; and, should another riot occur, they could hardly be given away for several years to come."

MR. SAMUEL WILKESON'S dolorous exclamation that the Brooklyn scandal would "knock the Life of Christ higher than a kite" indicated a commercial sagacity which is proved by the following paragraph in the Brooklyn Argus of September 10: "The Dahman publishing house in Leipsic, which issued a German translation of the first volume of Beecher's Life of Christ, has issued a card stating that, owing to the disreputable disclosures about Beecher, it will discontinue the publication of the work, and it offers for sale at actual cost the remaining copies of the first volume. 'We are sorry to be compelled to take this step,' the card concludes, 'but due respect for the character of our house renders this determination inevitable.' In commenting on this card, the German Universal Gazette, of Leipsic, says, under date of August 18: 'This is eminently right and proper. Mr. Beecher stands self-accusing, self-convicted, before the whole world. No virtuous man or woman will care to read a Life of Christ emanating from so foul a source.'" This action is over-hasty, though not much to be wondered at in consideration of Mr. Beecher's infatuated silence and delay. Nothing but a unanimous acquittal by a jury above suspicion can possibly restore his reputation now.

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
VINELAND' N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walters; Secretary, E. M. Bridgman.
WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—President, J. B. Bassett; Secretary, Anton Grethen.
NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
BALBEC, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
SAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.
AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Vaux, Secretary.

Christian---Extra-Christian---or Anti-Christian?

THE EXTRA-CHRISTIAN'S PLEA.

ADDRESS OF COL. T. W. HIGGINSON, AT THE SEVENTH ANNUAL MEETING OF THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION, IN BOSTON, MAY 29, 1874.

MR. CHAIRMAN, LADIES AND GENTLEMEN.—Mr. Abbot's point in regard to the recent disaster in Western Massachusetts brought to my mind another incident of that casualty which comes home more to my sympathy, perhaps, than any other, and which suggests the thoughts that were vaguely in many minds, I dare say, during this discussion. It is a strange thing that in that fearful flood, when granite dams proved nothing, brick walls crumbled, bridges were swept away, roofs of houses afforded no solid raft to carry anybody in safety down the stream, there was yet one little craft that rode the storm from its launching to its landing, and carried its little captain quite safe. That particular craft was a cradle, the captain of it was a baby, the first mate was a baby, and the crew was the same baby. The baby had known that cradle as a place of absolute safety on land hitherto; in its first experiment on the water the cradle was a place of safety still. The baby floated down in the cradle, laughed and crowed, or cried and bewailed, as it went along that swift voyage; nobody knows. At any rate, it landed at last, and was taken back to its mother's arms unhurt, that little child; and now the only question, I suppose, remaining in that family, suggested by that particular transit, is, What are we going to do with that cradle? On this point, I notice that our two friends who have spoken have diametrically opposite opinions. "What to do with the cradle?" Mr. Calthrop would say, "Why, the baby must stay in it, of course; if he outgrows it, have another one built on the same pattern." "What should we do with it?" Says our friend Abbot, "Smash it, for fear somebody else should be taken and stowed away within its uncomfortable limitations."

I stand here, ladies and gentlemen, in the most humble position as the defender of that cradle. A cradle is a convenient and comfortable appendage to a family,—in fact, I don't know what most of us would have done without one; but there comes a time when a man outgrows his cradle, and the decision of his life has to be made. There is the first question, What shall he do with himself? shall he stay there? There is the second question, What shall he do with it after he goes out of it? And I find myself on the decision of each of these questions in that most painful position, quite opposed to two of my best friends, and only hoping that in the brief statement of my own position I may emulate, in some small degree, the candor and the courtesy which marked their statement of theirs. It is the pride of the Free Religious Association that its members differ from one another. It is also their pride that they are able to state that difference very frankly without going to pieces. We may be most of us born and bred with a little taste of fighting, but, at least, we keep it from people outside. Dr. John Brown, of Edinburgh, describes a Scotch shepherd who was very proud of his dog, and he said to some one who was stroking the animal, "Oh, but there's a great deal of sairiousness in life for that beast,—he just never gets enough of fighting." There is a terrible amount of seriousness in our lives as members of the Free Religious Association, but at least we get enough of fighting outside to satisfy us, and nothing can exceed the peace and harmony which prevail at our meetings. That metaphor of the cradle may not do complete and full justice to the position of my friends, or to my position; metaphors never do, and therefore metaphors are never arguments, and it is dangerous even to use them; but I think it will not be very hard to show briefly my reasons for dissenting from each of those two arguments so persuasive and so sincere.

First, as to that matter of the Christian name. I travelled with Mr. Calthrop through all the wide range of his argument,—wide indeed, for it began with monads and came down to that highly collective unit, the Free Religious Association,—and yet I did not hear, from beginning to end, a single word that precisely touched my own position. I heard him say or imply in regard to those who are born in a Christian land, bred in Christian civilization, trained by Christian parents, that it is their duty to call themselves Christians, to stand by the flag, in a manner. He did not tell us where that obligation ended, or where the obligation of truth to one's self begins. There are men in this audience who are atheists, have been so from childhood, never asked for any better faith, never found any better tonic anywhere else, materialists through and through, resenting the invitation to believe in God as an insult. Is it their duty, in deference to the land that bore them, to forswear every consideration of their souls and take the Christian name? Or our friend the Rabbi, here on the platform, born in Vienna, trained at the universities of Heidelberg and Göttingen, Christian institutions throughout,—is he to call himself a Christian from deference to local training, when all the private traditions of his family and his personal convictions go the other way? Or take a step further: one like myself, born in the very mildest and most vanishing type of Unitarianism,—and how vanishing a type of dogmatism that is those who have observed any of the microscopical investigations going on over our friend Potter can judge,—what is one like myself, bred from childhood to consult his own reason and his own conscience, to seek for light everywhere, and to follow the best light he could find,—what has he to do about the Christian name? How can he call himself a Christian when, from the best investigation he is enabled to make, he is not strictly a Christian? That is the trouble. You know you can call yourself a great many things if you are willing to tell a lie, but if you are a fellow-countryman of George Washington and cannot tell a lie, what are you going to do about it? No matter what others may say or think, if to you Jesus Christ is simply and absolutely a man, how can you, without man-worship, call yourself technically a Christian?

Thus far, I am with my friend Abbot. I do not make my position; it was made for me before I knew anything about it; it was made for me before I went to Sunday-school; it was made for me before I studied theology. One day, at the theological school in Divinity Hall, at Cambridge, I met my fellow-student Frothingham. He was then a comparatively unsuspected, seemingly innocent, virtuous, deserving young man; not one of the million crimes that have since been discovered to coil their fiery serpents around his head had then come to light; he was as good as any of us, and I said to him, I remember, "If we believe that Jesus Christ was a man, and we seem to believe that, how can we call ourselves Christians, thus lettering ourselves, as it were, with the name of a man?" And he said, with that total depravity which even then doubtless secretly characterized him, "I am not at all anxious to call myself a Christian; I am perfectly willing to be known to the world as a Frothinghamian"—and I think he has held to that position pretty faithfully ever since.

It is not a new position to many of us, I fancy, to find, on coming to maturity, that even without taking into account all those vast schemes of Christian doctrine to which Mr. Abbot has referred, when we merely reduce Christianity to its simplest terms in doctrine,—the recognition of Jesus Christ as an infallible authority different in kind from all other authorities,—we not only are not Christians, but never have been Christians. Such, at any rate, being my simple experience, my friend Mr. Calthrop's suppositions did not reach me.

Then, again, we are constantly told, "Even if you are not a Christian in this intellectual sense, you may be still a Christian in the recognition of an authority higher in degree than any other, not necessarily different in kind. Take the best authority you can find anywhere, get the best,—as they say in the war of the dictionaries,—label yourself by that name; men do it in other spheres of life, why not in religion?" I know they do it in other spheres of life, and how much good have they got by it? Men have called themselves Aristotelians. The consequence was that for years and years the advanced minds of Europe were perplexing themselves to find out, not what was true, but what Aristotle said in "the book," as his writings were called,—nothing more than that. Men have called themselves Newtonians; and in that charming autobiography of Mrs. Somerville you will find her saying that in her youth mathematical science was at a low ebb in England, because reverence for Newton had prevented English mathematicians from employing the "Calculus," through which the French had accomplished so much. Men have called themselves Shakspearians, and our greatest critic has pointed out that the English dramatists have Shakspearized ever since his day. Men have called themselves Swedenborgians, and the finest mind among American Swedenborgians, Henry James, called attention twenty years ago to the fact that there were already Swedenborgians who were making the infallibility of Swedenborg an article of faith. Danger rests upon this subservience even to the noblest authority; safety begins with each rising generation of young men when some one appeals to them, as Emerson appealed to all of us years ago and said, "Be yourselves." Then, after we have got that into us, if we still recognize the authority at all, it is in that exceedingly comfortable way in which Henry Ward Beecher still claims to be a good Calvinist; for he says, "I faithfully believe what John Calvin believed, or what he would have believed if he had lived in these times and believed as I think he ought to."

There is a danger on the spiritual side, on the moral side, on all sides, in carrying your recognitions of any human authority so far as to call yourself by its name. It is often easier to decide whether a thought is true or not than whether it is Christian or not. It is often not so hard to settle whether your moral code is right or wrong as whether it is Christian or otherwise. The whole history of the temperance movement, of the antislavery movement, and the woman suffrage movement proves it so. A woman said to me not long ago, a woman of an absolute purity that one reveres, but narrowed by her theology,—she said to me, speaking of banishing wine from her table, round which her young sons were growing up, "I should feel that I was insulting my Savior if I excluded wine from my table." Thus perilous, thus formidable, is the result which follows from limiting one's moral and spiritual standard even to the loftiest standard. Take your own conscience as your guide, and you have something that can be educated through great examples. But anchor yourself in absolute subservience to any one example, even the greatest, and you may find yourself, at least if you are consistent, much as a gifted woman once told me it was with her in the Roman Catholic Church to which she had belonged and which she had left. She said she found herself revolving and revolving in a narrower circle every year, until it seemed to be getting about as big as a walnut, and she came out of it.

And then again, apart from these special dangers, how shall we take the Christian name, who find every fibre of our souls yearning for contact with all nobleness, all of beautiful tradition, all of superb mythology, that the world can yield? In this day of universal travel, of universal science, when the farthest parts of the earth are being ransacked for their literature and their mythology, how shall we call ourselves Christians and yet embrace, as we long to embrace, the sympathy of this grander brotherhood, the statements of this wider faith? How trivial seem our little Congregational and Presbyterian churches, even our Episcopal churches, before the historic grandeur of the Roman Catholic, that church which has had kings for confessors, and made nations for converts, carrying to all the world, in its way, one Lord, one faith, one baptism; making as its own standard that which has been believed "always, everywhere, and by all,"—semper, ubique et ab omnibus! And yet when you once cast your eyes outside of Christian limits, what a child of yesterday the Roman Catholic Church seems! Why, how young it is, if you come to that, how small, how few converts, how trifling its range compared with this vast range of spiritual activity of the human race! I am not satisfied with Unitarianism. It is so much less in its compass and range than Orthodoxy. I am not satisfied with Orthodoxy. It is so trifling compared with Roman Catholicism. I am not satisfied with Roman Catholicism, which after all is simply the older branch of but one religion of the world. I long for something more than a cathedral above us, for a tradition more grand. I don't think we, any of us, in this age, ought to be satisfied with anything less than a theology to which the whole human race has contributed, and a liturgy to which the whole human race adds its prayers.

The human race is outgrowing our special and limited religions. You may take the robin's egg from the nest on yonder tree, and so near is the bird to being hatched you may crack it with the edge of your nail and the bird is free. But all your power, and all your patient fidelity, and all the mucilage and sticking-plaster you can put on it, will never get that birdling back into that little egg again. So complete is the sense of satisfaction, such is the feeling of freedom which comes from once finding yourself, not merely out of these little sectarian names, but out of the name of the larger and grander sect which is Christianity, that you will find when the egg is once broken the bird is free forever. You had better let him use his wings, even if he comes to mischief in consequence.

And yet, on the other hand, is that bird to turn back and blame the egg, or that institution of egg, which somehow does in its own way hatch birds for good or for evil into being? Here again I must differ from my friend Abbot,—whom I love to agree with, because I always hope that by agreeing with him I may perhaps catch something of that courage and fidelity of conviction that leave him too much alone. He has recognized what it is needless for me to repeat. The sweetness, the virtue, the love that still for multitudes around us are engraved in Christianity,—he has recognized that. I recognize in return what he has said, that if the brightest pages of the past are written with the name of Christianity, so also are some of the darkest. I recognize that, but where I take issue with him is this. I think that his view of Christianity is too scholastic, too much of the closet and the office, too little of the world of practical life. It is true, as he says, that when we are interpreting the word "Christianity" for ourselves, we must interpret in view of all accuracy, all strictness of construction; but I cannot agree, as he says, that in interpreting what Christianity means for others we are to insist on that same strictness. Let each man interpret for himself, and let us judge him according as he interprets it. God forbid that I should hold any man, because he calls himself Christian, to be Christian in any other sense of the word than that which he habitually recognizes. Words change. You cannot keep a word unaltered. It is the business of a man who lives among men to take words at their current valuation for current purposes. You must deal with Christianity for what it is to-day, not for what it was in the past.

I think it is a mistake to go about the world treating all our fellow-creatures as if they were their ancestors who lived a great many centuries ago and behaved very differently. Let us take the facts as they are. Clergymen in Boston in old times had those who differed from them tied to a cart and whipped through the town. Am I to carry the natural animosity of those days in dealing with a modern clergyman who simply puts me into his buggy and drives me out over the Brighton road behind his Morgan mare? Because clergymen in other days lighted the fires of the Inquisition, am I to keep up that good old honest "no popery" resentment to the man who offers me nothing more perilous than a lighted cigar? It was all very well for Miles Standish to go among the Indians of Massachusetts in his iron helmet and iron corslet, but am I called upon to make a visit in similar armor to the peaceful Indians of Martha's Vineyard, merely because their great-grandfather may have tried to scalp my great-grandfather? The principle of change rules human events. We cannot leave it out of sight. We cannot accept the kindness, the courtesy, the amenities of life that the civilized world gives us in these days, and yet return them with the old war-whoop and the tomahawk. It is impossible.

Theology is everywhere softened. In this week's Independent, Dr. Taylor Lewis mourns that there is not a really Evangelical pulpit left. The old woman says in the story, "If you take away my total depravity, what else have I to depend upon?" That is the position of some of those good men, and so they are moaning over it at the rate of two columns a week in the Independent. We are not dwelling in a world of theologians who act consistently up to their theories. Why, in those old Puritan times in Massachusetts, as one form of punishment or penalty for certain crimes, a certain offender was doomed to "go and talk with the elders;" and yet barbarous and cruel punishments were forbidden in another clause: so they were very inconsistent. We are not sentenced to that. The only difficulty is to get the elders to talk with us; and that is very hard in the Free Religious Association, for I corresponded with half a dozen of them three years ago and could not get one to appear upon this platform. No, the times have changed, and Christianity, refined and softened, loosening its own barriers, still retaining them in theory but not in practice, cannot be met as before. Its persecution would nerve us, but its toleration disarms us.

Oh, but, my friend Abbot would say to me, "Remember the proposed 'Christian Amendment' to the United States Constitution." If ever anything has happened in America to indicate the truth of what I have been saying, it is the history of that Christian Amendment up to this time; for if anything ever organized Liberal Leagues for us, if anything ever rolled in petitions to Congress and to State Legislatures, it was that little caucus of discontented theologians stranded somewhere out in Ohio. No doubt they found here and there in the denominations some to go along with them, but for one whom they found they sent a dozen another way. But there is another thing, one more final, one higher ground yet to be considered. I don't wish to fight against Christianity or the Christian Church, but only against their excesses and abuses. We cannot spare the Christian Church from the world yet, till it has done its mission and been discharged in the natural way. Spare the Christian Church—why, we cannot even spare the Roman Catholic Church. My friend Abbot was rather hard upon the elder branch just now, I thought, when he said that it had never been anything but an enemy to freedom. Sail down the beautiful Rhine, and you see on either side of you castle after castle, once the terror of every peaceful citizen, but now in ruins. Sail down that river with the remembrance of those iron times haunting your imagination, and you land at last at Cologne, and as you enter the door of that magnificent cathedral you find yourself in the only place that in the Middle Ages protected the freedom of mankind against those robber barons.

No matter if in after times it became a tyranny; all organizations run that risk sooner or later; no breadth saves them wholly. We may have a tyranny in this organization sometime or other, though it will not be till we get some other president. All these organizations are dangerous,—theological, scientific, no matter what. And yet remember how, at a much later time, when among our early American colonies there were but two in which freedom of religious thought was distinctly recognized from the outset,—the Quaker colony of Rhode Island, and the Roman Catholic colony of Maryland. And even at this time, looking at the vast work of the Roman Catholic Church, looking at the shoals of Irish emigrants pouring upon our shores, these young girls scattered one by one into every family, unprotected, unguided, each with nothing on earth between her and ruin except what the traditions of her Church keep alive in her heart,—who can say that he would, if he could do it by a single waving of his hand, extinguish even the Roman Catholic Church from the world?

And as we cannot say it of that, of course one cannot say it of the Christendom of which the Roman Catholic Church is but one sect. It is easy to see the faults of an old institution that has the sins of ages accumulated on its head. Don't let us forget that after all there are certain things for which the Church has stood and still stands—for which, as yet, even that new science of to-day, which Mr. Abbot loves so much, has not yet stood,—the spiritual realities, the heart of man, the love, the patience, the meekness, the trust, so long cherished by Christians, not yet developed by the modern science that threatens it. We talk about the superiority and dignity of the scientific method. Was there ever an old school theologian who hated Arminianism with a more good, thorough-going, almost unquestioning, hatred than our dear Agassiz hated Darwinism? We talk about the quarrels of theologians,—why, the one natural history magazine of New England was filled, for months after months, with the quarrels of the scientific men in regard to the bones of a single animal, with a long name, which was dug up in Colorado; and they carried it so far that the editor had to shut down on them at last, and let them print extra leaves at their own expense, and their angry controversy only died as their pockets grew empty. It is easy to see the great results that science is bringing us, but remember that religion, even the Christian type of religion itself, is giving us also a great deal. Science, secularism, give us the North American and the New York Nation,—periodicals of great intellectual value, but whose maxim is not, as our friend Frothingham quoted, the Irishman's, "Wherever you see a head hit it," but, "Wherever you see a heart hit it." It is, on the other hand, Christianity, that still gives us newspapers like the New York Independent and the Christian Union, that scatter by tens of thousands through the nation such a breadth and liberality of doctrine that the Independent was criticising THE INDEX a while ago for stealing its thunder. Secular science gives us Harvard University, and no woman inside its doors. The only person on the Board of Overseers who wanted to have them there was the only doctor of divinity on the Board of Overseers, and there he is. [Pointing to Rev. James Freeman Clarke, who sat on the platform.] But Evangelical religion gave us Oberlin College and the Boston University, which know no distinction of sex in knowledge.

No, I cannot see as yet that science is so far displacing Christianity as to make Christianity legitimately a dead letter to the world. The time may come when equal intellect, with more of heart, equal thought, with more of tenderness, shall give us something before which the Christianity of to-day, or of all days, shall find itself but an incomplete thing, and shall withdraw itself so peacefully that it shall not need the word "anti" to dispel it.

And yet, for the reasons already given, I can see no consistent position for many of us except that which might be called "Extra-Christian," simply outside of Christianity, because we cannot confine ourselves to it,—an attitude taking in Christianity, with what is best of all religions of the world. But for Christianity itself I have not merely the same sympathy that I should have for Buddhism if I was within its temples, but a nobler sympathy as for a still nobler religion. When the first large company of colonists came to the Massachusetts Colony, it is reported that, as they left England, the clergyman who was the leader of them looked back over the stern of the vessel, and said, alluding to the earlier Pilgrims who had settled Plymouth, and who had called themselves Separatists, "We will not say, as the Separatists did, 'Farewell, Babylon! Farewell, Rome!' But we will say, 'Farewell, dear England! Farewell, the Church of God in England, and all the Christian friends there!'" And as we look back upon the Christian Church, if we leave it, I see no reason why we should not echo the loving words of that farewell.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES:

SEPTEMBER, 1874.

A pitiful cry comes from the East; Christianity is fallen, is fallen; the Hindus shake the head at her, the Mussulman and the Buddhist pass her by unmoved. We, freethinkers, have long pointed out that the Christianizing of India has been the most palpable of failures, but we scarcely hoped to hear our strictures reëchoed by the leaders of the Christian camp. We quote, literally, from a document addressed to Convocation by the three Bishops, R. Calcutta, F. Madras, and H. A. Bombay. After expressing their "thankfulness to God that the general intercessions of the past year have borne fruit," they naturally proceed to express a wish to see something of that fruit. "We would urge you to consider that the season is critical. . . . Forces, Christian in their origin, though only partially religious, and predominantly of a civilizing and intellectual kind, are everywhere in operation," and the Bishops look askance at these forces which, however Orthodox in their origin, develop in this aggravatingly intellectual but irreligious manner; carnal reason is taking the bit in its teeth, and the episcopal charioteers do not like the prospect. But there is "balm in Gilead": "Among those original races which have never been Aryanized, and those lower castes of Hinduism whose state is one of great degradation" (where the intellectual and civilizing influences have not spread, in fact), "the labors of the missionaries have not been unrewarded." "In certain parts of India" some few are Christians, "but in India we are dealing with millions, not with thousands, and we should mislead you if we gave you to understand that any deep general impression has been produced, or that the conversion of India is as yet imminent." (Italics are our own.) This is encouraging news for the subscribers to the gigantic missionary societies which annually draw thousands of pounds from the open purses of confiding Christians, and it may also be regarded as a striking testimony to the value of the prayers of the Church. "There is nothing which can at all warrant the opinion that the heart of the people has been largely touched. . . . There is no advance in the direction of faith in Christ, like that which Pliny describes. . . . In fact, looking at the work of missions on the broadest scale, and especially upon that of our own missions" (O most candid Bishops!), "we must confess that, in many cases, their condition is one rather of stagnation than of advance." Then—as indeed might be expected in the uncivilized and uneducated classes which afford the few Christian converts—the morality is low: "The converts too often make such poor progress in the Christian life that they fail to act as leaven in the lump of their countrymen. In particular the missions do not attract to Christ many men of education, not even from among those who have been trained in their own schools. Educated natives, as a general rule, still stand apart from the truth." In India, apparently, as in Europe, Christianity is going down before the glorious tide of advancing knowledge. Not content with thus speaking the truth with such startling candor, the Episcopal trinity give the lie direct to those who prophesy smooth things in Exeter Hall and elsewhere; they state this "to dispel any illusions of marked religious success, which might arise out of the statements and reports of official and other eminent authorities." To complete the sad tale, the "false religions seem lately to have gained some new religious life and energy, and have in some measure become active once more, and even aggressive;" and they are even—poor Christianity—poaching on the degraded castes, the special Christian manor of ignorance and brutality. Of course, a piteous appeal follows for men and money; though why more money should be thrown away on a task confessed to be so entire a failure the sceptical understanding fails to perceive. We can pass on Christianity no satire so keen as that with which the Indian prelates have supplied us. Is it a hoax, penned by some unscrupulous opponent to cast discredit on Christianity, or has it been published by some fraud? Certes, in one way or another, an enemy has done this. The Archbishop of Canterbury adds his testimony to the truth of the above, saying, that though the population of India "is about 180,000,000 of persons, . . . still, with all efforts, not above 318,000 Protestant converts have been made." A convert must be quite a lion in India.

The Bishop of Capetown is the next to say an encouraging word, and to inform us that special efforts are needed to "cope with the Mohammedan propaganda which is being carried on in South Africa." A Mohammedan propaganda means, we must remember, the worship of one God.

Nearer home, a Bishop—he of Lincoln—comes forward to destroy the doctrine of the "resurrection of the flesh," with the astounding assertion (from Christian lips) that cremation will destroy that belief. Alas for the "noble army of martyrs" and their dispersed bodies! The Bishop has no word of comfort for them. It is another reason for urging cremation that we now know, on such good authority, that it will convince good Christian people that flesh and blood do not retain their original character after death. But surely the Bishop of Lincoln might be aroused to a sense of the difficulty of his position by taking him to the side of an open grave whose occupant has lain there for six months. Would that be more easily revivified than a handful of ashes?

A remarkable volume of sermons has appeared from the pen of the late Dr. Lee, of Edinburgh. Their strong common sense is most refreshing, as where he advises any persons suffering from irritability to attend to their digestion rather than to their prayers. It is also encouraging to find Dr. Wallace preaching to a crowded and deeply-interested audience that "faith in God was native to the human spirit apart from the action of any revelation." The age of free thought is dawning in Scotland, and we shall soon have good news from the north of the Tweed.

Mr. Moncure Conway's Sacred Anthology is drawing a good deal of attention in Christian circles, and is being commented on by many religious newspapers; it will be preëminently useful if it succeeds in convincing Christians that Revelation is coextensive with Humanity, the corollary of which statement is, that there is nothing "supernatural" in any "sacred" book.

A remarkable example of the Christian style of carrying on war has come before the readers of a provincial paper. The well-known Dr. Parker was the subject of a sketch, and, as a public man, his preaching and his work were criticised. The clergyman, however fond of publicity, was too thin-skinned to bear criticism, and accordingly wrote to complain of the article; instead of meeting and contradicting its misstatements—if misstatements indeed they were,—he goes out of his way to pen a cruel and unmanly sneer at the supposed poverty of his critic. We do not mention this in order to blame Dr. Parker, who was only availing himself of a weapon consecrated by ages of Christian use, but simply that we may remind all freethinkers that our higher morality does not allow such personal attacks as these, even in retaliation, and that foul language and unmanly insinuations should be left entirely to the Christians.

Lady Amberley was faithful in death to the principles she professed during life, and offers one more proof of the absurdity of the taunt, "You will think very differently when you come to die." She expressed a wish to be cremated after death, a request it was unfortunately impossible to carry out, and she was buried in "unconsecrated" ground without either religious ceremony or childish ostentation.

The extreme parties, "high" and "low," are doing our work for us with commendable vigor. They turn Christianity sometimes into derision and sometimes into an offence to refinement and right feeling. Of the former class are the following specimens. At the Agricultural Show at Bedford, a placard was stuck up near the sheep-pens,

BEHOLD THE LAMB

Of God who taketh away the sins of the world.

We can imagine the comments of the profane. In the Literary Churchman is reviewed a book by a "A Layman," who speaks of "the hoary head of the Almighty" as a literal fact, and describes Moses as seeing God's gigantic figure, towering "eighty feet high." Of the second and more offensive class, we cull the following flowers from Church papers: Oliver Cromwell, John Bunyan, John Stuart Mill, and the devil, are classed together as a modern quartette of worthies; a church reformed by Parliament is spoken of as an "abominable and damnable institution;" Sir W. Harcourt's statement regarding an Establishment is "disgusting and degrading;" we hear of "regal infidelity, archiepiscopal Erastianism, and church association lunacy;" we are told that Mr. Gladstone's view of the Church is "as low and grovelling" as Mr. Disraeli's. These papers, by disgusting the educated and the refined, are helping to undermine Christianity, and are most useful as missionaries. Freethinkers would do well, therefore, to circulate them as widely as possible.

The Public Worship Bill, grossly unjust as it is to one party in the many-colored Church, will do us good service, for it will aid in crushing out the sacerdotal party, our deadliest foe; priestcraft and liberalism cannot live side by side; the freeman and the priest are natural enemies; one or the other must go down: the battle will be a sharp struggle, but it must be fought; the darkness, in which alone the authority of the priest can flourish, cannot exist beside that light of knowledge and free inquiry which is the only air in which liberty can breathe.

The remarkable book entitled Supernatural Religion, which is now preparing for a second edition, is one of the keenest thrusts delivered in this century at the authority of all "revelation." The author, after a most acute essay on miracles, passes on to criticise the evidence offered for the existence of the four Gospels during the first and second centuries. It is not too much to say that he completely disposes of the idea that the earlier fathers possessed or venerated the records we now possess under names of the apostolic age. With rare candor he lays the whole evidence before his readers, and leaves them to draw their own conclusions. The volume concludes with a clever critique on the Fourth Gospel, and an eloquent plea for natural, as against supernatural, religion. Men's minds are much exercised regarding the authorship of these two clever volumes, and one could wish that the writer would boldly sign his name to a work which is too noble to be a "blow in the dark." This work is more than a passing "sign of the times:" it marks an era in the evolution of religious thought.

Notes from Roman Catholic countries remind us now and then that—with all our complaining about home superstition—we are not so utterly silly as some of our neighbors. At Aix-la-Chapelle, in this nineteenth century, they have been exposing "for veneration" a collection of odds—very odd—and ends. A dress of the Virgin Mary, a cloth which covered the charger on which lay John the Baptist's severed head, swaddling clothes of Jesus, blood-stained cloth which girdled Christ's waist on the cross. We rub our eyes as we read, marvelling that men should be such fools; surely the dawn must be near when the night is so dark.

But we have worse news than this childish mummery: in Mexico a man and his wife have been burned for sorcery, and others are threatened. This is what the Church still does in lands where it can have its own way; it does not forget: we, in England, are sometimes half imposed on by a kind of spurious Christianity, which speaks softly and smiles sweetly; we, freethinkers, have forced it to hide its bad side; free thought is in the air, and it moulds Christianity into a fairer form than the Church approves. It is well that we should see sometimes what Christianity is when it is not cowed and restrained by the presence of a freedom stronger than itself.

Our last Roman Catholic item comes from America, and refers to a priest named Father Terry. This startling product of Mother Church has been delivering some lectures on the "Poetry of Genesis." After various quaint remarks on the creation, he arrives at the Deluge, and runs his tonsured head against the difficulty of the animals going to and returning from the ark. "It is rather remarkable how the different animals, said to have been preserved in the ark, reappeared again in the very parts of the world to which they must have been originally indigenous. Some theologians thought that they were transported to the ark and back by angels. Just think of an elephant sitting jauntily on the shoulder of a seraph, and of apes borne grandly in the air on the wings of cherubim!" This is indeed a shaking amid the dry bones, for if a Roman priest begins to use his reason he will not long stay in Rome; the scandalized bishop of this very irreverent, though humorous, priest has, of course, relieved him of his functions. Roman discipline is still not an empty threat.

In Germany the religious war is being waged fiercely, and the issue of the combat remains uncertain; the bishops have the courage of their opinions, and prefer fine and imprisonment to submission, while the "iron hand" shows no sign of loosing its grasp. The conflict is an unsatisfactory one, because religion and politics are inextricably mixed up, and Prince Bismarck is accused of religious persecution where he really only seems to be defending the State against conspirators who hide their plots under the cassock of the priest and the monk. But all liberals must hope that the very fatherland of free thought will shake off the Roman chains.

France gives us no "signs" this month. From Spain we hear that the Church is sheathing her claws, for the nonce, and Don Carlos promises not to re-establish the Inquisition if he wins his way.

Both in America and in England a conflict is going on about the use of the word "Christian;" and much disturbance is taking place in Unitarian circles. Some members of the Unitarian body, being well on in the ranks of free thought, fidget rather under the restriction implied in the name "Christian;" others are most anxious to retain it, and a good deal of bitterness is arising on the subject. We may hope that so utterly unimportant a point will be allowed to drop quietly, instead of becoming a bone of contention among friends and fellow-workers. The name is getting thoroughly discredited by these squabbles, and an American paper quaintly remarks that "Christian is a title that just now is lying around loose." It is a "sign" that we are growing strong that we can afford to scrutinize so closely our neighbors' dress; but we shall do well not to make molehills into mountains.—Published in tract form by Thomas Scott, Esq., of London.

TWO INTERESTING LETTERS.

MESSRS. EDITORS:—

I made one of the congregation assembled in the Unitarian Chapel of this city on Sunday morning last. The sermon, by the pastor, was in some respects quite remarkable. For in the course of it Mr. Potter, with a candor and unreserve which did credit to his manly integrity of thought and feeling, advanced a platform of religious belief in harmony with the most radical hypotheses of the present day.

He said that he accepted heartily and fully the doctrine lately broached by Tyndall, that matter has in itself the promise and the potency of every form and quality of life; that he believed matter to be eternal; and the word "God" to be only a name for the potency of life abiding in matter. He added that his prayers are only the expressions of his aspirations and longings, not addressed to any conscious being; and remarked incidentally that these views had been the basis of his preaching and conduct of public worship for several years.

The sermon appeared to be extempore. If it were so, it is unfortunate. Because declarations of such a character from such a man and in such a connection affect the whole public, and, in a sense, become legitimately public property. They are sure to be repeated, discussed, and criticised; and it is eminently desirable that the friends of the speaker should be able to recur authoritatively to the very words he uttered.

But Mr. Potter evidently did not mean to be mistaken. His statements were admirably clear as well as bold. He left no margin for misapprehension or misrepresentation. He had evidently taken his stand thoughtfully and deliberately, and held himself ready to abide the issue.

I confess, Messrs. Editors, that I was deeply moved as I listened, and my thoughts are continually reverting to those remarkable utterances. I ask room for one or two comments and deductions.

Would it not be judicious for the Unitarian society to change the form of that part of the public service which is called "Prayer"? If it is in future to be considered as only a means of self-excitation, a medium for the expression of aspiration and longing, the existence of no Supreme Being being recognized on whom we are dependent, the use of such phrases of address as "O God," "Our Heavenly Father," and the like, seems to be inconsistent and irrelevant. I can imagine that it must be specially distasteful to one of Mr. Potter's truthfulness of spirit. It must appear like an unworthy concession to existing prejudices. When Mr. Abbot preached in Mr. Potter's stead, not long ago, he did not engage in any exercise like that of prayer. He gave fair scope to his convictions.

Again, if there is no room in the universe for a Supreme Being outside of matter, how can there be room for any spirit of man outside of matter? When we die, all that was of us materially still remains on earth in the shape of gases, lime, mould, etc., endowed with all its original potency, and ready to take on new forms of life. Nothing has escaped; nothing been parted with. Where then is there the slightest room for a doctrine of immortality, for a conscious existence beyond the grave?

Tyndall and Darwin may be the evangels of absolute truth and a new dispensation. But if so, then the ideas suggested by such words as God, eternity, heaven, immortality—according to their accepted signification,—must disappear from among the conceptions of mankind. CHANNING.

—New Bedford Mercury of September 16.

MESSRS. EDITORS:—

In your paper of this morning, a correspondent, over the signature of "Channing," makes some strictures on my sermon of last Sunday, and in doing so gives a view of the sermon which in one or two particulars I desire to correct; for, though the writer evidently meant to be just, and wrote in a spirit sufficiently kind, on some important points he gives an interpretation of the discourse in which I do not recognize my own ideas or expressions. The fault was perhaps mine, in not stating my views with requisite clearness; or possibly the writer listened through preconceptions of his own, and so drew inferences from what I said which he supposed I would draw, but which were really his and not mine. The sermon, it is true, was extemporaneous, and I have nothing to depend upon now for recalling it but my own memory and my knowledge of my own beliefs.

Yet I am very confident that I could not have spoken of prayer as "not addressed to any conscious being." What I did say, as nearly as I can remember my words, was, that, with my conception of Deity, prayer could not be a petition for gifts addressed to an almighty Monarch supposed to be sitting apart from the world on a distant throne in the heavens, with the expectation that the gifts would come by some supernatural process without the effort of man; but that it is the natural reaching out of the human soul in aspiration and longing toward the Infinite Power and Life that pervades the whole universe both of Nature and man,—the divine energy and vitality coming into our natural faculties, and working by natural process through them, just in proportion as they are open to it and observe the laws of their existence. To my critic this view of Infinite Being and of man's relation thereto may seem equivalent to saying that Deity is "not a conscious being;" but to my mind it is not so. I freely admit that my understanding fails to grasp a definite conception of a being of infinite consciousness utterly distinct from the forms of finite consciousness; yet it is necessary also to admit that in the ultimate source and cause of things there must be at least the potency of consciousness, as of all other phenomena that have appeared in the world's evolution,—and hence on the question of divine consciousness I take no attitude of denial. But into this question—a metaphysical rather than a practical one—I did not enter in the discourse, and will not enter now. It is impossible that to the finite mind there should not be mystery concerning the Supreme Power and cause. For one, after all revelations, I am compelled reverently to say with the old Hebrew writer, "Lo, these are parts of his ways, but how little a portion is heard of him!" Yet of our relation to Him I can say with Paul, "In Him we live, and move, and have our being."

I wish it to be observed, too, that the phrase describing prayer "as only a means of self-excitation" is not mine. I by no means assert that the power which prayer makes available resides wholly in the human faculties. I believe in a Divine Energy beyond the human faculties as well as in them, and that the two are so intimately and organically connected that it is impossible to draw the line where the human ends and the divine begins. So believing, one cannot speak of prayer as mere "self-excitation" or "self-elevation," since divine elements enter into the very substance of the soul, and the human faculties are in natural communication, with the ever present Energy and Life that is the vital source and sustenance of the universe. The office of prayer is to keep open these lines of communication and increase the influx of vital supplies of mental and moral power that flow through them. With this view of prayer I see no inconsistency in the public expression that goes by that name in the Sunday service, but rather great possible use and beauty. The form and method and occasions of prayer will doubtless change in the future as they have in the past; but that man, seeing, as he does, more and more every day his intimate relationship to the eternal, all-pervading power of the universe, should ever sink into a prayerless spirit, I cannot believe.

In conclusion let me say that I had no thought of "taking a stand" that was new or "bold" in this discourse. To those much accustomed to hear me I imagine the utterances did not seem so unfamiliar and remarkable as they appear to your correspondent. Professor Tyndall's address, as quoted from, may have given new emphasis to the thought, but essentially the same ideas of God and of man's relation to him were expressed in the first sermon I ever wrote. Nor would I have it understood that in endorsing Tyndall's doctrine of matter I endorsed the interpretation of it as an atheistic doctrine. It is not atheism in the least, as the address in other parts and in the sentence quoted bears witness. For whence, as I asked in the sermon, the "promise" and the "potency" of matter? Here is the element of mind, or of what is commonly called spirit, recognized as eternal with matter. It is no dead matter of which Tyndall speaks, but matter instinct with life and ceaseless energy; matter, as he has elsewhere said, through which in all its transformations may be traced "permanence of power." What is this "permanence of power" but another name for Deity?

Yours truly, WM. J. POTTER.

September 16.

—New Bedford Mercury of Sept. 17.

A NEW SATIRE.

A clever production from the author of The Fight at Dame Europa's School is now in process of reprinting from the recent English edition, and will be issued here early next week. The book appears anonymously, as did its predecessor, which the reader of recent literature will remember was most unfavorably received in England, appearing as it did during the excitement of the Franco-German war, and ridiculing the national attitude of neutrality. Every Englishman with a neutral heart beating in his burly breast felt personally aggrieved and insulted by that satire, and it was after a fashion suppressed. Fortunately for the author it appeared unfathered, as have all recent English satires, and in fact as works of that description usually appear. The wisdom of this reticence regarding the personal identity of satirical authorship is seen, inasmuch as it enables the author to remain quiet in his retreat, to witness the storm of opposition his work may have called out, without being destroyed by it. When the sky clears he may emerge to enjoy the light that he has done something toward helping on, and perhaps to receive some honor from his mollified countrymen.

The present work bears the rather startling and aggressive title of Modern Christianity, a Civilized Heathenism, notwithstanding which, the publishers say that orders have been already received from clergymen of undoubted Orthodoxy. This information is not surprising, because the book is so skilfully written as to be commended to every person with a taste for theological controversy, whatever his particular opinions or pet prejudices may be. If the radical religionist finds something to approve in the audacious prefatory assertion that revealed religion is on its trial before the world, not for some trifling blemishes which a little mild correction may mend, but for its very life; if his rationalistic soul revels in the vigorous satire and earnest protest of the critical Parsee, while he argues against Christianity because of the worldliness of its disciples, the conservative Chris tian may point to the fact that the heathen was finally converted to the Christianity he attacked, by finding the personal witness of one devoted life to testify to its beauty and truth. The full preface states the views of the writer fairly and frankly. If the professed religion of English men and women survives the scrutinies of the next century, it will be because the profession and practice of Christians become less discordant. Solemn beliefs ought either to be acted out or else abjured. As it is, Christian women drive and dress, and Christian men hunt and dine; and Christian children, who may die to-morrow, are told to enjoy themselves while they can; and Christian priests and Christian bishops join the happy throng, and say that it is all right and proper, and laugh with the loudest, and joke with the funniest, and would think it the very worst possible taste if some wicked unbeliever were humbly to suggest a doubt whether any gentleman or lady present had one single thought in common with the persecuted, despised, and sorrowing Christ. Because he was poor, and bade his followers be like him, is there anything in the world to prevent a Christian bishop from taking rank among dukes and earls, and enjoying an income of fifteen thousand pounds a year?

The further contents of the volume consist of some narrative, and much conversation between the parson, who holds a small town-living in the south of England, and esteems himself pretty comfortably off in having good health, kind neighbors, and work that suits him, besides the ability to drive his friends from the railway station in his own trap, and give them a very fair bottle of claret after dinner, and the grandson of Sir Jamjeebhoy Curtsetjee, who received a baronetcy from a Christian government for having amassed an enormous fortune in opium smuggling. The grandfather was, no doubt, a rigorous Parsee, but his descendant, being a younger brother, and in no danger of succession to the family honors, has had the good sense to abbreviate his name to Curtis. He has also drifted out of the ancient tenets of his faith as a Parsee, and into believing in nothing whatever. He has read, with considerable diligence, the Bible and other Christian books, and is distinguished among the members of his own learned profession at Lincoln's Inn, for the remarkable vigor and acuteness of his mind. The parson and his "heathen guest" were seated in the former's study after dinner, during which they had drunk as much wine as was good for them, and were making themselves very particularly comfortable over a couple of long clay pipes, and a "small September fire," when the conversation accidentally turns upon Christianity. Contrary to the usual custom, the argument is continued without anger on either side, though any reader can see that the heathen sceptic and critic gets the better of his opponent while the discussion lasts. It is only when the parson bethinks himself that faith is, after all, to its possessor the best justification it can have for existing, that the talk is discontinued, and both go together to visit a man named Ainslee, who has been commonly accounted mad because he so closely followed the precepts of his Master as to give away a large fortune and live on a pittance afterwards. In this Ainslee, the easy, good-natured, pleasure-loving parson finds rebuke for his own inconsistency, and the heathen finds the personal witness to the truth that he has been crying for, and is converted. This conversion of the sceptic is a master-stroke of skill, and proves the writer's title to be called a most diplomatic artist. Nevertheless, some of the words that he spoke before his conversion will linger in the mind. These, for instance:—

"You have made an egregious mistake in calling this country of yours a Christian country. It is a genuine heathen country. Its principles are heathen; its policy is heathen; its laws are heathen. Look at that newspaper on the table. From the first column to the last it is utterly heathen; and it forms the expression of public opinion throughout the land. I am not abusing it. I delight in it. I read my Times every day, and my Saturday every week. I don't always agree with what they say, though I usually find that, on most subjects of general interest, they take a sound and sensible view, but it is always a purely heathen view. The editors themselves would not pretend that it is otherwise. It is the view of writers who leave Christ entirely out of the question, who would never dream of stopping to consider what Christ might have to say about this or that. They would laugh at you if you suggested such a thing. The public press is concerned with the rights of the country, and the temporal welfare of mankind. It utterly ignores Christ and Christianity. And yet you Christians read it, regulate your opinion by it, and suffer it to influence insensibly your thoughts, your principles, your moral tone. And all the while you cannot doubt that the modern newspaper's discussion of things is on the heathen principle of common sense, and not on the Christian principle of divine revelation. The very fact that you parsons allow the Times to be brought into your houses shows plainly enough that you have abandoned Christianity and drifted quietly into civilization."

The satirical method of treating the abuses, faults, or foibles of individuals and institutions seems to be much in favor among English writers. A short time ago Ginx's Baby appeared to awaken English sympathies for that infant plebeian and unfortunate outcast; then Little Hodge followed, as an attempt to solve the problem as to what should be done with him. Between the two, and in strong contrast, was presented the picture of aristocratic life as seen in the favored and fortunate Lord Bantam. Then came The Fight at Dame Europa's School, and now that there is an end to the active strife among nations, the theological waters are to be stirred by Modern Christianity, A Civilized Heathenism, which, although more serious in tone, perhaps, and more polemic in style, is yet to be ranked in the same category.—Advertiser.

THE GREAT AMERICAN CHAPLAIN.

When President Grant sent his own minister and the United States Senate's Chaplain, a year or two ago, upon a roving commission round the world, with instructions to inspect that portion of it particularly in which American Consulates are situated, the full force of what was to come from his travels was by no means appreciated. There had been no similar credentials conferred upon any man since the days of John Tyler. That functionary accredited a Great American Traveller much in the same way. When the Senate found this out, it tried to stop him. But he had already started, and, telegraphs not being then in existence, all that could be done was to send another man in pursuit. He proved too shrewd in the end for those who were after him. He kept on travelling, and would not be overtaken. He never stopped, indeed, till the sands of President Tyler's official life had run out, circumnavigating the globe more than once with an alacrity that bid defiance to those on his trail. Dr. Newman has fallen upon a period when Senators are compliant, not obstructive. He journeys leisurely, secure in the favor of the Cæsar at home who compels Senators to his wishes. His mind is not unnaturally bent upon conferring something in reciprocation for the great boon he is enjoying; and finding himself in a little private paradise of his own through the President's bounty, the most natural thing in the world was that, when he reached the Holy Land, his thoughts should have reverted to that original Paradise from the expulsion from which the very few frailties that beset even his great patron were derived. So he said to himself, off-hand, "Go to! I will seek this Paradise. I will re-discover it, and I will thus further immortalize the reign of my already immortal guide, philosopher, and friend." That he found it easily, there is not much occasion to wonder. A man so ecstatically situated walks right into Paradise by instinct, whenever he reaches its region. But this was only the beginning of the Scripture verification that Dr. Newman was destined to afford. He bearded all the lions that were left in Daniel's den, and he even sought to reach the crumbling heights of the Tower of Babel. He has only seen the former spot, but he has actually got in his trunk a brick from the latter, which he proposes to add to the sacred and profane stores of this article already in the President's possession. The Hartford Courant, fitly impressed with the value of this experience and these trophies, proposes prosaically to utilize the stupendous results of the chaplain's mission. It assumes, as a matter of course, that, when he walked the Garden of Eden, he did not fail to cut a slip from the tree of knowledge. This, it urges, should be placed in the Washington Conservatory, where nothing is more needed than a plant that shall teach the difference between good and evil. As regards his visit to the den of lions, it will enable him to report usefully as to its resemblance to the House of Representatives in the days when Butler and Farnsworth used to go upon the rampage. The destiny of the brick from the Tower of Babel is thus foreshadowed: "Whether this brick is intended for the Patent Office or for the Washington Monument we are not informed, and it is of no consequence. The brick is of great value, being stamped with the name of the maker, and warranted genuine. Dr. Newman deserves much of the country for bringing home this interesting relic of a tower that is the prototype of our monument to George Washington; both are touching spectacles of man's impious efforts to reach heaven by material means in a materialistic age."—Boston Saturday Gazette.

An amusing story of an English nobleman, recently deceased, is told by the "Man About Town," in the English Sporting Gazette. We give it in his own words: "The duke," he says, "was once in church, no matter where, when a collection was announced for some charitable object. The plate, or bag, or whatever it might be, began to go round, and the duke carefully put his hand into his pocket and took out a florin, which he laid on the pew before him ready for transfer to the plate. Beside him sat a little snob, who, noticing this action, imitated it by ostentatiously laying a sovereign alongside the ducal florin. This was too much for his grace, who dipped his hand into his pocket again and pulled out another florin which he laid by the side of the first. The little snob followed suit by laying another sovereign beside the first. His grace quietly added a third florin, which was capped by a third sovereign on the part of the little snob, Out came a fourth florin to swell the duke's donation; then the little snob triumphantly laid three sovereigns at once upon the board. The duke, not to be beaten, produced three florins. Just at this moment the plate arrived. The little snob took up his handful of sovereigns and ostentatiously rattled them into the plate, then turned defiantly toward his rival, as who should say, "I think that takes the shine out of you." Fancy his chagrin when the duke with a grim smile put one florin into the plate and quietly swept the remaining six back into his pocket. His grace used to chuckle when he told that story, and I think on the whole he had the best of it."

A noted Baptist politician and divine, who was an expert at a horse trade, is reported to have sold a horse to one of his deacons. A day or two afterward the deacon called on him, when the following colloquy took place:—

Deacon N.—Elder K., that horse you sold me is stove in the fore-shoulder.

Elder K.—Eh, Deacon? If that be so, I advise you to say nothing about it. You may want to sell the animal, and it would injure the sale of him.

The deacon withdrew.

Poetry.

A STUDY FOR THE CRITICS.

BY JAMES MAURICE THOMPSON.

A great king once, so I have heard,
Went out to hunt a single bird
Whose voice should be so sweet and strong,
So fraught with all the tricks of song,
That they who heard it would confess
The king's fine taste and perfectness
Of judgment. And it came to pass
That where the wind poured through the grass,
Fringing a brooklet's sinuous way,
He saw a bird demure and gray,
Of awkward mien and sleepy-eyed,
Bathing in the crystal tide.

"O bird!" the king said, looking down,
"A monarch I of high renown
Am searching for a singing bird
Whose voice, the sweetest ever heard,
Shall cheer me in my hours of gloom,
And coax my dead loves back to bloom."

"Take me, O king!" the gray bird said,
"A sad and lonely life I've led,
Singing with not a soul to hear,
Pining for but one word of cheer."

"Thou!" cried the king, half in surprise,
A sudden anger in his eyes—
"Thou insignificant, nameless bird!
Thou ninny! Hast thou never heard
Of my grand palace and my throne
Of pearl and gold and precious stone?
Thou gray, sad-eyed, presumptuous thing!
Thou entertain a court and king!
Begone! Say not another word;
My cage must hold a royal bird!"

There came a silken sound of wings
Above the brooklet's murmurings;
The wind fell still upon the grass
To watch the gray bird upward pass;
The sunlight milder, softer grew;
The leaves took on a tender hue—
As if all Nature, gently stirred,
Bade farewell to the going bird.

The monarch stood with lips compressed,
Regret and choler in his breast,
While from the sky, well-sent and strong,
Came back a Parthian shaft of song.

—Lippincott's Magazine for September.

NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS TO INDEX STOCK.

Mrs. F. W. Christern,	New York City,	One	share,	$100
Richard B. Westbrook,	Sonman, Pa.	"	"	100
R. C. Spencer,	Milwaukee, Wis.	Two	"	200
R. W. Howes,	Boston, Mass.	One	"	100
Chas. W. Story,	Boston, Mass.	"	"	100
E. W. Meddaugh,	Detroit, Mich.	Five	"	500
Jacob Hoffner,	Cumminsville, O.	One	"	100
John Weiss,	Boston, Mass.	"	"	100
W. C. Russel,	Ithaca, N. Y.	"	"	100
A. W. Leggett,	Detroit, Mich.	"	"	100
B. F. Dyer,	Boston, Mass.	"	"	100
James Purinton,	Lynn, Mass.	"	"	100
F. A. Nichols,	Lowell, Mass.	"	"	100
J. S. Palmer,	Portland, Me.	"	"	100
Robt. Ormiston,	Brooklyn, N.Y.	"	"	100
Mrs. A. L. Richmond,	Lowell, Mass.	"	"	100
Mrs. Benj. Ireson,	Lynn, Mass.	"	"	100
J. E. Oliver,	Ithaca, N.Y.	"	"	100
E. H. Aldrich,	Providence, R.I.	"	"	100
Geo. L. Clark,	Providence, R.I.	"	"	100
W. M. Jackson,	Providence, R.I.	Two	"	200
Mrs. E. B. Chase,	Valley Falls, R.I.	"	"	100
L. F. Garvin,	Lonsdale, R.I.	One	"	100
James Damon,	Ipswich, Mass.	"	"	100
Joseph A. Barker,	Providence, R.I.	"	"	100

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING SEPTEMBER 19.

New England News Co., $19.84; George H. Foster, $1.15; Mary Adair, 25 cents; A. W. Kelsey, 50 cents; J. K. Hawley, $2.70; D. K. Hall, $3; William Merritt, $5; Herbert Fletcher, $1.50; Dr. Tomlinson, $3; E. S. Beckley, $3; C. D. Childs, $3; C. P. Robeson, $3; T. B. Skinner, $3; W. J. Godfrey, $2; M. W. Stubbs, $1; E. R. Harris, $3; Horace White, $2.25; J. J. Brackett, $3; E. W. Bonham, $2; E. R. Spurrier, $1; L. C. Sleeper, $5.20; M. S. Clark, $5; Mrs. Fuller, $5.25; S. H. Richardson, $5; Samuel Townsend, $1.50; A. M. Shaw, $1; W. Wickersham, $3; J. C. Allen, $1; R. D. M. Turner, $5; Magnus Pflaum, $3; C. H. Brigham, $2.25; R. Wallace, $3; F. Bradley, $5.25; Benj. Cobb, Jr., $3; C. D. Cook, $2.25; J. M. Davis, $2.30; M. Delano, $2; S. S. Wermott, $3; Mary E. Nye, 50 cents; T. J. Crouse, $2; Clara C. Desaner, $1.60; Mr. Jones, $1; R. P. Hallowell, 49 cents; W. P. Wesselhoeft, 40 cents; L. B. Sayles, 20 cents; George Frodsham, $2.25; Francis Jenkins, $3; Andrew High, 50 cents; Charles M. Cuyler, $2; W. H. Walworth, $4.50; E. M. Moore, $3.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of The Index which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—Postage on The Index is five cents per quarter, dating from receipt of the first number, payable in advance at the place of delivery.

N. B.—When writing about a former remittance, always give the date of such remittance as exactly as possible.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your Index mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY
BY
THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,
AT
NO. 1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.
Toledo Office: No. 35 MONROE STREET. Julius T. Frey, Agent and Clerk.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, ... Editor.
ABRAM WALTER STEVENS, ... Associate Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, THOMAS WENTWORTH HIGGINSON, WILLIAM J. POTTER, RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Rev. CHARLES VOYSEY (England), Prof. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN (England), Editorial Contributors.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

BOSTON, SEPTEMBER 24, 1874.

SUNDAY LECTURES.—The Editors of THE INDEX will lecture occasionally on Sundays, if desired, within a convenient distance of Boston.

PROF. TYNDALL'S late address is now for sale at this office, in the form of a neat pamphlet of 72 pages, with large type. Price, 25 cents.

THE INDEX will be sent to any name not now on our mail-list until January 1, 1876, on receipt of $3.00 in advance. Here is a chance to receive the paper for fifteen months at the price of twelve months. Please tell your friends and neighbors of this liberal offer, and help us to increase our circulation.

RABBI SONNESCHEIN forbore to print his speech at the May meeting of the Free Religious Association in the columns of his own paper, the American Israelite, in advance of its publication in the Association's Annual Report. We would respectfully express our appreciation of his delicacy in this matter.

MR. EDWARD M. DAVIS, of Philadelphia, requests us to copy this statement, which we do on his authority: "The government loans to the National Banks over three hundred and fifty millions of dollars without interest! and allows the banks interest on the securities deposited for the loan!! Send no one to Congress who approves of this injustice."

THE Free Sunday Advocate and National Sunday League Record, in its issue of August, 1874, republishes an editorial article from THE INDEX of July 2, entitled "The Danger of Dead Letter Laws." We notice, also, that the same monthly has adopted THE INDEX motto, "Liberty and Light," which it puts in quotation marks on its first page. It is necessary to state that it is published in London, as otherwise the Independent will locate it at random on the prairies.

WE MUST ask some of those who send articles criticising our views to be more careful not to misrepresent them. It is a sheer waste of space to print papers to which the only reply possible is that they fight a man of straw. Take pains to understand us before you fly to arms. The closer your argument and the nearer home you strike, so much the readier are we to publish what you write; but it is tiresome and profitless to all concerned to mistake the points at issue. Before you begin to write, pray read carefully enough to know exactly what the error to be corrected is. Some otherwise good communications fail to get printed because we cannot spare room for refutations of what has never been said.

AN EXTRAORDINARY ARTICLE on "Liberty of Speech," showing the secret intent of the Christian Amendment party, is contained in the Christian Statesman of August 8. The editor takes the ground that, if any man's "teachings and efforts" "in any way weaken the foundations of law and good government," then it "becomes the imperative duty of the State to suppress both deed and word." Now we credit the Statesman with the courage of its opinions, and with this belief solicit a reply to three plain questions:—

1. Do our own teachings and efforts in any way weaken the foundations of law and good government?

2. Is it the duty of the State to suppress THE INDEX accordingly?

3. Would the editor of the Statesman, if he represented the State and had the power, suppress it?

Will the Statesman please answer these questions briefly and to the point, as we would answer any similar questions it might choose to put?

THE THREE PLEAS.

The three addresses made at the last May meeting of the Free Religious Association on the true relation of Free Religion to Christianity are now fairly before the readers of THE INDEX, the last of them being contained in our present issue. In the second of these addresses, republished last week, we stated (with all the incompleteness of an extempore speech) our own view of the question in an affirmative form, embracing these chief positions:—

1. That the true definition of Christianity is the first point to be determined, and that the consensus of all organized Christian bodies, more particularly Orthodox Christian bodies, ought to determine it. That is, Christianity should be conceded to be what the great Christian Church as a whole declares it to be,—the conflicting views of the dissenting, small minority of "heretics" not being entitled, on any just ground, to be taken as the definition of it.

2. That, defined by this consensus of the Church as a whole, Christianity rests on the principle of Authority and consists in the system of faith and practice known from the beginning as Orthodoxy.

3. That, notwithstanding all that is noble and beautiful in it, this Christian system has steadily opposed all mental and spiritual freedom which has not first submitted to its own authority; and therefore, by the inherent necessity of its nature, it has been one continuous crime against some of the most precious rights and interests of mankind.

4. That, in consequence of Christianity having thus identified itself with spiritual slavery, every free mind is necessarily, though incidentally and perhaps unconsciously, Anti-Christian; that to live for freedom is to oppose its opposite by the very nature of things; and that Free Religion, however some of its friends may temporarily delude themselves, is and must be Anti-Christian in fact.

5. That the principle of spiritual freedom, meaning the full natural exercise of all human faculties unrestricted by any unnatural or arbitrary conditions, is fundamentally positive, not negative, in its essence; and the relation of antagonism to Christianity, which is involved in the central principles of Free Religion, is purely incidental, and merely results from the fact that Christianity is essentially a restriction of freedom by person-worship.

6. That every one imbued with the spirit of Free Religion, whether he fully comprehends or not the real drift of his own thought and the real influence of his own life, is Anti-Christian, and nothing else; and any middle ground is logically impossible between the two principles at stake. In a word, all we who go for Free Religion are Anti-Christian in reality, as all the rest of the world sees; and we cannot help ourselves. Why not, then, see and acknowledge the fact?

Now it will not be taken amiss, we are confident, if we say something at this time by way of examination of what Mr. Calthrop and Col. Higginson have urged against the views we have expressed.

Mr. Calthrop thinks that the "platform" of the Free Religious Association can be neither Christian, Extra-Christian, nor Anti-Christian, without "omitting the word 'Free' from its name:" all religions must meet on that platform on equal terms, and "shake hands" there with a mutual "God bless you." What is the fact of the case? Suppose that there were such a society as the "Slave Religious Association," the object of which was avowedly to promote the cause of spiritual servitude and thraldom; must we admit that our platform is broad enough to welcome the workers for such a religion as that on equal terms? Could the "Free Religionists" and the "Slave Religionists" shake hands and bid each other God-speed? We think not. The Free Religious Association must sympathize with all who seek freedom in religion, whatever they believe; but it could not without idiocy sympathize with those who should seek slavery in religion. On the question of liberty it must take sides. On that it can never be neutral without indeed belying its name. It has no right to ask, "What do you think on this or that particular point?" but it cannot help asking, "Do you concede the right to think freely on all points?" The great right of free thought it must defend to the uttermost, or it has no excuse for being.

Now apply this view of the Free Religious Association and its platform to the case of Christianity. To all Christians it must say, "If you hold your Christianity so as to admit the rightfulness of free thought without limitation, we welcome you, not because you are Christians, but because you are freedom-lovers. We do not inquire how it is that you reconcile your Christianity with your free thought; that is your own affair. You may think you have reconciled the two when you have not; that is none of our business, so long as you hold our principle of liberty in good faith. At the threshold of our communion you must at least drop the claim to prescribe limits to human intelligence, for our communion exists to abolish all such limits. We will shake hands heartily with you as men and women; we will welcome gladly your broad and universal principles; but you must leave at home the 'special claims' which deny those principles. It is these 'special claims' which make all the mischief; they fight everywhere else like cats and dogs, and they will never 'shake hands' on any platform. The Jew, the Christian, the Buddhist, the Mohammedan, and the rest, cease to be such in fact, when they drop their 'special claims' and meet on the ground of recognized equality; though they may keep their old names here, they have really outgrown the only ideas that gave these names birth and still give them meaning. Christian you imagine yourself, but Christian you are not, if you stultify your faith in Christ by faith in freedom. We welcome you, then, as fellow-men; but we cannot welcome you as Christians. In short, no man can be a consistent Christian who plants himself on Free Religion." That is what the Free Religious Association (in our opinion) says to the Christian world, not by any set form of words, yet by the necessary implication of its collectively affirmed faith in free thought. And it has a cordial welcome for Mr. Calthrop because he is in fact as much of a free thinker, and as little of a Christian, as the rest of its members. He believes as heartily in freedom as the most pronounced Anti-Christian in it; and by-and-by he will wake up to the fact that he is an Anti-Christian too, if he ever comes to perceive what sledge-hammer blows he is wont to plant between the eyes of the real Christianity. His address, in fact, was not a plea for Christianity at all, but rather a general defence of the evolution philosophy.

Turning to Col. Higginson's genial and spicy speech, which was ten times as eloquent as ours, we must say "right out in meeting" that we do not think it was one tenth as true. He opened with a "parable of the cradle," very telling by its wit. He thought that Mr. Calthrop was for staying forever in his cradle, while we were for "smashing" ours the minute we got out of it. We joined in the laugh, of course; but we had our revenge when he came to his "parable of the bird's egg." To make good the outside position he too defends with reference to Christianity, he argued that the bird must be free from the egg in order to use his wings. But how was the bird to make himself free from the egg? Why, he must smash it! Just so with Christianity—the antique eggshell which confines to-day a humanity all ready to use its wings. Putting the two parables together, we submit that Col. Higginson is about as abandoned an Anti-Christian as we are. The only difference is, by his own showing, that we go for smashing cradles, while he goes for smashing eggshells!

With great truth Col. Higginson points out how Christianity itself has "softened;" we should rather say, decayed. It is going to pieces—no doubt about that. But our friend misconceives our meaning, if he thinks that we would "hold any man, because he calls himself Christian, to be Christian in any other sense of the word than that which he habitually recognizes." The natural effect of disorganized thought is disorganized speech; and many a man of good parts in our day gets muddled over the everlasting conundrum, "What is Christianity?" Into the chaos of modern definitions of it, we would fain introduce a little scientific precision. This done, it will sufficiently appear what a terrible indictment humanity must bring against Christianity as it has written out its own history, and also what is the real enemy that still, under a thousand disguises, blocks the pathway of real reform. Here, for instance, is the Woman's Journal, the rather dull setting of weekly jewels of our friend's; on the one hand it builds up woman suffrage by fair argument, and on the other hand pulls it down again by eulogizing the gospel that is to-day its strongest enemy. Analyze the opposition to any forward step of progress, and you will find its roots in the Church or the Bible. Why serve, like Samson, the very foe that has blinded us? Let the modern Samson, if need be, atone for the blunder as heroically as the old!

But Col. Higginson urges the present feebleness of the Christian Amendment movement as disproving its real dangerousness. We do not think he appreciates the grounds on which we consider it dangerous.

These grounds are not the number of its adherents, the success of its plans, or the popularity of its objects; but rather the logical necessities of Christianity itself. The Church in this country is becoming aware of the peril it is now in by the irresistible spread of free thought, which is surely undermining its hold upon the privileges and legal advantages it still enjoys, as well as its power over men's minds. If it is determined to retain these privileges and advantages (and it seems to us fatuity to suppose otherwise), the only possible means of retaining them ultimately lies in the Christian Amendment in some form or other. Col. Higginson's reply to this is no reply at all; for he simply points out the present feebleness of the movement. Just as wisely might one have argued the feebleness of the old abolition movement from the feebleness of the Antislavery Society thirty years ago. The Christian Amendment movement is simply the old claim of Christianity for POWER, put in a form adapted to the times. It represents the fundamental principle of Authority which is the essence of Christianity, as proved by its entire history; and this is a principle necessarily antagonized by all our political traditions, instincts, and institutions. Is not collision absolutely inevitable in some shape? We believe it is, and hold that everybody is Anti-Christian in fact, whatever his opinions, who acts for freedom.

But, says Col. Higginson, "I don't wish to fight against Christianity or the Christian Church, but only against their excesses and abuses." The trouble is that this claim of Authority, this demand for power, is not the abuse, but the essence, of Christianity. Even in its most heretical forms, the Church still declares that Jesus the Christ is Lord, Master, and King of the human race; and this declaration, politically translated, means encroachment on individual and public liberties. This is what we repeatedly urge, but it is the point universally evaded. We emphatically challenge the world to dispute it. It was our hope that this discussion would have brought out some argument to the point; but we must confess it has not done so. The old political parties tried to dodge discussion of the right or wrong of chattel-slavery, but they failed at last. The present political parties try to dodge discussion of the right or wrong of the Demands of Liberalism, but they will fail at last. Whoever stands for freedom in this issue,—believes in it, advocates it, votes for it,—is an Anti-Christian; and all the words in Webster's Dictionary can never prove him anything else.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

A few members of the Free Religious Association may not have received the Annual Report to which they are entitled, because they did not give any post-office address with their names. Any such persons may obtain a copy by calling at the office of the Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, giving their names, or by sending their post-office address to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER, Sec'y F.R.A.

THE DESOLATE CHILDREN.

"The desolation that Free Religion makes in the lives of little children." This is the phrase used by the Independent. It is but fair to say that it uses these words as describing the statement made by a writer in the Golden Age; and it is but fair to that writer to say that these words do him, as well as the truth, great injustice.

Let us consider the matter from the point of view of one reared, as I was, under the very mildest form of Unitarianism,—a form less like the modern Unitarianism which the Independent encourages than of the Free Religion which it reprobates. I had, therefore, as good an opportunity as those times afforded to experience "desolation." Moreover, my immediate playmates were so situated that I could compare the comforts of their condition with my own. "Ministers' sons and deacons' daughters" are proverbially troublesome subjects; and I can honestly say that these small boys, belonging in the former class, taught me quite as much mischief as I taught them, and not so very much either. But, at any rate, I was not made aware in my own life of any source of "desolation" which did not extend to theirs.

In later years it was my pleasant lot to conduct, for months together, a Sunday afternoon service for children; doing all the talking, except when the children asked or answered questions, which they very often did. Any one who has ever talked to children knows that they form the most inexorable audience in the world, and the hardest to feed with chaff. No power on earth will make them listen longer than they are really interested, or profess any interest that they do not feel. To hold an audience of children, you must have not merely a fluent speech, but something to say. There seemed to be no "desolation" in the Sunday afternoons of those children; and as I often heard of children's begging off from their Sunday-schools, in order to come to our meetings, there must have been, in any event, more "desolation" somewhere else.

Other duties led, long since, to the discontinuance of those meetings; but whoso will may see similar gatherings—improved, I doubt not—whenever my friend Octavius Frothingham talks to the children of his congregation in New York. I know from the best testimony, that of the auditors themselves, that nothing so thoroughly averts "desolation" from those juvenile lives, for the time being, as a good half-hour's talk from the President of the Free Religious Association. I know that I once heard him tell to those children the story of Bret Harte's Luck of Roaring Camp, translated into such simplicity that it seemed to me—judging as well as I could, through the tears in my eyes—that there was not a six-year-old present who did not take in every word of it.

Turn now from public to private instruction. "By their fruits ye shall know them" is a text still insisted upon; and if some angelic inspecting officer could be detailed to visit the families, let us say, of the Vice-Presidents of the "Free Religious Association"—beginning with Lucretia Mott's three generations of descendants, and going on through the households of Garrison, Emerson, Owen, Curtis, and the rest—we could soon form an opinion as to the amount of "desolation" put by Free Religion into children's lives. And if any merely mortal observer, who knows the actual households, will look over the remaining list of officers, and consider the faces and demeanor of the young generation of heretics whom he has seen clustering round the fireside of each, he will find something deliciously absurd in characterizing their condition as "desolation." If their lives are "desolate," what picture shall we paint of childish lives that are joyous and innocent and happy?

I never wish to describe private intercourse, but I know that Mr. Darwin will pardon me for saying that the very pleasantest association I brought away with me from his hospitable home was of the look of loving pride he cast at his two manly sons when he said (this very subject being under discussion) that he had never found his opinions to cause any embarrassment in the training of his children, nor did he feel any sort of dissatisfaction as to the result. He added that, as his own training had been equally liberal in its tone, and as his father had been similarly reared before him, the experiment of freedom was in a fair way to be pretty thoroughly tried, so far as concerned the house of Darwin.

I can well understand that where the minds of individual men and women are in a peculiarly unsettled state, the fact will have a bearing upon the training of their children. But unsettled minds are not a monopoly of Free Religion; nor are fixed convictions a monopoly of the Church. The common complaint is that the minds of unbelievers are altogether too fixed. But for a mind troubled with doubts there is nothing better than to talk with little children. Their fearless questioning encourages the questions of their elders, while their loving confidence teaches confidence. No speculation can be more daring than theirs; no faith more tender. Many a parent has found peace, I fancy, by the very effort required to become "as a little child," or at least to explain himself to children. I can understand the embarrassment that some men and women find in answering the questions of their children; but the embarrassment relieves itself. I can honestly say that I have never known a person whose life was avowedly "desolated" through the heretical opinions of his parents; while I have known many lives to be "desolated"—temporarily at least—by the reaction from revival-conversions.

T. W. H.

THE CIVIL RIGHTS BILL AND "THE NATION."

To men of ordinary minds an act of Congress designed to secure civil rights to some millions of citizens, if efficiently enforced, would be regarded not only by the people benefited, but by their friends, as a boon and a blessing. The late Mr. Sumner introduced such a bill into the United States Senate. In the judgment of the great Senator it was necessary for the protection of the Southern negro whose rights are daily outraged.

It has been reserved for the editor of the Nation to make the discovery that this bill "can do nothing for him (the negro) but turn his friends into enemies." Of course the Nation is his "friend." As every one knows, that paper owes its origin largely to professed interest in the freedmen. Will it take the lead in this suggested apostasy, if Mr. Sumner's bill becomes a law? What a following it will have! Jefferson Davis, Andrew Johnson, Louisiana Penn, and a host of similarly devoted "friends" may safely be counted upon.

Another discovery of the Nation is the unconstitutionality of the bill. These "friends" were ever conspicuous for their devotion to the Constitution. In the good old times they nursed it; they were untiring in their efforts to defend it from the attacks of such foes to the negro as Giddings and Sumner, Phillips and Garrison. How grandly the Nation now revives the waning spirit of loyalty! It insists that "the mere suggestion of the constitutional points ought to have killed the bill forever." An enemy to the negro would perhaps seek to reconcile the letter of the law with the letter of the Constitution; his "friends," in their zeal, would not only kill it but kill it forever. The bill, however, is not dead, but still wields its potent influence for injury to the Nation's wards, the freedmen. Its passage by the Senate is characterized as "hounding on his old masters to acts of violence and lawlessness." Mr. Sumner and the Senate are responsible for the white leagues, the outrages, the butchery of negroes, the usurpation of State governments; in short, the anarchy and reign of terror throughout the South. What are the provisions of the bill so fraught with evil, so inimical to the welfare of the freedmen, and therefore so abhorred by the editor of the Nation? We reproduce them from that paper:—

"This bill provides that 'all citizens and other persons within the jurisdiction of the United States shall be entitled to the full and equal enjoyment of the accommodations, advantages, facilities, and privileges of inns, public conveyances on land and water, theatres, and other places of public amusement, and also of common schools and public institutions of learning or benevolence supported in whole or in part by general taxation, and of cemeteries so supported, and also the institutions known as agricultural colleges' . . . . without regard to race, color, or previous condition of servitude; and makes 'any person' who shall deny these equal privileges liable to $500 damages at the suit of the aggrieved person, and to conviction for a misdemeanor, with a fine of $1,000 and imprisonment for a year; and gives exclusive jurisdiction to the United States courts in all criminal proceedings arising under the act. There are also provisions with regard to service on juries; but the important part of the bill, and that which is causing the present excitement in the South, is that we have just cited."

The mere citation of this bill is sufficient answer to the virulent condemnation of it by the Nation. It provides for simple justice, for equality of citizenship without regard to race, color, or previous condition of servitude. It is an attempt to secure to white and black alike equal chances to win any position to which they are entitled. It does not violate the religious, social, civil, or political rights of any man.

And this is the bill denounced by the Nation as "violent and lawless," "equally" so with "acts of violence and lawlessness" of the negroes' "old masters." In his heated imagination the editor sees even the "children" (white) of the South arrayed in rank rebellion against the "parents and guardians" who would send them to schools where they would meet their playmates of perhaps an hour before. If he is to be believed, there is no public sentiment in the South in favor of the bill; and yet on another page of the same paper he chronicles the fact that "the South Carolina Republicans have adopted a platform" which "demands the passage of the Civil Rights Bill."

The Nation calls upon the government that gave freedom to the slave to remand him to the service of his former master. It would have us stand by, consenting to a reconstruction of the rebel States upon a basis, not of freedom, but of wicked caste. This is the plain English of the matter. This is the meaning of its opposition to Mr. Sumner's bill, thinly disguised under a pretence of sympathy for the freedmen. Men who look with closed eyes and listen with cocked ears may ascribe "the present excitement in the South" to the mere proposal of the Civil Rights Bill; but men who look and listen in the ordinary way will not be deceived by such a weak invention. The old demon of slavery has been once more aroused, and its present defiant and aggressive attitude is to be referred to the encouragement it found in the failure of Congress to pass a bill that would adequately protect the negro. Had Mr. Sumner's bill been passed and enforced, we hazard the opinion that white leagues, that is, anti-negro leagues, would not now infest the South, defying law and murdering unoffending citizens. But Congress is not alone to blame. The Nation and other Northern papers that have allied themselves with these Southern cutthroats must share the heavy responsibility. Contemplating the present condition of affairs, recording the incipient rebellion now in progress, the Nation coolly says: "The reconstruction period is ended, and the negro in future will occupy such a position as his industry and sobriety entitle him to." Such a statement, coming on the heels of recent white-league outrages, implies incorrigible stupidity, or something far worse than stupidity. It involves a flagrant, wanton disregard of facts, sufficient to establish the moral obliquity of any pretending sympathizer with the colored man. Only mental or moral obfuscation can lead one to charge the crime of "hounding on his old masters to acts of violence" upon such men as Mr. Sumner and those who supported him in the Senate. The guilty parties are the men of the North, aiders and abettors of ex-slave holders and rebels, who, with hypocritical regard for the well-being of the colored race, do their utmost to foster and develop a spirit of class and caste; a spirit resolved upon the subjugation or destruction of that race in this country. To know that they are fitly represented by the Nation, one has only to read its editorial columns, and for evidence of its peculiar ability in the "hounding on" business we refer especially to its latest issue.

R. P. H.

ENGLISH LETTER.

To the Editor of The Index:

Sir,—It is difficult in these days to avoid a little moralizing on the free-love question, yet I have no desire to continue the discussion of it in your columns without an adequate reason.

Instead of doing so, I would throw out a few hints to the army of freethinkers and lovers of freedom, which may be just taken for what they are worth.

No one, I trust, can accuse me of want of sympathy with any individual who is struggling to escape from the mental and conventional shackles which have hitherto stood in the way of knowledge and of human happiness. I wish to be a reformer to the backbone, and not a mere whig; to maintain inviolate individual liberties, and not to forge a new set of chains for the old ones.

But with all that anxiety for true liberty, I feel convinced that, if we do not take care, our cry for freedom will become a mere cant, and degenerate into a nuisance which will deserve an extra strong dose of Carlylese denunciation. Of course, no one denies that man will be capable of infinitely higher achievements when all his faculties are fully developed, and when the present restraints and impediments are withdrawn. But unless each man thus set free perceives and aims at the true and legitimate object for which liberty is to be gained, the chances are that additional freedom will be an evil and not a good; will conduce to anarchy instead of order; will demoralize instead of purify; will hinder and not promote the advance of mankind.

I do not agree with those who regard human freedom as an end in itself. Liberty is but another form of power, inasmuch as it involves the raising of all previously acquired powers; and power by itself, as the world knows to its sorrow, is not an unmixed good.

In so far as power is combined with what we all understand by the term "want of principle," it is an evil and not a good at all. Only when joined to high moral qualities is power beneficial and salutary.

On this ground I can only regard freedom as a means to an end, only to be sought for to make its possessor to be more serviceable to his fellow-men; only to be granted by those who have power to withhold it if it be not properly used.

Now it would be mere folly and flattery to say that all the advocates of liberty (whether in thought or action) are seeking for it with pure, disinterested, or lofty motives. With many it is a personal question entirely, a selfish desire for the ease of mind or indulgence of body which they expect to gain from the rupture of the old restraints. It is quite natural. Every caged bird longs to fly; every captive, whether bound in iron chains or in the silken bandages of conventionalism, longs to escape and to do as he will. But while men are only in this stage of feeling, they must not take unction to themselves that they are the world's benefactors, nor flatter their souls with the belief that they are helping on the progress of mankind. Unless they are inspired with a spirit of true generosity and benevolence, their freedom will only become a nuisance and add to the world's difficulties.

Others there are among our ranks who cannot conceal from themselves, and scarcely conceal from their neighbors, the base motive which lies at the root of their craving for liberty.

If they are poor, they want the riches that belong to others; if they are in the humbler walks of life, they want to deprive honored men of their justly acquired titles of fame, that their envy may be gratified; if they have an illicit passion, they advocate free-love that they may do respectably what is really disreputable.

The cry for freedom on the lips of such men is simply an offence to men of right feeling in every station in life and of every shade of political opinion.

If liberty be only sought for personal gratification—still worse, if it be sought for gratification at the expense of others,—its acquisition is a public outrage, and should be resisted by the wise and good.

Men have only right to such measure of freedom as is consistent with the rights of others, and the axiom on which this rests is that our first duty is to others rather than to ourselves. It may sound a hard saying, and many may rebel, some on selfish grounds, others on philosophical. But I will back the heart of man in the main to ride over the logic of any school, and—better still—to conquer native selfishness.

I don't wish even to appear to be lecturing my brethren as if they needed the warning more than I. I believe we all need now and again to examine ourselves and prove our motives, lest we should be pursuing so great a prize as liberty from unworthy motives, or selfish motives, or from no motives at all.

To be in a thoroughly healthy condition of mind, our highest regard must be set on the welfare of our fellow-men, on the true moral and intellectual progess of the race; and if this be our real aim, we shall scrutinize every fresh proposal to extend our liberties, or to claim new rights; and before we lend our efforts to second it, we shall test it as far as we are able by that eternal canon of lawfulness for men and for nations which commands us to seek the welfare of others.

It seems to have escaped the observation of some sturdy champions of liberty that the world's progress is not only marked by the comforts and privileges of civilization, but by the increased self-restraint and personal self-denials which the human race have found it necessary to undergo in order to promote the general welfare. The tokens of mere animalism have one by one been disappearing, or, what is nearly as good evidence, have been driven from general toleration and recognition to hide themselves among the outcasts of society.

Has it cost men nothing to unlearn brutality and to follow social law? Surely the price may be found in countless pains and mortifications which only God's eye could see, or his mind reckon. And by this door of self-restraint, the very opposite of what many in these days account as liberty, has our race passed from its animal bondage into every open field which in the highest human sense might be called "freedom."

Before any one takes up the cause of free thinking, or goes in for some new "right," let him solemnly ask himself first, "What good purpose do I hope to put my liberty to when I have got it?"

I am, sir, very truly yours,

Charles Voysey.

August 30, 1874.

Some of our Western contemporaries are exercising their skill as theological experts in trying to detect in the Christian Union the flavor of "Free Religion." We are sorry to discredit a sagacity so laudable as theirs, but we cannot forbear saying that the only two articles which they have thus far specified as emitting the objectionable odor were written, one by a distinguished Methodist divine, the other by a Congregational clergyman. Evangelical clergymen who write for us should take warning and make their utterances "sound." Our Western critics, by their rare power of seeing what is not to be seen, remind us of the doctor who always treated his juvenile patients for "worms," whatever might happen to be their symptoms. One day, being called to a boy who was suffering severely, he felt the pulse, and, looking at the mother, with a solemn shake of the head, said: "Worms, madam, worms!" "Now, doctor," said the mother, "it isn't worms at all, I tell ye; that boy fell down on the wood-pile and broke his leg, and I want you to stop crying 'worms' and set it immediately." "Ah!" said the doctor, determined not to be put down, "worms in the wood, madam! worms in the wood!" A similar diagnosis, no doubt, will always reveal, to those who are determined to find it, the presence of the "worm" of "Free Religion" in whatever any Orthodox divine may write in these columns.—Christian Union.

Communications.

DON'T "STOP MY PAPER."

Editor Index:—

I feel an almost irresistible impulse to write. I don't like your views on temperance at all. Therefore, don't "stop my paper," please! I wish to read what you have to say on the subject, just because I don't agree with you. I wish to find out something different from what I already believe, and hence would like to learn what other people think upon subjects that interest me. Besides, there is something about The Index that I like. I like its seeming candor and fairness. Of course, I am an old fogy Orthodox preacher, but I don't think everybody ought to be such because I am. I believe you radicals ought to be, to keep us Orthodox fellows stirred up, so we shall not stagnate. I think you are doing a good work in your way. I think The Index is doing more good than harm, and this is about all that can be said of the best things and the best men. Please to remember, don't "stop my paper." I don't like your radical infidelity, your anti-Church, anti-Christianity views; and that is the reason that I don't like to have my paper stopped. I do hope you will not feel it your duty to stop everybody's paper whose views on practical issues you oppose, because I, as a fighting animal, am very desirous of an opponent, and hence protest against such a rule. Therefore let me say as my last words, Don't stop my paper.

Kansas.

[If a hearty hand-shake could go by telegraph, it would have been travelling over the wires long before this reaches the reader. If, however, the freedom-loving and truth-loving temper of this "old fogy Orthodox preacher" were the temper of Orthodoxy itself, we should be obliged to "stop his paper" notwithstanding our reluctance to disregard his wishes; for The Index would shut up its office forthwith. As it is, we can safely promise him not to "stop" it till he himself gives the word.—Ed.]

"IF A MAN DIE, SHALL HE LIVE AGAIN?"

Never, perhaps, was this solemn question asked with more earnestness than to-day. With the mental stimulus imparted by modern discoveries in science and the facilities for thinking furnished by our varied educational surroundings, this age is distinguished for its unparalleled activity in all of the departments of intellectual research. No system of belief, however sacred its traditional claims or however ancient its acceptance as infallible truth, is protected from the irrepressible and piercing search of free thought. Ideas that have for ages reposed in the tranquil consciousness of their unquestioned authority are now challenged to appear in the arena of free discussion, divested of their fabled invincible armor, and contend for the right of continuance against the dauntless and irreverent champions of modern scepticism. We are in the midst of one of the most radical revolutions that ever changed the character of human thought. The subject of this revolution, its vitalizing soul, is Man. Human destiny is the grand problem whose solution every noble mind is seeking. "The proper study of mankind is Man," is no longer a dead abstraction, but is the living inspiration of the eager thousands who to-day are searching for the secrets of knowledge.

There never was a greater effort to comprehend the mysteries of life than is now making throughout the enlightened world. Whatever new theory promises to reflect the faintest ray of light on the question of man's existence is greeted with an eager welcome; and those who profess the most scepticism concerning the possibility of obtaining more knowledge of this subject find themselves led, by their longing to know the realities of life, to hear or read the views of the wildest dreamers. The old dogmas are now being thrust aside, and inquiry enters into unexplored avenues of thought. The stale crumbs with which the Church has endeavored to satisfy man's appetite for religious food are rejected by the hungry multitude.

The Spiritualist in a transport of ecstasy cries, "Eureka," and invites the doubt-wearied mind to the repose which this new faith offers. He laughs at the fear of death, calling the "King of Terrors" by the pleasing name "Transition;" and though we are not endowed with the professed powers of the Spiritualist seers, and cannot see the continuation of life through the beautiful gradations of spiritual existence of which they so rapturously speak, yet we sometimes think, when listening to their earnest declarations, their eloquent appeals to the lofty aspirations of the soul, that they are influenced by a veritable inspiration from some other world of intelligence, and that their "spirit-land" is no delusion, but a happy reality. But when some veteran student of Nature gravely announces, as the final conclusion of his studies, that he has discovered no evidences that support a rational expectation of existence after death, such convictions, calmly expressed by those who have grown gray in the pursuit of knowledge, fall like the words of doom on the anxious heart.

As one who endeavors to respect the right of honest belief in all, I cannot impugn the conscience of those who hold and teach what seems to me this narrow idea of human destiny. Some who have toiled through doubt, seeking immortality, and finally, becoming wearied and disappointed in the unsuccessful search, have seen the hope of life extinguished in death, are still supported by a character of integrity and unselfishness which distinguishes them as the noblest souls that dignify humanity. Such persons, from the rigid discipline of their philosophy, may also meet the vicissitudes of life with a resignation not exhibited by those who cherish the impatient hope of a future existence. But I cannot surrender the faith in immortality to their philosophy, however formidable its logic. I cannot refute the objections that any mind can offer to the doctrine of a future existence. But still at times there comes from the manifestations of outward nature and from every consciousness of my own being an assurance of immortality which, though no champion in debate, protects me from the terror of annihilation.

The belief in the individual and conscious existence of the soul after death comes from my noblest impulses and efforts toward moral excellence. If I were bereft of this hope, beauty, love, and truth would lose their divine charms. Man's existence in this world without a supplementary life beyond would seem to me insufferably useless and dreary. The mind's loftiest aims would then seem vain as the traveller's pursuit of the mirage over the hot and shadeless desert.

I cannot yet yield up "this pleasing hope, this fond desire, this longing after immortality." I will grant an indefinite latitude for religious opinion. I will not cavil concerning theological differences while this shrine of hope is spared. If I cannot show to others a rational foundation for this faith, it is to me the most rational view of life that I can conceive, daring to hope that this ancient belief in a future existence, though now based on ideas as incoherent and fitful as the wild fancies of a dream, may yet, through the progress of knowledge, receive a demonstration that will convince the most ultra scepticism.

H. Clay Neville.

Ozark, Mo.

OUT OF MY OWN LIFE.

I was aware of halting not between two but many opinions. I first crept out of the Church, and landed upon the shores of a "debatable land"—not Mr. Owen's,—and not a desert by any means, but yielding nothing of real good to my honest truth-seeking. Yet there were voices there that urged me, and thoughts that filled my soul with a kind of pleading which charmed me out of my fear of forsaking the old ways, and striving for something better,—something, indeed, to replace not only what I had apparently lost, but to kindle a hope that the losing was clear gain. How fearful I was! It was "creeping," indeed; very much as the slave crept away from his master in the days of Uncle Tom's Cabin, taking refuge in the dismal swamps of South Carolina rather than die in chains. That, then, was the love of liberty without the faintest glimmer of a hope beyond it, not even bread to eat. It was first the love of liberty that urged me out of the Church, and I dared not so much as speak of what I should become, to my family and friends. I was in the dismal swamp of non-conformity, and never knew what it was that assailed and oppressed me, until Mr. Abbot, at my solicitation, wrote me a comprehensive letter, and made plain to me where I was. Until then, I was like one whose hands and feet are bound; thereafter I was not free absolutely, but on the way to freedom.

My family are all Church people to this day. My mother still pleads with me to be a Christian, and "come to Jesus." It is not a matter of astonishment to them that they should still remain where they are, but to me it is. I ought, perhaps, to be quite as astonished at my own condition years ago. I had no need of a proffered "chromo" to "come forward." I was very anxious lest I should "come short" of attaining to that high altitude where a soul "feels itself forgiven" and comfortably settled for life, and at perfect peace as regards the hereafter.

Being naturally timid, urging the matter was quite needless. The devil was indeed by far the worst foe to my childish imagination,—worse than any "bear" or "ghost" such as nursery amusements naturally culminate in on dark, rainy nights, when Biddy has been out to a "wake," and comes home with eyes half starting out of their sockets, ready to creep behind the children, and "keep them aisy wid a bit of the ould counthry tales."

That was no worse, indeed, than many an explanation in Sunday-schools, when Deacon Jeremiah Fearful was called upon to tell whether the devil had a tail or not, or whether in his opinion he was black or white. "Black, of course!" Whoever could suppose a devil to be white! Horns, too, and "went about like a roaring lion seeking whom he may devour." The last word was looked up in the dictionary at home. A fearful thing! No "bear story" was ever for a moment to be compared with it. For a long time after the "devil" had been explained, and Deacon Jeremiah had told the whole truth, we children went by twos and threes whenever the apples or potatoes were to be brought out of the cellar. Ah! we certainly had the fear of the devil before our eyes, if not "the fear of God."

The matter did not stop there at the border-land of childhood. The fears and the superstitions grew with my growth, and strengthened with every step of mental progress, till I found myself a woman in years, my education entitling me to some freedom of thought in other directions, but none at all in religious matters. I must stay right where Deacon Jeremiah left me, and grope in the dark, as afraid of the "horns" and "tail" and open mouth as ever. There was no release unless it was in shutting the Bible lids, and declaring absolutely my disgust with a "plan of salvation" that had nothing but a devil in it, and a burning lake, and gnashing of teeth, to frighten people, or persuade them that God was good, and love was the whole plan of redemption, and the two places were alike his, both heaven and hell. I could not at first reason myself out of my fears; they had taken such deep root, nay, were born with me. No wonder that it took years, and that my record of freedom dates back but five years.

The work had to be done in my case by the Radical, and the works of Auguste Comte, and later The Index, which I first met with four years ago.

Nelson on Infidelity was too early for me, and all I remember of that book is that it was sold by colporteurs, and was so fearful of the encroachments of certain infidel books and papers that it overstepped the boundaries of prudence,—was like the first "rotary guns" which were introduced on the battle-field as a test, but rejected: the complaint being that the machinery was so complicated "that it caused great havoc on both sides." It was so with Nelson on Infidelity; so faithful to do duty that its arguments "pro" and "con" were alike conclusive. My mother perceived the harm, and wisely laid it up too high for me to reach. She wished to spare me the misdirection, and kept secret as far as she could the infidel side to every question relating to the Church. Ignorance was, then, the only safeguard. The Evidences of Christianity, which was a text-book in our college, was simply a re-hash from the Bible.

Years after, I applied to my teacher for Rénan's Life of Jesus; but he shook his head gravely. "It is a bad book; it is infidel in its tendencies," quoth he; "better let it alone,"—and, to ease the gap a little, he presented me with Dr. McCheney's works, which, to tell the truth, are hypochondriacal, and make one feel all sighs and tears, and bemoan the fact of existence. So I was not to see the other side (the "night side," Professor Peck would have said), lest it do me harm. But I did afterward see that book of Rénan's; and, though he clouds over with mystery some parts of the history which he should have held up to our gaze in the clearest sunlight of reason, he has blest my soul, and I doubt not others', by the sweet humanness which he has infused into the life of the man of Nazareth.

I was in a bewildered "buzz-box" condition, as Mr. Beecher styles it, in which the mind is brimming over with negations, and afraid to affirm a single point, lest it fall into error. The first step out was through the Radical. Those pages were the "anxious seat" of my later, riper years. How my reason dethroned, by the help it gave me, the old gods and the old fears! The "horns" and "tail" vanished, and even the gates of the holy city dropped off from their hinges, and the city itself faded away as "viewless as air."

It robbed me of psalms, and crowns, and hosannas, but it gave me instead my right to reason, and a new faith in myself, which now I would not exchange for worlds for the old belief in man's total depravity.

There were deeper depths, sublimer heights, and moral altitudes waking up to my vision, such as it were not possible, in the nature of its teachings, to glean from the Bible. Instead of "metaphysical vagaries," I found stable ground for my feet, and a veritable "rock of ages," star-crowned, at its summit, and lifting itself into immensity.

Let no one lament over Mr. Abbot's negations, or over the undoing of the old chains which ignorance has riveted fast; but rather rejoice that reason is coexistent with God, and links man to the god-like here, and now, and hereafter. Charlotte Barber.

Lebanon, Ohio, Aug. 18, 1874.

ORGANIZATION.

Mr. Abbot:—

One word on "Organization," if you please. Secret organization is not the highest type of organization. Members are drawn in for the "mystery and secrecy," who have no idea of "furthering a principle," as you hint in your reply to "Secret Organization Proposed," in your issue of Sept. 3. The whole idea is embodied in your editorial in the same number—"Conscience for Freedom: A Point to Carry." You inquire, "Have the liberals any point to carry—any point of sufficient importance to justify or demand immediate organization?" I should think they had, if they could only see it.

How many true antislavery men at the North, and good Unionists, could see no point to carry, and could not justify the strong language and measures of the antislavery party, till they heard the bombardment at Fort Sumter, and when, awakened from their slumber, they found that the enemy had stolen all the means which they should have had in readiness wherewith to beat back their assailants! Will the liberals sleep on in fancied security till all their means are stolen?

We are told very encouragingly by a correspondent in the same number: "Let the leaders keep their armor bright, and they may rest assured the rank and file will be ready;" and that "our late civil war developed leaders from the body of the army." Yes, but can we wait for such development after the attack commences? Did not even our McClellan, our Burnside, our Meade, and our Hooker, prove their incompetency at first? Can we afford to wait three or four years of bloody death for a Grant, a Sheridan, and a Sherman to "develop," while our "brave boys" are dying by the tens of thousands?

Would they have us wait till the Christian's God is in the Constitution, and we liberals taxed to keep him there? Shall the watchword be, Peace, peace, when there is no peace, when the war is actually begun,—the war of ideas and attempts to bind us hand and foot? Woe to us, if we listen to those sleepy, easy-living, conciliatory, compromising radicals, who assure us there is no danger, who cannot read the signs of the times, who cannot see the lurid flames in the sky, and who seek to pacify and console us with the assurance that "when the danger becomes imminent they will be ready." As well might the inhabitants of a city, when appealed to to organize a fire department, excuse themselves by saying: "When the city is on fire then will we organize and procure our engines and apparatus. Do not fear; we will be ready in case of need; we see no flame or smoke yet; why should we hurry?"

Yes, Mr. Editor, you are right. We should organize, and organize now. There should be no delay. Besides, our apathy emboldens the enemy. While we sleep and mutter, "There is no danger," they are wide awake, and at work, laughing at our fancied security. Were we now organized, and our forces all drilled, we should number millions of effective warriors, all ready for the contest when called into the field. We could then say to the Independent, the "Strength of our Unbelief" is not only individually powerful and increasingly so, but collectively as strong and effective as justice, truth, and coöperation can make it.

Yes, these scattered elements must be congregated; these facts, these dangers must be presented; and in view of this necessity I offer my humble services to the friends of organization to assist in effecting this purpose.

On and after Oct. 1, whenever called for, I will go, as long as health and strength will permit, to proclaim these truths to the best of my ability; namely, the Demands of Liberalism, as set forth in The Index.

Ella E. Gibson.

Barre, Mass., Sept. 4, 1874.

AN EYE-WITNESS'S TESTIMONY.

Brooklyn, N. Y., Sept. 12, 1874.

My dear Index:—

Believing you to be an honest friend to truth, I wish to correct a misstatement in your paper of Sept. 10, made by Charles D. B. Mills in reference to the meeting at Plymouth Church on the evening of August 28. He says: "Mr. Moulton essayed quietly to withdraw; but instantly the crowd (the statement says 'the major part of the immense audience'), rushing after him like a mob as they were" [that is the mistake], "pursued him with murderous cries and blows."

Mr. Mills has every right to believe it true, owing to the reports in most of the papers; and those reports grew out of the fact that all the confusion occurred around the reporters' table, near which Mr. Moulton had placed himself. I, as one of that audience, wish to give my testimony to the facts. We had been rejoiced to hear from the report of the Committee that not one charge against Mr. Beecher had been proven. In the midst of our enthusiasm, Mr. Moulton appeared on the scene. The whisper went round, "There's Moulton!" Necks were craned to look at him. Perhaps twenty-five (sprinkled all over the church) shouted indignantly, "Turn him out!" "Choke him!" The rest of the three thousand (of whom I was one) were terrified lest any violence should be done to him. We arose in our alarm to see what was going on. Then there were cries of "Sit down!" "Turn him out!" "Go on!" All this made dire confusion. My only thought, then, as one of that "mob," was, "Oh! don't turn him out! While he behaves quietly, don't turn him out!" Just then Mr. Halliday came forward, and "in the name of Plymouth Church" requested order, and that Mr. Moulton should be allowed to remain while he created no disturbance. The church was quieted, and order reigned again, until Mr. Moulton got up and shouted to the speaker, "You're a liar, sir!" Then again all was confusion, when Mr. White (one of the committee) arose, came forward, and with a single gesture stilled the multitude; then said: "Let the man stay where he will hear the truth." There was no more disturbance near where I sat (under the clock) after that. Some of the papers said "the Doxology was not sung." It was, as two or three thousand people can testify.

What occurred in the street after Moulton went out I am unable to say, as I stayed inside with "Plymouth Church," singing the Doxology.

S. N.

P.S.—Thanks for your honest sentence on page 441: "Mr. Beecher's as yet unproved crime."

A WORD OF ENCOURAGEMENT.

Editor of The Index:—

The duration of individual animal life is limited, that the earth may prove equal to the sustenance of mankind; yet none of the latter are exempt from the painful speculative theories imposed upon them from birth by fellow-beings, as to what is to be their condition beyond the life here.

I recently had the pleasure to listen to a discourse at Montague, Lake Pleasant, by B. F. Underwood. The discourse accorded with my preconceived idea of truth; but the main point was that for the first time I heard a public speaker openly proclaim that he is an infidel. The speaker's power of eloquent reasoning was sufficient to transform the word infidel from a reproach into a shining jewel. From the shoulders of good men and women who are bending beneath the weight of the name infidel, our friend lifts the Orthodox mantle of scorn, and this too is transformed into smiles of peace and joy.

Gilbert Billings.

Chicopee, Mass., Aug. 24, 1874.

A sea-captain, invited to meet the committee of a society for the evangelization of Africa, when asked, "Do the subjects of the king of Dahomey keep Sunday?" replied: "Yes, and everything else they can lay hands on."

It was an Irish coroner who, when asked how he accounted for an extraordinary mortality in Limerick, replied sadly: "I cannot tell. There are people dying this year that never died before."—New York Observer.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12	Insertions,	10c	per	line.
" 13 " 25	"	8	"	"
" 26 " 51	"	6	"	"
" 52	"	5	"	"

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.

TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
NO. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,

has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, assisted by ABRAM W. STEVENS, with the following list of ditorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
THOMAS W. HIGGINSON, Newport, R.I.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 4.

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

ASSOCIATE EDITOR:

ABRAM WALTER STEVENS.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
T. W. HIGGINSON, Newport, R.I.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
F. W. NEWMAN, England.
CHARLES VOYSEY, England.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS,

OF THE

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. Abbot, D. A. Wasson, T. W. Higginson, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. Wasson on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. Abbot, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. Wasson on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. Abbot on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age;" an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. Higginson on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potier on "Religion Old and New in India;" also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonneschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Sympathy of Religions, by T. W. Higginson. 25 cents.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 10 cents, singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

Price.

ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets 1.50
Concord Days 1.50
Records of a School. A new edition 1.50

ALCOTT (LOUISA M). Little Women. Two vols 3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories 1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl 1.50
Little Men 1.50
My Boys, &c 1.00
Shawl-Straps 1.00
Work; A Story of Experience 1.75

ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS. 1.50

ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism 2.00
New Poems 2.00
Literature and Dogma 1.50

AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. 1.50
Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine 2.00
Edelweiss 1.00
German Tales 1.00

BACON'S Essays 1.00

BAGEHOT on the English Constitution 2.25
Physics and Politics 1.50

BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy 1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol 1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol 5.00

BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms. 2.50

BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations 3.00

BARTOL (REV. C. A). Radical Problems ... 2.00
The Rising Faith 2.00

BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols 5.00

BIBLE in the Public Schools.
Records, Arguments, and Decision in the case of John D. Minor et al. vs. the Board of Education of the city of Cincinnati: et al. in the Supreme Court of the City of Cincinnati 2.00
Arguments of Ramsey, Sage and King in favor of the use of the Bible ..... .50
Arguments of Stallo, Hoadley and Mathews against the use of the Bible ..... .50
The Opinion and Decision of the Supreme Court of Ohio in the above case ..... .25

BRACKETT (ANNA C.) The Education of American Girls ....

BROOKS' (CHARLES T.) Translations. The Layman's Breviary 2.25
The World-Priest 2.25
The Tall Student ..... .75

BUECHNER'S Force and Matter 3.25

BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols 6.00

CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol ..... .80

CARPENTER (DR. W. B.) The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions 3.00

CERVANTES' Don Quixote 1.50

CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing 1.50

CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet Naturalist. With Memorial Verse. 2.00

CHENEY (MRS. E. D). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside 1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience 1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated 1.50

CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions 3.00
Common-Sense in Religion 2.00

CLARKE (Dr. E. H.) Sex in Education 1.25

CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World ..... .75

COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. 3.00
Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays 5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age ..... .20

CONWAY (MONCURE D.) The Earthward Pilgrimage 1.75

CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter; with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol 2.00

CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE; Its True Aims and Requirements A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans 2.00

DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship 2.50

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies" 1.50
The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor" 1.00

DARWIN'S Origin of Species 2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols 4.00
Journal of Researches 2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals 3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated 6.00

DESCARTES (RENE.) Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences 2.25

DICKENS' Child's History of England 1.50

DUHRING (JULIA.) Philosophers and Fools. A Study 2.00

ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each 1.00
Comprising--
Adam Bede.
Romola.
The Mill on the Floss.
Felix Holt.
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life.
The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols 3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols 3.50
Wit and Wisdom of 1.25
The Spanish Gypsy 1.50
How Lisa Loved the King ..... .50

EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.. 2.00
Essays. Second Series 2.00
Miscellanies 2.00
Representative Men 2.00
English Traits 2.00
Conduct of Life 2.00
Poems. With Portrait 2.00
May-day and Other Pieces 2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold 1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold 1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols 5.00
Society and Solitude 2.00

EVANS (E. P., Ph. D). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanase Coquerel the Younger 1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols 5.00

FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion 2.00

FEUERBACH (LUDWIG.) The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation. 3.00

FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.. 2.00

FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity 1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers ..... .20
Child's Book of Religion 1.00
Life of Theodore Parker 3.00

FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols 9.00

GALTON (FRANCIS.) Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences 2.00

GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol 5.00
Elective Affinities 1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols 3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham 1.00

GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life 2.00
Literary and Social Judgments 2.00
Creed of Christendom 3.25

GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait 5.00

HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter s Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France 1.50
Thoughts about Art 2.00
The Unknown River 6.00
The Intellectual Life 2.00
Chapters on Animals 4.00

HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second 1.00
Child World. Part First 1.50

HAMILTON'S Lectures.
1. Metaphysical Lectures 3.50
2. Logical Lectures 3.50

HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol 2.00
Twice-Told Tales.
Mosses from an Old Manse.
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.
The Marble Faun.
The English Note-Books.
The American Note-Books.
The French and Italian Note-Books.
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.

HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers ... 1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance 1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment 1.50
Atlantic Essays 2.00
Oldport Days 2.50

HOWELLS'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey 2.00
Suburban Sketches 2.00
Venetian Life 2.00
Italian Journeys 2.00
A Chance Acquaintance 1.50

HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "'Ninety-Three".. 1.75

HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits 10.50

HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life 1.75

HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses 1.25
Bits of Travel 1.50

HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature 1.25
On the Origin of Species 1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism ..... .50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals 2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews 1.75

INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems 2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen 1.50
Songs of Seven 2.50

INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skelligs 1.75
Studies for Stories 1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series 1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours 1.25
Mopsa the Fairy: A Story 1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect ..... .60

INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures 2.00

INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES.
No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall 1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot. 1.50
III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith 1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain 1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq 1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr 2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine 1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aëronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew. 1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D 1.50

JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers. 1.50

JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India 5.00

JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian 2.50

JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols 12.00

KERR (ORPHEUS C). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous 2.00

LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols 4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols 6.00

LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings 4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics 2.00

LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham 1.50

LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. 3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols 4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed 3.00

LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life. 1.50

LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D'C). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews 1.00

LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols 4.00
Prose Works. Portrait 4.00

LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols 4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series 1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series 1.50
Among my Books 2.00
My Study Windows 2.00

LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Posies for Children. .75

LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man.. 2.00
Pre-historic Times 5.00

LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols 8.00
Elements of Geology 3.50

MACDONALD (GEORGE.) The Vicar's Daughter 1.50

MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife 3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education 3.00
Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848 ..... 3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann 1.25

MARTINEAU (JAMES.) Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol 2.50
The New Affinities of Faith ..... .25

MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind ..... .75

MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire 1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations 1.50

MILL (JOHN STUART.) Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each 2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each 2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. 1.50
Political Economy. New and revised edition 2.50
The Subjection of Women 1.25
Essay on Liberty 1.25
Representative Government 1.50
Autobiography 2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works ... 1.0

MILLER (JOAQUIN.) Songs of the Sierras. 1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands 1.50

MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species 1.75

MORLEY (PROF. JOHN.) Voltaire 2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols 5.00

MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-Time Stories 1.50

MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series 2.50
The Same. Second Series 3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume 2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion 2.00

NASBY (PETROLEUM V). Swingin' Round the Cirkle 1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky 1.50

NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy 4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed 2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations.. 2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy 1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical 4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism. .25
Against Hero-Making in Religion ..... .25

PARKER (THEODORE.) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion 1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols 4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols 3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings 1.50
Historic Americans,—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham... 1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence... 1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations,—A.D. I. and MDCCCLV. A Christmas Story ..... .60

PARSONS (THEOPHILUS.) The Infinite and the Finite 1.00

PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar 1.50
The Trotty Book 1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts 1.50
Hedged In 1.50
The Silent Partner 1.50
What to Wear? 1.00

PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition 2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates 2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena 1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts 4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc 5.00
The Expanse of Heaven 2.00

ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante 2.50

SCHELLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies 6.00

SCIENCE PRIMERS:
1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S... .50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe ..... .50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With illustrations ..... .50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth ..... .50

SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols 31.25

SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition 2.00

SMILES'S (SAMUEL.) Self-Help 1.50

SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical 1.25
First Principles 2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Æsthetic 2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers 2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed 2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols 5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols 5.00
Philosophy of Style ..... .50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.. 2.00
Sociology 2.00

SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus ..... .25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics 9.00

STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny 1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin ..... .00

STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New 2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols 12.00

TAINE'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols 7.50
The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske 2.50

TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems 1.75

THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.. 1.25
Vanity Fair.
The Newcomes.
Adventures of Philip.
Pendennis.
The Virginians.
Esmond, and Lovel the Widower.
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol. 1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.
1. Barry Lyndon, Hoggarty Diamond, &c.
2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.
3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c.
4. Four Georges, Humorists, &c.
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unreprinted Pieces.

THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals 1.50

THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods 2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.. 2.00
The Maine Woods 2.00
Cape Cod 2.0
Letters 2.00
A Yankee in Canada 2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimac Rivers 2.00

TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind 2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols 5.00

TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer 1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People 2.00
Light and Electricity 1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps 2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion 2.00
On Sound 2.00
Radiant Heat 5.00
Forms of Water 1.50
Lectures on Light 1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall ..... .50

TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures 1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings 1.50

VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each 3.00
Vols III. IV. and VI., each 3.75
The Voysey Appeal ..... .50
Voysey's Defence at York ..... .50

WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden 1.00
Saunterings 1.50
Back-Log Studies 2.00

WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion 1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols 6.00

WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life 1.50
Essays and Reviews 3.00
Character and Characteristic Men 1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.... 1.50
Success and its Conditions 1.50
Washington and the Revolution ..... .30

WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life 1.50
We Girls: A Home Story 1.50
Real Folks 1.50
The Other Girls 2.00
Pansies. A volume of Poems 1.50

WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols 4.00
Child Life 3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place, Boston.

$25 A DAY GUARANTEED using our WELL AUGER AND DRILL in good territory. HIGHEST TESTIMONIALS FROM GOVERNORS OF IOWA, ARKANSAS AND DAKOTA. Catalogues free. W. GILES, St. Louis, Mo.

ROWLAND CONNOR,

Having finished his engagement with the Free Congregational Society of Florence, will answer invitations to lecture for liberal societies. Address at JAMAICA PLAIN, MASS.

THE INDEX

IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

GET THE BEST.

Webster's

Unabridged Dictionary.

10,000 Words and Meanings not in other Dictionaries.

3000 Engravings; 1840 Pages Quarto. Price $12.

"THE BEST PRACTICAL ENGLISH DICTIONARY EXTANT."—London Quarterly Review, October, 1873.

Published by G. & C. MERRIAM, Springfield, Mass. Sold by all Booksellers.

THE FREE

SUNDAY ADVOCATE.

A MONTHLY JOURNAL AND REVIEW DEVOTED TO THE INTEREST OF THE NATIONAL SUNDAY LEAGUE.

The objects of the League are to advocate the opening of all Museums, Art Galleries, &c., on Sundays; to maintain during the summer the running of cheap Sunday Excursions; to provide during the winter "Sunday Evenings for the People," and generally to promote everything conducive to rational recreation on Sunday.

The Free Sunday Advocate is published in London, England, and is conducted by an Honorary Editorial Committee, consisting of the following: Mrs. J. H. Simpson, London; Thomas Marshall, London; Fred'k Long, London; Francis W. Souther, London; Mark H. Judge, Hampstead.

THE ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION for delivery by post to any part of the United States is one dollar (payable in advance). Address THE FREE SUNDAY ADVOCATE, 256 High Holborn, London, W.C., England.

CHARLES SUMNER'S GREAT WORK.

PROPHETIC VOICES

CONCERNING AMERICA.

By CHARLES SUMNER.

Fine Edition, Tinted Paper, with Steel Portrait, Crown 8vo., Cloth extra, $2.

Aside from its literary and historical merits, this volume has a special interest, from the fact that it was the last work on which r. Sumner was engaged before his death.

"PROPHETIC VOICES" will be found of great value to all who take an interest in the history of our country, so full is it of passages in which the unexampled prosperity of our land has been foretold by philosophers, poets, statesmen, and orators, of whom the lamented author has also given interesting sketches.

Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price.

Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A NEW, SEARCHING, TIMELY BOOK, entitled

"THE GENESIS AND ETHICS OF CONJUGAL LOVE."

By Andrew Jackson Davis.

Treatment of all the delicate and important questions involved in Conjugal Love is straightforward, unmistakably emphatic, and perfectly explicit and plain in every vital particular. Mr. Davis has recently examined the whole field of Marriage, Parentage, Disaffection, and Divorce, and this little volume is the result; which now comes into the world because it is now both wanted and needed by all women and men.

· · · Our friend Andrew Jackson Davis has written a book this time that concerns everybody, and on this side of the great river. It certainly touches their bosoms if not their business, and people who do not care a pin what Mr. Davis thinks of the Summer Land will be interested to see what he knows about conjugal love, and the duties of the marriage relation. His book has a table of contents as attractive as a Delmonico bill of fare.—Golden Age.

Price, in paper covers, 50 cents; in handsome cloth, 75 cents; in full gilt and extra binding, $1. Postage free. The trade supplied on the most liberal terms. Published by the "Progressive Publishing House" of A. J. DAVIS & CO., No. 24 East Fourth Street, New York City.

STUDENTS FITTED for any College.

Please address EMILY J. LEONARD, Meriden, Conn.

CONSTANT EMPLOYMENT.—At home, male or female, $30 a week warranted. No capital required. Particulars and valuable sample sent free. Address, with six-cent return stamp. C. ROSS, Williamsburg, N. Y.

FREE DISCUSSION

is held at HOSPITALLER HALL, 593 Washington Street, Boston, every Sunday, at 10½ A.M., 2½ and 7½ P.M. All that relates to the Religious, Political, and Social interests of mankind constitute the subjects for discussion. THE INDEX and Index Tracts are for sale every Sunday at Hospitaller Hall.

WEST NEWTON ENGLISH AND CLASSICAL SCHOOL.—The twenty-first school year of this Family and Day School, FOR BOTH SEXES, will begin Wednesday, September 16, 1874.

For particulars address NATH'L T. ALLEN, Principal, West Newton, Mass.

At home Saturdays.

TO NEWSPAPER PUBLISHERS.

Having conveniences for doing the best of newspaper printing at reasonable prices, I should like to contract for composition alone, or for composition, press-work, and mailing, for one or more weekly papers.

Best of references given, and satisfactory work guaranteed. GEO. H. ELLIS, 7 Tremont Place, Boston.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c., of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX.

Bound volumes of THE INDEX for 1871, 1872, and 1873, will be sent by express (at the purchaser's expense) on receipt of $2.50, $2.50, and $3.00 respectively. These volumes are exceedingly valuable singly, irrespective of each other; for the important essays and other articles they contain are of permanent interest, and will furnish as instructive reading twenty years hence as to-day. No more valuable present could be made to a friend struggling out of Orthodoxy than one of these volumes.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

WARREN'S

TRUE CIVILIZATION.

Price 50 cents.

PRACTICAL DETAILS,

showing the workings of the

COST PRINCIPLE.

Price 25 cents.

For sale by

S. H. MORSE,

25 Bromfield St., Boston.

THE

SONG MONARCH!!

By H. R. PALMER, of Chicago, with the distinguished assistance of Prof. L. O. EMERSON, of Boston. These gentlemen, in the SONG MONARCH, present to the public a book unrivalled for the use of

SINGING CLASSES,

whether in the form of SINGING SCHOOLS, or in NORMAL MUSIC SCHOOLS, CONVENTIONS, COLLEGES, or ACADEMIES, and the higher COMMON SCHOOLS.

Price 75 Cents. Per Dozen, $7.50.

Richardson's New Method

FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

The Most Popular Method ever issued; 250,000 already sold, and the book is received, if anything, with increasing favor from year to year. Teachers and Pupils buy

25,000 COPIES ANNUALLY!!

Recently enriched by the addition of "CZERNY'S LETTERS ON THE ART OF PLAYING THE PIANO," and of "SCHUMANN'S MAXIMS." It is now a book of 260 large pages.

PRICE $3.75.

All books mailed, post-paid, for the retail price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO.,

BOSTON.

CHAS. H. DITSON & CO.,

711 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE.

Our organization some time since decided to direct its efforts for the present towards securing the

Repeal of the Laws

whereby church and other corporate property is unjustly exempted from its share of the burden of taxation.

As a means to this end, we have published for general circulation several thousand copies of a

TRACT

on Church Exemption, being the article by Mr. Abbot which appeared in THE INDEX of Nov. 27.

We have already issued three editions, the last of which is nearly exhausted.

We desire soon to issue

Another Large Edition

of this and other tracts on the subject, so that we can place a copy in the hands of

EVERY VOTER IN THE STATE,

and generously to supply the calls for them in other States.

To do this, we need funds; for, although we have made arrangements for printing the Tract at very low cost, it is impossible for the Boston League, with its various other expenses, to bear the entire expense alone.

Will not, then,

All Friends of the Movement

come forward and help us with liberal donations?

We frequently receive communications from parties wishing tracts to distribute, asking how much they shall pay. To such we reply that the cost to us is about $2.50 per thousand, and we shall be pleased to furnish them at this price per thousand, or 30 cents per hundred, to all who will circulate them. But all additional donations will be gratefully received for the purpose of circulating them gratuitously throughout the country.

Last winter this subject was brought before the Legislature of the State, and many petitions were presented asking a repeal of these unjust laws.

The matter is still in their hands, and at the next session will undoubtedly be acted upon. Meanwhile the

Voice of the People,

favoring justice and equity, should be distinctly heard.

We shall soon be ready to send out

BLANK PETITIONS AGAIN,

thus giving an opportunity to those who have not already done so, to protest against this continued wrong.

Let us make it

THE LARGEST PETITION

ever presented to our legislative body.

Will those willing to assist in circulating these petitions please

SEND IN THEIR NAMES?

We would say, also that we feel deeply the need of

Other Organizations

in this State, to coöperate with us in securing equality and justice, by pressing the "Demands of Liberalism." If, in any locality, there are those who are inclined to

Form a Liberal League,

we are ready to render such assistance as lies in our power.

LIBERALS!

If all will unite and work, the results sought can be accomplished

Address

BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE,

NO. 1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

Per order of the EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

NONPAREIL Farm Feed, Bone, Drug, and Hand-grinding MILLS. Ten Sizes. Also Cotton-Seed Hullers. Illustrated pamphlets free. Address SEDGEBEER, SHEPARD & MILLER, 181 East Front Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

TYNDALL'S ADDRESS.

A very neat copy of Professor Tyndall's remarkable Address before the British Association on August 19, in pamphlet form, with large type and good paper, will be mailed postpaid on receipt of TWENTY-FIVE CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE AMERICAN EDITION

OF

MONCURE D. CONWAY'S

SACRED ANTHOLOGY,

A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES,

has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.

Address THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE, Boston, Mass.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,

BANKERS,

LEROY, MINN.

Branch Office, 137 Broadway, N. Y.

Money Invested in First Mortgages on Improved Farms in Minnesota and Iowa, running three to five years, with Coupon Interest Notes, drawing 9 per cent. annually in advance, or ten per cent. paid semi-annually in advance, or 12 per cent. per annum, annually, free of expense to the Loaner.

☞ 10 per cent. paid on receipt of money at the Bank, or in New York, till invested.

For Full Particulars, send for Circular.

137 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

REAL ESTATE SECURITIES, paying 8 to 10 per cent. interest, or

Investments in Real Estate in Chicago and vicinity,

if judiciously made, are the best and safest modes of employing capital. The old

Real Estate and Loan Agency

OF

ERNST PRUSSING, 143 RANDOLPH STREET,

Chicago (Established 1853),

Guarantees perfect title and ample security in all its Real Estate Loans.

Firstclass securities always on hand. Interest and principal collected without charge. Real Estate Investments made on commission or on shares; taxes paid, &c.

Orders of capitalists and real estate owners respectfully solicited.

REASONS FOR USING THE

EUREKA SPOOL SILK.

It is full length. It is full size. It is smooth and elastic, and is equally adapted to hand or machine use.

Many kinds of spool silk are a perfect fraud, being not only shorter in length, but a much finer size than they are represented to be, and of so poor a quality as to be unfit for use. The ladies will always find the Eureka Silk exactly as represented. Every spool is warranted, and the manufacturer's name indelibly branded on every spool. Call for it.

RADICAL AND LITERARY

LECTURES

BY

JOHN WEISS,

RADICAL LECTURES.

The Idea of Hereafter.
An Act of Faith.
Intelligence in Religion.
Religion and Science.
Heart in Religion.

SHAKSPEARIAN LECTURES.

FIRST SERIES.

1. Cause of Laughter.
2. Irony and Humor.
3. Dogberry, Malvolio, Bottom, Touchstone.
4. Ajax in Troilus and Cressida: The Porter in Macbeth: The Fool in Lear.
5. Falstaff.
6. Hamlet.

SECOND SERIES.

1. The Women of Shakspeare.
2. Portia.
3. Ophelia.
4. Macbeth and Lady Macbeth.
5. " " " "
6. Contrast in Shakspeare's Characters.

Address JOHN WEISS, 32 E. Brookline St., Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year. LIBERTY AND LIGHT. Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 5. BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, OCTOBER 1, 1874. WHOLE No. 249.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF ———.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in ——:

Also, as soon as five hundred such Liberal Leagues shall have been formed in different places, to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be hereafter called, in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the needed reforms.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the National Convention of Liberal Leagues when called together.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

So far as I am concerned, the above is the platform of THE INDEX. I believe in it without reserve; I believe that it will yet be accepted universally by the American people, as the only platform consistent with religious liberty. A Liberal League ought to be formed to carry out its principles wherever half a dozen earnest and resolute Liberals can be got together. Being convinced that the movement to secure compliance with these just "Demands" must surely, even if slowly, spread, I hope to make THE INDEX a means of furthering it; and I ask the assistance and active co-operation of every man and every woman who believes in it. Multiply Liberal Leagues everywhere, and report promptly the names of their Presidents and Secretaries. Intolerance and bigotry will tremble in proportion as that list grows. If freedom, justice, and reason are right, let their organized voice be heard like the sound of many waters.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

BOSTON, Sept. 1, 1873.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State; and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation.

GLIMPSES.

IN THIS COUNTRY there are 63,000 churches and 43,874 clergymen.

THE TOTAL AMOUNT of real estate in Detroit exempted from taxation is $8,480,460.

THE TOTAL POPULATION of Japan is put at 33,110,825, by the just published official census of the Japanese government for the year 1872.

THE DISCUSSION on the Euthanasian creed does not seem to have interested so many minds in this country as in England; yet it is surely an important one, at least to some invalids.

THE LONDON Spectator has a neat way of putting things. It holds that Englishmen prefer "to put up with annoyances from want of regulation, rather than put up with annoyances from being regulated to death."

IT WAS the Bishop of Peterborough who declared that, "if the choice must be made, he had rather see England free than sober." This apothegm would hardly serve as a transparency motto for a Prohibitionist torchlight procession. Dr. Miner would reverse it.

THE ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY himself declares that, out of a population of 180,000,000, "with all efforts, not above 318,000 converts have been made." Will the Independent please cite this as a fresh proof of our "want of candor" with regard to missions?

IF THE Nation indulges too often in such sharp little bits of blasphemy as this, it will be shoved into the category of "infidel sheets" without mercy: "We must request Plymouth Church to stop praying publicly for Tilton. This disgusts the community, which is already much nauseated, and does Tilton no good. Plymouth Church has had charge of his moral and religious training, and has failed in it so miserably that we are confident that no petition it now utters about him will receive any attention."

THE Saturday Review gives an instance of "low" style that is almost amusing, when it says of John Stuart Mill's land heresies: "The task of transferring all the property in the country from those who have to those who want, though it is the natural and logical consequence of Mr. Mill's theories, would not be unattended with difficulty." Could the supposed advocates of a tremendous socio-political cataclysm have been touched with greater feline softness and treachery? Depend upon it, the vicious old tom-cat of vested interests had his claws all ready to unsheathe.

AT THE LATE "National Conference of Unitarian and other Christian Churches," at Saratoga, Rev. Dr. James Freeman Clarke offered two resolutions, one to send a committee of three to express the sympathy of the Unitarians in the Congregational Council at New Haven next month, and the other to send a similar committee to the next annual meeting of the Free Religious Association. The former was carried and the latter tabled. Rev. Dr. Bellows moved that the Conference "heartily endorses the action of its officers" in inviting Mr. Potter's society to be present by pastor and lay delegates. Like the other, this motion was (in the phrase of the Liberal Christian) "voted down sharply and decisively." A resolution offered by Rev. Charles W. Buck, the substance of which was to put an undogmatic meaning into the words Christian and Christianity, was lost in the Business Committee, to which it was referred. We confine ourself this week to a simple statement of fact, reserving comment for our next issue.

KAULBACH'S great cartoon of "The Era of the Reformation," representing eighty-three chief representatives of perhaps the most momentous epoch of human history, is now on exhibition at the Boston Athenæum, and is visited daily by crowds. The four Catholic altar-pieces of Zurbaran, belonging to the collection of the Duke de Montpensier (son of King Louis Philippe), and representing the Annunciation, the Adoration of the Shepherds, the Adoration of the Magi, and the Circumcision, are ranged side by side in the adjoining apartment, but easily visible at the same time from a midway position. To how many of the enthusiastic, admiring spectators has it occurred to contrast the ideals embodied respectively by Kaulbach and Zurbaran? In the splendid figure of the king kneeling before the Christ-babe, Zurbaran has expressed the innermost spirit of Catholicism—the sentiment of humble and fervent devoteeism almost unmixed with other elements; in almost every face of the cartoon, Kaulbach has expressed the essence of the free religious (not the Christian) side of Protestantism—the inflexibility of masculine will and the grandeur of unsubmissive intellect. The effect of this contrast, accidentally set before the thoughtful beholder with all the power of great genius, is profound; but the deeper meanings of it are hidden from him who lacks the key of Free Religion.

IN BRATTLEBORO, Vermont, the Catholic priest asked the School Committee to excuse Catholic children from attendance at school on Corpus Christi Thursday, that they might keep the day according to the regulations of the Church. The Committee refused. The children, however, having absented themselves, the Committee suspended them altogether. A petition was at once presented to the Supreme Court for an injunction to restrain the Committee from excluding the children from school privileges; but this petition was denied. Such collisions are greatly to be regretted. The request of the priest could not well have been granted by a formal excuse from attendance on sectarian grounds, without establishing a bad precedent; but it would have been far wiser to have taken no notice of the children's absence, at least by the infliction of a heavier penalty than attaches to unexcused absence under ordinary circumstances. We cannot approve of anything that looks like persecution on account of religious faith; and we specially deprecate any unnecessary exasperation of the Catholics against the public school system. Without departing from the strictest principles of secular education, let us refrain from heaping fuel uselessly on the fires of superstition, which are quite hot enough already. The Boston Advertiser thinks the priest's request should have been granted. While we cannot agree with it to that extent, we do think that the School Committee were too harsh, and would have acted more justly, as well as more kindly, by following the course here suggested.

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walters; Secretary, E. M. Bridgman.
WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—President, J. B. Bassett; Secretary, Anton Grethen.
NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
BALBEC, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
SAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.
AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Vaux, Secretary.

The Literary Genius of Bunyan.

A LECTURE RECENTLY DELIVERED IN LONDON, AT THE CO-OPERATIVE INSTITUTE.

BY GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE.

This world is a big place. This is not an original observation. Yet men's attention needs calling to it at times. People are always forgetting what a variety of humanity society contains. Two hundred years ago the authorities of Bedford made things very unpleasant to one John Bunyan, because they thought they knew all about their neighbors, and did not imagine that a common street-workman might have in him the elements of the most famous man that that wilful and patriotic county ever produced. The world is not only big, but it is growing bigger every day with wonders. Science so enlarges men's vision that all our famous calculations and creeds seem uncertain, weak, and small, on the shore of the vast ocean of facts whose mighty currents are yet undetermined.

The trade of a tinker seems a very unpromising preparation for a literary career. A tinker in Bedford to-day would not find himself very much flattered by the attentions that would be paid to him; and if he had the additional disadvantage of being "known to the police," the prospect of a duke erecting a statue to his memory would seem very distant; and it says very much for the genius of Bunyan as a writer, that being a tinker and a schismatic, in the hands of those ungifted regulators of doctrine, the parish constables, he attained unrivalled ascendancy in literature. Disbelieving in this world, despising this world, Bunyan obtained renown by the arts of this world. He was a very remarkable writer. If he mended pots as well as he made sentences he was the best tinker that ever travelled; but he has told us nothing as to his skill as a workman which would be as useful to mankind as the story of his skill as a saint. When a wealthy citizen of London offered to take his son as "an apprentice without a premium," Bunyan declined, on the ground that "God had sent him to preach the Gospel, and not to advance his family;" which was very fine in the preacher, but very bad for the boy. Bunyan had no worldly notions. His great doctrine was that men were not saved by any good they might do, but by something which some one else had done; and that they were not to depend upon their own merit to advance themselves, but on that of another—a doctrine which would ruin the morals of any commercial establishment in a month; and if preached generally in business would make a poor-house and a police-office necessary in every street.

It is of course no part of my intention to call in question Bunyan's religious views, or the depth and sincerity of his unquestionable personal piety. These considerations lie outside my record altogether. My sole concern is with the literary method and art with which he stated them. I honor the rhetorical skill which enabled him to command the admiration of men who, were he living, would not meet him in company, nor give him the right hand of fellowship in public. The plebeian victory which the prisoner and pamphleteer won by dint of original capacity is one of the triumphs of the self "educated mechanic," as Mr. Disraeli once called a possible rival in that republic of literature where privilege is unrecognized, and where birth—mean or noble—is neutral, and genius alone is greatness.

There is no doubt that John Bunyan was a serious-minded and well-disposed man, robust in frame and robust in understanding, who misled the world about him by his disparagement of himself. Like many other Christians, he judged himself by the standard of the infinite perfection of God, and compared with our highest ideas of sinlessness and purity the best of men would have to give but a very shabby account of themselves. Nevertheless, the human observer, who compares one man with another, knows that some are just and comparatively pure, while others are base and vile. Judging himself by the standard of God, Bunyan declared himself the "chief of sinners;" but compared with his townsmen he was a stout-hearted, stout-minded, scrupulous man. If he seems to us offensive and contemptuous to all who differ from him in theology, we must remember that he lived in days when men were new to the study of the Bible—when no one had experienced the million interpretations which sincere, truth-seeking Christians have since put upon it. Bunyan lived when the most ignorant sectary believed himself infallible, when clergymen taught that faith was higher than learning, and when criticism was regarded as the latest form of sin.

Bunyan was not a pleasant man to know. He had an unrelenting sincerity which his doctrines and not his nature turned into severity. He gave men a chill who met him in the street. Yet, like all manly men, he had great natural tenderness which he yet restrained, like the beginning crime, towards all who took a more lenient view of life than himself. He had a soul like a red Indian's—all tomahawk and truth—until the literary passion came and added humor to it. Bunyan had wonderful self-insight. It was part of his genius. He was under no delusion as to his own morose views. See with what worldly art he sought to reconcile men to it. He demands in his vigorous doggerel,—

> "May I not write in such a style as this?
> In such a method too, and yet not miss
> My end, thy good? Why may it not be done?
> Dark clouds bring water when the bright bring none."

Mark his offensive assumption. He does not ask to explain his views, for the chance of your seeing by them, or finding guidance in them, but stands up as your monitor. His tone is, "my end, thy good." Then comes the fine apologetic line—rich as a proverb—

> "Dark clouds bring water when the bright bring none."

Like men of original genius, this stout-minded potmender had abounding confidence in himself. Manifestly he had no doubt as to his own powers. No man knew better what he was about. He could take the measure of all the justices about him, and he knew it. Every shallow-headed gentleman in Bedfordshire towns and villages was made to wince under his picturesque and satiric tongue. To clergymen, bishops, lawyers, and magistrates he gave names which all his neighbors knew,—Mr. Pitiless, Mr. Hardheart, Mr. Forget-Good, Mr. No-Truth, Mr. Haughty. Thus he named the disagreeable dignitaries of the town of Mansoul, who were very well known to those to whom he spoke and for whom he wrote.

At first he was regarded by his "pastors and masters" as a mere wilful, noisy, praying sectary. Very soon they discovered he was a fighting preacher. As tinker or as Christian he always had his sleeves turned up. When he had to try his own cause he put in the jury-box Mr. True-Heart, Mr. Upright, Mr. Hate-Bad, Mr. See-Truth, and other amiable persons. His witnesses were Mr. Know-All, Mr. Tell-True, Mr. Hate-Lies, Mr. Vouch-Truth, Mr. Did-See. His town clerk was Mr. Do-Right; the Recorder was Mr. Conscience; the jailer was Mr. Trueman. Lord Understanding was on the bench, and the judge bears the dainty name of the "Golden-headed Prince." Bunyan's adversaries are always a bad set. They live in Villain's Lane, in Black Mouth Street, or Blasphemer's Row, or Drunkard's Alley, or Rascal's Corner. They are the sons of one Beastly, whose mother bare them in Flesh Square; they live in the house of one Shameless, at the sign of the Reprobate, next door to the descent into the Pit. Their relations are Mr. Halter, Mr. Impiety, Mr. False-Peace, Mr. Covetousness, who are housed by one Mr. Simple, in Folly's Yard. Bunyan had a perfect wealth of sectarian invective at command. His epithets are at times unquotable and ferocious. When, however, his friends are at the bar the witnesses against them comprise the choicest scoundrels of all time—Mr. Envy, Mr. Pickthank, and others, whose friends are Lord Carnal Delight, Lord Luxurious, Lord Lechery, Sir Having Greedy, and similar villainous people of quality. The judge's name is now Lord Hate-Good. The jury consist of Mr. No-Good, Mr. Malice, Mr. Love-Lust, Mr. Live-Loose, Mr. Heady, Mr. Hate-Light, Mr. Enmity, Mr. Liar, Mr. Cruelty, and Mr. Implacable, with Mr. Blindman for foreman. Never was such an infamous gang impanelled. Rancor, and rage, and vindictiveness, and every passion awakened in the breasts of the strong by local insolence and legal injustice, is supplied by Bunyan with epithets of immense retaliative force. He is the greatest name-maker among authors, and had he been with Adam in Eden there would have been no difficulty in naming the beasts of the field had they been twice as many. He was a spiritual Comanche. He prayed like a saint, he denounced like a savage. He said himself when describing the art of the religious rhetorician—an art of which he was the greatest master of his time,—

> "You see the ways the fisherman doth take
> To catch the fish; what engines doth he make?
> Behold! how he engageth all his wits,
> Also his snares, lines, angles, hooks, and nets;
> Yet fish there be that neither hook, nor line,
> Nor snare, nor art, nor engine can make thine;
> They must be groped for, and be tickled too,
> Or they will not be catched, whate'er you do."

Bunyan never tickled the sinner. It was not his way. He carried a prong. He pricked the erring. He was as determined as his namesake William Bunyan, who published a pamphlet to suggest what ought to be done to holy pedestrians whose difficulties lay rearward. John Bunyan was for no half measures. He put detonating balls under his pilgrims' feet, which exploded as they stepped, and alarmed them along. He lined the celestial road with horrors. If the holy travellers turned their heads they saw a fiend. Worse than Lot's wife, who was merely changed into a pillar of sweet, wholesome, all-preserving salt, were Bunyan's unfortunate converts, who looked back into a pit filled with fire where they howled and burned through unknown time.

It was not an agreeable business for Charles Dickens to draw the character of Harold Skimpole, considering that it might be taken in part for one of his own honored friends—Leigh Hunt—to whom it does not apply. But the appropriating temerity of a man of genius is often a mercy to generations after him. How many people have been warned against those airy, idle, and gracious impostors, who take the money of hard-earned and scrupulous persons, and transfer their debts to them to pay. Many an unconscious knave has blushed, and many an honest man's pocket has been saved by the portraiture of Harold Skimpole. Bunyan drew religious Skimpoles and Pecksniffs with an indelible pencil.

Ah, with what pleasure the great Bedford artist must have contemplated his masterly pages, as day by day he added to them the portrait of some new scoundrel, or painted with dexterous and loving hand the wholesome outlines of some earnest man, or devised some new phrase which, like a new note or a new color, would delight singer or painter for generations yet to come! He must have strode proudly along his cell as he put his noble praise and his pitiless scorn into imperishable similes.

But Bunyan had never been great had he been merely disagreeable. He had infinite wit in him. It was his carnal genius that saved him. He wrote sixty books, and two of them—Seige of the Town of Mansoul (otherwise known as The Holy War), and The Pilgrim's Progress—exceed all ever written for creativeness, swiftness of imagination, racy English speech, sentences of perfect art, cunningness in dialogue, satire, ridicule, and surpassing knowledge of the picturesque ways of the obscure minds of common men. In his pages men rise out of the ground; they always come up on an open space, so that they can be seen; they talk naturally and familiarly, so that you know them at once, and they act without delay, so that you are straightway entertained by them, and never forget them. They surprise you, delight you, instruct you, and disappear. They never linger, they never weary you. Incidents new and strange arise at every step in his story. The scene changes like the men and their adventures. Now it is field or morass, plain or by-path, bog or volcano, castle or cottage, sandy, scorching desert, or cold, fathomless river, the smoke of the bottomless pit, or bright, verdant Delectable Mountains and enchanted lands, where there are no bishops, no jails, and no tinkers; where aboundeth grapes, flowing drapery, saintly brides, unending conversation, sweet music, and praise. The great magician's genius forsakes him when he comes to the unknown regions, and he knoweth no more than the rest of us. But while his foot is on the earth he steps like a king among writers. Take this one example of his delineation of the moral and spiritual time-servers of his day. He brings his own favorite pilgrims, Christian and Hopeful, in contact with Mr. By-Ends, and this is what occurs:—

"So I saw," says Bunyan, "that quickly after they were got out of the fair they overtook one that was going before them, whose name was By-Ends; so they said to him, 'What countryman, sir? and how far do you go this way?' He told them that he came from the town of Fair-Speech, and he was going to the Celestial City, but told them not his name."

Having got at these facts, mark how artfully our excellent friend Christian winds towards his adversary: "From Fair-Speech?" said Christian; "is there any good that lives there?" "Yes," said By-Ends, "I hope so." "Pray, sir, what may I call you?" said Christian. To this natural and seemingly unpremeditated question, By-Ends answers: "I am a stranger to you, and you to me; if you be going this way I shall be glad of your company; if not I must be content."

By-Ends craftily avoids giving any answer; but he is no match for Christian, who continues as though he did not notice the omission: "This town of Fair-Speech I have heard of, and, as I remember, they say it is a wealthy place." By-Ends: "Yes, I will assure you that it is; and I have very many rich kindred there." Christian quickly and adroitly interjects: "Pray who are your kindred there, if a man may be so bold?"

By-Ends, quite thrown off his guard, answers: "Almost the whole town; and in particular my Lord Fair-Speech, from whose ancestors the town first took its name. Also Mr. Smooth-Man, Mr. Facing-Both-Ways, Mr. Anything; and the parson of our parish, Mr. Two-Tongues, was my mother's own brother. And to tell you the truth, I am become a gentleman of good quality; yet my great-grandfather was but a waterman, looking one way and rowing another; and I got most of my estate by doing the same thing." The construction of this answer of By-Ends is a triumph of controversial wit and malice. It hits eight of Bunyan's neighbors at once. Without disclosing what he thinks of By-Ends' answer, Christian says incidentally: "Are you a married man?"

"Yes," replies By-Ends, betrayed into further self-criminatory loquacity: "and my wife is a very virtuous woman, the daughter of a virtuous woman; she was my Lady Feigning's daughter; therefore she came of a very honorable family, and is arrived to such a pitch of breeding that she knows how to carry it to all, even to prince or peasant. It is true we somewhat differ in religion from those of the stricter sort; yet but in two small points. First, we never strive against wind and tide. Second, we are always most zealous when Religion goes in his silver slippers; we love to walk with him in the street, if the sun shines, and the people applaud him."

Having put in all these disagreeable incidents, Bunyan continues:—

"Then Christian stepped a little aside to his fellow Hopeful saying, 'It runs in my mind that is one By-Ends, of Fair-Speech; and if it be, we have as very a knave in our company as dwelleth in these parts.' Then said Hopeful, 'Ask him; methinks he should not be ashamed of his name.' So Christian came up to him again and said, 'Sir, you talk as if you knew something more than all the world doth; and if I take not my mark amiss I deem I have half a guess of you. Is not your name Mr. By-Ends, of Fair-Speech?' "

There is no escape from this well-devised directness of interrogation, and By-Ends has no help but to answer:—

"This is not my name, but indeed it is a nickname that is given to me by some that cannot abide me, and I must be content to bear it as a reproach as other good men have borne theirs before me."

Christian (sharply): "But did you never give occasion to men to call you by this name?"

By-Ends: "Never! never! The worst that ever I did to give them an occasion to give me this name was that I had always the luck to jump in my judgment with the present way of the times, whatever it was, and my chance was to get thereby. But if things are thus cast upon me, let me count them a blessing; but let not the malicious load me therefore with reproach."

Christian here falls back upon what is called "plain speaking," and observes, "I thought indeed that you were the man that I heard of; and to tell you what I think, I fear this name belongs to you more properly than you are willing we should think it."

By-Ends: "Well, if you will thus imagine, I cannot help it; you will find me a fair company keeper if you will still admit me your associate."

Then Christian made one of those bold, manly, and honest observations which constitute the grace of his accomplished character, as drawn by Bunyan. Christian says, "If you will go with us you must go against wind and tide; the which I perceive is against your opinion; you must also own Religion in his rags as well as when in his silver slippers, and stand by him, too, when bound in irons as when he walketh the street with applause."

Here By-Ends is represented as supplicating to accompany his resolute adversary: "You must not impose or lord it over my faith," he says; "leave me my liberty, and let me go with you."

Christian: "Not a step further, unless you will do in what I propound as we—"

Then said By-Ends: "I shall never desert my own principles since they are harmless and profitable. If I may not go with you I must do as I did before you overtook me, even go by myself, until some overtake me that will be glad of my company."

The dialogue is now over; but the great artist dashes with a big brush further colors on By-Ends as he retreats.

"Now I saw in my dream that Christian and Hopeful forsook him and kept their distance before him; but one of them looking back saw three men following By-Ends, and behold as they came up with him he made them a very low conge; they also gave him a compliment. Their names were Mr. Hold-the-World, Mr. Money-Love, and Mr. Save-All—men that Mr. By-Ends had formerly been acquainted with; for in their minority they were school-fellows, and were taught by one Mr. Gripeman, a schoolmaster in Love-Gain, which is a market town in the county of Coveting in the north. This schoolmaster taught them the art of getting either by violence, cousenage, flattery, lying, or by putting on a guise of religion; and these four gentlemen had attained much of the art of their master, so that each of them could have kept a school himself.

It may be said of Bunyan as he parts from By-Ends:—

> "As the Parthian turned his steed
> And from the hostile camps withdrew,
> With cruel skill the backward reed
> He sent; and as he fled he slew."

Bunyan knew well the admonition, "Be ye wise as serpents and harmless as doves;" but it was the serpent he respected. It was not in his nature to believe in the dove. This Christian who confronts By-Ends is no dove and no fool. He is cunning of fence, suspicious, sagacious, witty, satirical, abounding in invective and broad, bold, delicious insolence. He doubles on By-Ends like a hare, and then bites sharp like a rat. By-Ends himself is a subtle, evasive knave, drawn with infinite skill. With Mr. Talkative he was as masterful and merciless. Bunyan threw a text like a lasso, captured the sinner, and pulled him to the point. If he proved docile Bunyan was very tender of speech to him; but if otherwise he was dismissed with long-living epithets as a Satanic scaramouch. Had Bunyan only preached the gospel he had no more been remembered than thousands of preachers of his day who are gratefully forgotten—had he prayed to this time he had won no statue; but his literary genius lives when the preacher is dead. Bunyan had the eye of a poet. He saw with such vividness that the very passions and wayward moods of men stood apart and distinct in his sight, and he gave names to them, and endowed them with their natural speech. He created new men out of characteristics of mind, and sent them into the world in shapes so defined and palpable that men knew them ever after. A vice was to Bunyan as palpable as a burglar, and courage and faith as real as his father and mother. It was the way of the age for writers to give names to adversaries. Bunyan imitated this in his Life of Mr. Bad-Man. Others did this as well as he; but Bunyan did it better than any man. His invention was marvellous, and he had besides the faculty of the dramatist; where others merely gave names he drew characters; he made distinctive and individual the qualities of his men. You knew them by their minds better than by their dress. That is why succeeding ages have read the Pilgrim's Progress, because the same people who met that extraordinary traveller are always turning up in the way of every man who has a high purpose and is bent upon carrying it out. Manners change, but humanity has still its old ways. It is because Bunyan painted these that his writing endures in repute like a picture by one of the old masters who painted for all time.

If any man wrote the adventures of a coöperator as Bunyan could, he would have to tell of his meeting with Mr. Obstinate, who will not listen to him and wants him to turn back. We all get into the company of Mr. Pliable who is persuaded without being convinced, and who at the first splash into difficulties crawls out and turns back with a cowardly adroitness. We have all encountered the stupidity of Mr. Ignorance, which nothing can enlighten. We know Mr. Turn-Away, who comes from the town of Apostacy, whose face we cannot perfectly see, for he hangs his head like a thief because he is now in pursuit of something more profitable than honesty. We all remember Mr. Little-Faith, who joined us for a time, but turned down Dead Man's Lane, where three sturdy rogues, Faintheart, Mistrust, and Knavery, did for him. Every one happily knows the braver coworkers—Mr. Unpretending, who is always sure; Mr. Conviction, who never gives way; Mr. Long-sight, who sees all down the movement, and knows where the quagmires lie; Mr. Four-Square, whom you always find at right angles; Mr. Watchful, who warns us in time; Mr. Constant, who is with us always; Mr. Resource, who never fails us; Mr. See-All, who overlooks nothing; and Mr. Never-Weary, whose counsel and aid are ever at hand. And if there is Mr. Cantankerous, who gives us no peace; and Mr. Querulous, who is never satisfied; and Mr. Pompous, who overwhelms us; and Mr. Cloudy, who gives us fits of confusion; Mr. Many-Things, who never does anything; Mr. Sympathy, who gives us no help; Mr. Poor-Soul, who would get everything done for nothing; Mr. Needle, who always turns to the dividend; and Mr. Vacancy, who thinks the Education Fund does not pay,—we are not worse off than other people. True, Bunyan only knew Mr. Facing-Both-Ways. I know Mr. Facing-Six-Ways. All societies of honest men are infested with these knaves and simpletons; but we have to thank Bunyan—great teacher of us all—for enabling us to know them, and not be dismayed at them evermore.

[For The Index.]

LAW---HUMAN AND NATURAL.

BY CHARLES MORAN.

Science each day more and more clearly demonstrates that Law, perfect and immutable, rules every portion of the universe. But before we can form a clear conception of the full meaning of this word, when applied to the forces of Nature, it is necessary to examine the meaning hitherto attached to it when applied to the enactments and edicts of human governments. To this end we have referred to the article on Law in the Encyclopædia Britannica, in which it is thus described:—

"Something laid down or established—a rule of action prescribed to and enforced upon the people by a sovereign. Four distinct ideas are included in this definition. 1. A will as the source. 2. A command to enforce it. 3. Authority to enact it. 4. That those to whom it is addressed are capable of either obeying or disobeying it; and hence it invariably enacts or implies a penalty for disobeyance."

"Law is an expression of will, in the form of a command, sanctioned by applicable penalties, proceeding from a competent authority, prescribing to free agents a rule of action for a practical end."

"The latest conception of law is said to be that it is an active force, restricting and directing the various social activities so as beneficially to determine the character of the social progress."

"The assumption in every speculation on laws must be that they ought so to govern men as, on the whole, to secure the greatest good of society. A scientific knowledge of the tendencies of human nature and society is the only safe basis of legislative action."

"Every law imports that something is to be done or left undone. But a command is impotent unless there is the power of enforcing it, which is the power of inflicting penalties if the command is not obeyed. An authority to which only a temporary obedience is paid does not come up to the notion of that authority which is requisite to give execution to laws."

The whole tenor of these remarks clearly indicates that, over and above what is stated, the term law further implies the belief that the law-makers are superior in intelligence, knowledge, prevision, and virtue, to those on whom the laws are to be enforced; that the law-makers know fully the effects which the laws they enact will produce, now and hereafter; that individual wants, desires, and pursuits can and ought to be controlled in accordance with the views of the law-makers, in the belief that they are better judges of what will insure individual welfare and progress than the individuals themselves; and, further, that governments are competent to detect every infringement of law, and inflict, in all cases, a penalty sufficient, finally, to induce individuals to conform to the laws.

Now all these ideas, when connected with human laws as means of controlling human actions and ensuring the welfare and progress of humanity, will be found upon close and careful analysis to be wholly fallacious; but they are, in the main, perfectly correct when applied to the immutable laws or forces of Nature. The idea of enacting human laws as means of insuring human welfare and progress is a radical error, because based on an entire ignorance or disregard of the important fact that every human action is as fully controlled by Nature's immutable laws as the movement of the planets or the various combinations of the atoms out of which matter, in its multifarious forms, is composed. The failure of every attempt hitherto made to enact and enforce human laws as means to an end should long since have convinced man that this is a power beyond his control, and hence which he should never attempt to exercise.

The history of all past legislation and governmental control clearly demonstrates that no human being or human organization, however intelligent, can ever foresee all the consequences that will flow from any law that is enacted; that no one can fully know the momentary and ever-varying wants and desires of individuals, and the relative importance and extent of each; and hence that these can never be properly supplied by any one but the individuals themselves: that, therefore, no one, however wise, pure, and intelligent, has a right to enact and impose a law upon any one but himself, or should ever attempt to prescribe the actions of others, or interfere with them, so long as they do not infringe the legitimate liberty and rights of other members of the community; and, further, that no government, whatever be its form and however despotic be its nature, can properly exercise the power to control individual actions, detect the infringement of its laws, and inflict proper penalties on the disobedient.

Social progress and human well-being are due to, and therefore require, constant changes in human actions. Human laws, to benefit humanity, must be adapted to existing circumstances and conditions, because circumstances and conditions cannot be made to adapt themselves to existing human laws, since that would give man the power to overcome the laws of Nature. Hence human laws should never be permitted to extend over more than a very limited area of territory, and should differ and be changed with every variation in the circumstances that surround and affect the community. Human well-being and progress greatly depend on constantly increasing heterogeneity in human actions, thoughts, desires, pursuits, and ends; whereas human laws all tend to deprive the individual of his natural right to differ in all these from his fellow-beings. Human laws, if they could be maintained and fully enforced, would prolong the status quo ad infinitum, and reduce human actions, pursuits, and ends to one uniform homogeneity that would arrest all progress by destroying all individual initiative,—one of the main sources of all past achieved human progress. Legal restrictions on individual action and individual activity can never be the source of human well-being and progress. How can human laws properly control the future actions of humanity so long as the future and its accompanying circumstances remain unknown to man? Legislation is invariably addressed to the future, never to the present.

Before laws can be enacted and enforced, the circumstances they are intended to control become more or less modified. Hence the whole history of legislation has ever been, and will ever be, the enactment of laws which, ere long, are modified or annulled, and replaced by others which share the same fate. Why should not every individual be left free to act at all times as he may deem most conducive to his own well-being under existing circumstances, so long as he does not attack the legitimate right of others? All men do not seek the same ends, nor find their happiness in the same things. How, then, can one judge what is best for others at the moment? And why should all be ever forced to conform to one and the same rule?

Nor is it true that the average of legislators and government administrators are more intelligent or more virtuous than the average of the people on whom the laws act. The reverse is usually the case, because the exercise of power almost invariably develops man's bad impulses, and checks the development of his better attributes and qualities, whilst mutual dependence on each other produces the opposite results.

But the more completely the laws of Nature are discovered, and the more they are studied and analyzed, the more fully will man become convinced that these perfect and immutable laws, when unimpeded and uninterfered with by human laws and regulations, produce at all times, in all places, under all possible circumstances, all the legitimate results sought to be attained by means of human laws; and that in the simplest and most prompt manner, and without any of the numerous drawbacks and disadvantages that invariably accompany human laws and regulations.

INORGANIC MATTER AND THE ATOMIC LAW.

The entire universe is in constant motion—a condition indispensable to modifications and changes of every kind, as no change or progress can occur in anything while in perfect, absolute rest.

Attraction and repulsion appear to be the two great antagonistic forces that retain the planets in their respective orbits, and maintain constant motion and harmony throughout all Nature.

The movements of every atom of matter in the universe, whatever be the form it momentarily assumes, or into which it becomes incorporated, are all controlled by the immutable laws or forces of Nature.

Simple bodies are those which thus far it has been found impossible to decompose into simpler substances. These are called elements, and form the bases of all chemical compounds. As yet only sixty-eight elementary substances have been discovered; of these about one-half are only found locally, and in such small quantities that they evidently play but a comparatively unimportant part in the mineral, vegetable, and animal kingdoms.

Adhesion or cohesion may exist between bodies or parts of bodies, enabling them to hold together without alteration in the properties of either, all remaining what they were. A chemical change, on the contrary, produces new bodies or substances, differing in their properties from those of the elements of which they are composed. Hence, all chemical compounds form far more intimate combination than mere adhesion or cohesion. The chemical union of the elementary component parts extends to the smallest particles of which the body is formed. The uniting force that thus firmly links particle to particle, and opposes itself to their separation, is called chemical affinity.

Chemical combinations between two or more elements arise from the intimate union which takes place between the atoms owing to the chemical affinity peculiar to each individual atom. Only whole or undivided atoms can combine together.

The atomic law of chemistry, discovered by Dalton, reveals the important fact that, in every compound substance, its elements can only combine in certain fixed, constant proportions, and under certain unalterable circumstances. Thus oxygen and hydrogen form water only when combined in the proportion of one volume of oxygen to two of hydrogen, and by weight, in the proportion of eight parts of oxygen to one part of hydrogen. Sulphur and oxygen form sulphurous anhydride only when combined in the proportion of one atom of sulphur to two atoms of oxygen. To form phosphorus anhydride requires the combination of two atoms of phosphorus with five atoms of oxygen. To form carbonic anhydride requires the combination of one atom of carbon with two atoms of oxygen. Ethyle consists of four atoms of carbon and five atoms of hydrogen.

Elementary atoms are the smallest particles of matter capable of entering into, or existing in, a state of chemical combination. Elementary atoms combine and form molecules which are the smallest particles of matter capable of existing in the free state. Most inorganic bodies can readily be reduced into their constituent elements. Weak affinities in binary compounds may be overcome by heat alone; powerful affinities must be overcome by other elements possessing stronger affinity for one or other of the component elements of the oxide or other compounds.

Throughout Nature disintegration and combination are incessantly going on. Matter and force are indestructible, but they incessantly undergo protean transformations productive of wondrous results. The same particles of matter, in time, form a part of an infinite variety of substances or bodies, each different in its nature and in the results it produces. And all these bodies are constantly reduced into their elements by the forces of Nature, which again combine them into other forms as evanescent as those of which these various elements had previously formed a part. This seems to establish that it is matter that is immortal, and not the combinations which matter forms or assumes. Electricity and magnetism probably play a far more important part in both chemical combinations and crystallization than we are yet aware of. In order that a body may crystallize or combine, it must first be brought into the liquid or gaseous state, the only conditions in which atoms become sufficiently free to move; and without motion or movement no change nor combination can take place. Combinations of elementary substances and of their binary compounds are supposed to be in some way dependent upon the electric condition of the elements; two elements that combine together to make a compound are believed to do so in consequence of having opposite electric energies. The affinities between acids and alkalies are very strong, and by their union they form salts. In such instances the acids are endowed with the electro-negative energy, and the alkalies with the electro-positive. The union of two salts is called a double salt. In such instances, of two combining salts, the one has an electro-positive and the other an electro-negative energy. Crystallization is due to the atoms being endowed with polarity, which attracts dissimilar poles and repels similar poles. The crystallizable atoms, set in motion by electricity, invariably arrange themselves in the order prescribed by their polarity, and the various chemical combinations invariably follow the atomic law. Thus are all the movements and combinations of every atom of matter ever controlled by Nature's immutable, automatic laws or forces, no movements or combinations being possible except those in accordance with these laws, accident never being the cause of any change or new combination in Nature.

Now if the atomic law of chemical combinations and the laws of crystallization control the various movements and combinations of which the elements of matter are susceptible, it becomes evident that no new compounds, and no new combinations or results, can ever appear unless new elements or new forces are first produced. And there is no evidence whatever that a single new elementary substance or natural force has ever been evolved in the universe during the entire period of time of which we possess any reliable record, or have discovered any relics. On the contrary, every new discovery of elementary substances or of natural forces is accompanied with ample evidence that these substances and forces have existed as long as all the other substances and forces previously known.

Whenever the various elementary atoms of inorganic matter are brought into contact under proper conditions and in the requisite proportions, the laws or forces of Nature act through what appears to be a force inherent to the atom; the law and the process of crystallization and of chemical combination are one and the same thing,—they form one act, and they, like all the laws or forces of Nature, act automatically. As George Henry Lewes says, "The law is the process," and "the process must be the process;" but this only means that neither analogy nor reference to anything else ever conveys to the mind a better knowledge of what anything is than its exhibition to the senses,—sole agencies through which the human mind obtains a knowledge of objective things. We may get to know something of the unknown through the known; but the fullest knowledge we can obtain of anything is through its direct contact with our senses.

All combinations of elementary inorganic matter are automatic processes; and the process and the force that produces the process are inseparable—are apparently one and the same,—simply because force only acts on or through matter, and because the senses are only adapted to take cognizance of material things. Hence, force aside from matter, if it can and does so exist, will probably ever be incognizable to man; but this in no way proves that force is not the efficient cause of the movements of inorganic matter. Although matter and force may never be separable except abstractly in the human mind, man is nevertheless forced to believe that inorganic matter is invariably impelled by force of some kind or other, since every observed effect which has been traced back to its cause has been found to be due to some anterior efficient cause or phenomenon. All human reasoning is nothing but tracing back observed phenomena to their anterior efficient causes or phenomena. This man has successfully done so often and to so great an extent that, by analogy, he is forced to accept as an axiom the conclusion that no phenomenon can ever occur without an efficient, necessary, antecedent cause or phenomenon. The opponents of this conclusion, before they can hope to refute or overthrow it, must furnish some well-established evidence of the occurrence of a phenomenon without connection with a preëxisting cause or phenomenon. Force cannot be a mere attribute of inorganic matter, for that would make matter the efficient First Cause of all things. It may be that in time all the movements of matter for which as yet we have discovered no efficient cause will be proved to be due to electricity and magnetism, probably two different modes of action of one and the same force. But electricity and magnetism must be something different from mere matter, since they appear to be transmissible, separate, and apart from the matter on or through which they act, since matter can be made to conduct or transmit electricity without any apparent movement in the conducting matter.

ORGANIC MATTER.

When we closely examine and analyze organic matter, we find that though composed of the same elementary substances, and though as fully and as efficiently controlled by the immutable laws of Nature, as inorganic matter, yet its movements and combinations are carried on in so different a manner, and produce such different results from those produced by inorganic matter, that there can be no doubt of the absolute necessity of the great fundamental division of matter into INORGANIC and ORGANIC,—notwithstanding that the validity and soundness of this distinction has for some time past been questioned and decried by materialists and superficial observers and thinkers.

All the movements and combinations of organic matter seem to be due mainly to vitality, or vital force, or life; which, possibly, may hereafter be found to be only another effect or mode of action of electricity and magnetism. But in the mean time, let us see if it be not possible to demonstrate conclusively the existence of vitality or vital force, and prove that it is the true efficient cause of the various phenomena ascribed to it.

Inorganic matter, as we have shown, is composed of atoms of elementary substances which, when free in the fluid or gaseous state, and brought into contact under certain circumstances, combine together automatically, through forces apparently inherent to the atoms. But under no circumstances, as yet, have these elementary substances been found to combine together into vital cells or protoplasms, except within what may be called the internal laboratory of the vital organism of which it forms a component part. Every organism, vegetable as well as animal, has to absorb, in one manner or another, various inorganic substances, and transform or transmute them within itself into the vital cells of which it is composed, as these cells cannot be assimilated from without, the epidermis preventing this; and hence all vital cells have to be formed within the organism itself at the very spot they each are to occupy. And not only must each organism form within itself all the cells of which it is constructed, but it must further construct within itself the cells out of which the vital germs are formed (except so far as the male element contributes its part to their impregnation, another important fact which the doctrine of evolution in no way accounts for); which germs, in time, separate from the parent organism, and, under favorable circumstances, through the inherent internal power of transmuting inorganic matter into the vital cells of which they are composed develop into organisms similar to their progenitors. This internal power of assimilating inorganic matter and transmuting it into the vital cells of which each organism is composed is no doubt the power or force we denominate vitality—LIFE—and the loss of this power is what is denominated DEATH. The fact that the same food which at one time will sustain and develop an organism, at another time, though absorbed in precisely the same manner and condition, will not prevent the decay and ultimate death of the organism, is a conclusive proof that inorganic matter is not the sole source of vitality—is not alone the cause of the existence of life.

When inorganic elements enter into a living organism, they entirely pass out of the realm and control of ordinary inorganic chemistry. Chemical affinity perishes and dies as completely as life does after an animal has heaved its last sigh. In their composition, in their properties, in their very physical conformation, the elements of living structures altogether differ from inorganic compounds. The proximate principles formed in organized beings never crystallize, although composed of elements that do form crystals when not in a living body. The only apparent exception to this is when a portion of their structure is in the act of passing to the dead, inorganic world, as for instance in urea. And although we know the composition of the proximate principles in animal and vegetable structures, we cannot synthetically construct them, the only exception being again urea, which is a dead, and not a living, substance. While endowed with life, every vital organism possesses the power of overcoming, more or less, the force of gravitation, which so powerfully controls all inorganic matter when not in a gaseous state; whereas, the moment life is overcome by death, every vital organism becomes instantly as fully under the control of gravitation as inorganic matter in any of its forms.

The ingenious, persevering, and accurate investigations, long carried on by eminent scientists of various ages and nations, have as yet produced no proof that vital germs of any kind have ever been evolved from any other source than the coöperating forces of their own fully developed, vital progenitors, male and female. This necessity for the coöperation of the male and female element to the evolution of vital germs alone appears to be a perfect and all-sufficient refutation of the theory of spontaneous generation, a theory which not only has never yet been established even in regard to the simplest form of vital organisms, but which, if proved in regard to these, would further require conclusive evidence that these primitive cells and germs are endowed with the power of transforming themselves, through evolution, into all the higher existing organisms, before science should accept the theory of the evolution of all vital organisms from one or a few of their simplest forms. As Professor Lister well said, in his recent introductory lecture before the University of Edinburgh: "The doctrine of spontaneous or equivocal generation has been chased successively to lower and lower stations in the world of organized beings, as our means of investigation have improved." And now Dr. Bastian, the ardent and indefatigable advocate of spontaneous generation, in his reply to these remarks of Professor Lister, thus relegates the doctrine back into the invisible regions beyond the ken of man: "It should be distinctly understood that those who strictly adhere to the evolution hypothesis could never believe in the origination of any but the lowest and simplest organic forms by the process of archebiosis. . . . Molecular combination, giving rise to units of protoplasm far below the minimum visible stage of our most powerful microscope, would represent these initial collections by which alone living matter could come into being—though the germs thus initiated may afterward appear as minutest visible sparks growing into bacteria or vibriones." Now so long as these germs (if they really exist) thus remain invisible to man, even with the aid of the most powerful microscope, as they cannot be watched and observed to grow or develop into bacteria, vibriones, or any other forms, how can science accept them as the germs from which all the vital organisms of the world have been, and are still, evolved? It would be most unscientific to accept as a fundamental truth an unproved and evidently unprovable hypothesis, contradicted by numerous well-established facts, such as that all hitherto discovered vital germs have been the joint product of free-existing, fully-developed, male and female organisms—that all the cells of which vital organisms and their germs are composed are and must be formed within the vital organisms themselves, and nowhere else—and that all intelligent horticulturists and breeders of domesticated animals have observed it to be an invariable rule that each germ develops itself into an organism similar to its progenitors, the utmost variation being quite limited, and never altering the main characteristics and attributes of its prototypes; and most of the variations being due to man's intervention and protecting care, which, by propagating from the best and most perfect individual specimens that can be found, and by assuring to the germs and to their progenitors shelter against the inclemencies of the weather, and better, more abundant, and more regular supplies of food than they could themselves obtain, place them in circumstances far more favorable to their full and perfect development than is possible in their state of nature, which maintains the original types through the law of the survival of the strongest and fittest; but this never permits the slightest advancement beyond that condition, man being the only vital organism that possesses the power of aiding his own development and that of the inferior organisms which he takes under his protecting care. This is fully proved by the well-known fact that improved domesticated plants and animals, when replaced under the unaided influence of Nature, in time invariably relapse into their original low types.

The fact is, the evolution theory of Darwin is mainly based on accidental modifications of vital organisms, which, thereafter, are supposed to be perpetuated by inheritance when found beneficial to the first modified organisms. But not only has it never been proved that the will or desire of progenitors has ever effected any modification in the structure of their descendants, but this theory is contradicted by the well-known fact that important modifications or variations in any one member of an organism rarely take place without corresponding variations in all the other parts. Were this not so, how could naturalists, from a single bone of an animal, be able to describe the size and form of the individual of which it had formed a part? Excessive variations are generally followed by sterility, which insures their eventual disappearance. If there is one thing which Nature has fully proved to be within her power, it is the maintenance of species through time without important modifications, nearly all those that occur being due to variations in the surroundings in which the organisms are placed, which variations never exceed certain fixed limits.

The transmutation of inorganic matter into vegetable forms must have preceded its transmutation into animal forms, as the latter cannot absorb or feed, to any extent, upon inorganic matter, which must first be transformed into vegetable cells before it can become the food and means of development of animal forms. The transformation of inorganic matter into vegetable and animal cells or tissues is probably somewhat similar in principle to that which controls chemical combinations. Vegetable germs and forms absorb carbonic acid gas, their main food, through their leaves, and other substances through their roots, transformed into sap; when these various substances meet they probably combine into cells, or into the substances of which the various cells are formed. The same with animal organisms: the various elementary substances which they absorb in the form of food and drink, and the air they breathe, combine together and form the corpuscles which, through the circulation of the blood, reach every portion of the organism, and furnish the materials required for its development and repair, and for the construction of the germs which perpetuate the species. Thus all living organisms are divisible into two great divisions—vegetable and animal. The nutriment of the vegetable kingdom is derived from inorganic matter drawn from the soil, the water, the air; —these the digestive organs of animals cannot appropriate and assimilate; they require to be previously transformed by the vital forces or power of vegetable organisms into gluten, oil, and other proximate principles. And plants contain cellulose, which is never found in animals, while animals convert some of their food into gelatine, which is never found in plants. Although we know the composition of the proximate principles in animal and vegetable structures, we yet cannot synthetically construct them; we cannot take these principles and combine them so as to form an organ—a leaf, a liver, etc. All organic beings must possess a nutrient fluid constantly circulating through all their parts, and constantly parting with its constituent elements to the various organs—sap in vegetables and blood in animals. The stoppage of this circulation is fatal to the organism, because upon it depends its development, and the repair of any injury it sustains, as well as the replacement of everything effete, which every organism is constantly throwing off. And this nourishing fluid must be frequently exposed to the air: the sap to appropriate carbonic acid and give out oxygen—the blood to appropriate oxygen and give out carbonic acid.

Thus do we find that throughout all Nature everything has a specific function, and aids in producing the great final results which are assured by the persistent, unchanging forces of Nature. When this is fully perceived and understood, can any one believe that everything in the universe is the result of inorganic matter and the forces inherent to it? Can we refuse to admit that vitality or vital force plays a most important part in Nature, and controls inorganic matter in many of its transformations or transmutations, instead of inorganic matter being the efficient cause of all the results of which it forms a part?

THE UNITARIAN CONFERENCE.

BY REV. JOHN W. CHADWICK.

At the Second Unitarian Church, Brooklyn, yesterday, Rev. John W. Chadwick, the pastor, gave a brief review of the proceedings of the Unitarian Conference, held at Saratoga, last week. He took his text from the Proverbs, xxvii., 17: "As iron sharpeneth iron, so man his friend." . . . "With the exception of the discussion which took place on Thursday afternoon, the whole temper of the Conference was liberal, and kind, and forward-reaching. Mr. Hale's report, as President of the Council of the Conference, was marked by the most exalted sentiment of liberality, the most absolute freedom from all merely verbal and technical limitations. The two essays that stood out from all others as preëminently free and strong were of a sort that would have been impossible in any Unitarian gathering a dozen years ago, and yet they were listened to with profound attention, and were applauded. The addresses referred to were those by Charles G. Ames, of Germantown, on the 'Voluntary System in Church Government and its Results,' and S. R. Calthrop, of Syracuse, on the 'Relations of Scientific and Religious Thought.' The highest point of inspiration touched by any speaker during all the meetings of the Conference was that touched by Dr. Bellows, on Wednesday afternoon, when he made such an appeal for what is sometimes spoken of as "mere morality." The preacher bore his testimony to the grandeur of this utterance all the more willingly because on Thursday afternoon the same speaker made a speech in which, 'tried as by fire' in the white heat of his previous utterance, it was made manifest that it was not of God. Besides the great addresses made by Ames and Calthrop, several other thoughtful and excellent papers were presented. The preacher then went on to say that he had twice referred to the discussion which had taken place on Thursday afternoon, as in some degree an interruption to the general harmony that prevailed throughout the meetings of the Conference. This discussion originated in a resolution offered by James Freeman Clarke, the object of which was to express the sympathy of the Conference with the Free Religious Association in endeavors to promote the cause of liberty in religion. This resolution was not offered alone, but together with a similar one addressed to the Congregational Churches soon to meet in New Haven, expressing the sympathy of the Conference with the endeavors of the Orthodox Congregational Churches to promote religious independence and freedom from ecclesiastical restraint. Even this resolution excited not a little opposition, some persons contending that Orthodox Congregationalism did not mean to promote the independence of the churches. Witness, they said, the Council held in Brooklyn at a very recent date. The word independence was changed to freedom, and then the resolution was passed. After this there seemed to be no valid reason why the resolution of sympathy with the Free Religious Association, not as such, but in its efforts to promote the cause of liberty in religion, should not pass. On the contrary, it aroused a storm of indignation. It was one thing to express sympathy with the mother who had driven us with contempt and loathing from the door, but quite another to express sympathy with the strong man-child that had parted from us more in sorrow than in anger, and set up a roof-tree of his own. He was a pitiful example of Mr. Emerson's assertion, 'The new man always hates the newest, and the seceder from the seceder is as damnable as the Pope himself.' 'I can sympathize with criminals,' said one doughty individual, 'I can sympathize with Mormons, but I cannot sympathize with anybody who rejects the Christian name.' As if there were not a great many Free Religionists who do not reject the name, thirty or forty Unitarian ministers being members of the Free Religious Association. Mr. Collyer, and Mr. Clarke, and Mr. Ames supported the resolution with words that ought to have convinced the Pilgrim Fathers, but the Unitarian laity in conference assembled were not convinced. The resolution was laid upon the table by a large majority. But the spirit underlying this resolution was a Proteus, which, quelled in one form, immediately appeared in another, and, strangely enough, it was the stoutest opponent of it in its first form that offered it in the second. Dr. Bellows offered the following resolution:—

"'Resolved, That this Conference heartily endorses the action of its officers, in inviting to be present, by its pastor (William J. Potter) and delegates, the Unitarian Society in New Bedford, and desires to have its general spirit interpreted by this particular action.'"

"This resolution was a coming down from the general to the particular. Mr. Potter's name, as many of the congregation well knew, was dropped last May from the list of Unitarian ministers at a meeting of the Association, packed for that purpose. But the Conference, more generous than the Association, had invited him to be present. 'Blessed are those who do good by strength and get found out afterward,' said Charles Lamb. The Conference had done good by strength, and it had got found out. But when it was proposed to do openly what had been done stealthily, though all the best intelligence of the Conference was enlisted in favor of such action, the resolution, like its predecessor, was laid upon the table. There was really something splendid in the superiority of the Conference to all the ordinary traditions of leadership. Bellows, Clarke, Collyer, and Hale threw themselves in vain against the inert mass of the body of the lay delegates. In the whole course of the debate it was noticeable, as it has been in every similar debate at previous meetings of the Conference, that all the hard, uncharitable expressions came from those who imagined themselves set for the defence of the Gospel. The Christian spirit in these debates is always in an inverse ratio to the love of Christian shibboleths. The preacher said that he should not speak as if illiberality was the order of the day in the Conference at Saratoga. It was far otherwise. When not labelled as such, the most liberal sentiments elicited the warmest admiration, and this was generally so. The officers chosen for the next two years were such as to insure the broadest liberality in all the practical works of the Conference. Prof. Carrol Everett, of Cambridge, is to be the President of the new council, and where the spirit of Prof. Everett is, there is liberality." Mr. Chadwick closed his address with an eloquent and feeling allusion to a death that had taken place among his congregation during his absence.—New York Times, Sept. 21.

HIGHLAND ANCESTRY.—A dispute arose between two members of the clan Campbell and M'Lean, on the never-ending subject of their ancestors. M'Lean would not allow that the Campbells had any right to rank with the M'Leans in antiquity, who, he insisted, were in existence and a clan from the beginning of the world. Campbell had a little more biblical lore than his antagonist, and asked him if the clan M'Lean was before the flood. "Flood! What flood?" said M'Lean. "The flood that, you know, drowned all the world except Noah and his family and his flocks," said Campbell. "Pooh! you and your flood!" said M'Lean; "my family was before the flood." "I have not read in my Bible," said Campbell, "of the name of M'Lean going into Noah's ark." "Noah's ark!" retorted M'Lean in contempt; "who ever heard of a M'Lean that had not a boat of his own?"

Poetry.

[For THE INDEX.]

THE SITUATION.

Let craven cowards shirk the fight,
And Treachery sneak to dens away;
Let guilty Falsehood shun the light
Of e'en the stars' remittent ray.

The brave shall breast the danger nigh;
The innocent unfaltering stand;
The faithful lift the banner high
That bears the motto: "Free the Land!"

While holy Truth, with sinless head
Uncovered, to the front shall run;
And with her own white hands shall spread
Her record to the shining sun.

E. M.

FAREWELL.

BY CELIA THAXTER.

The crimson sunset faded into gray;
Upon the murmurous sea the twilight fell;
The last warm breath of the delicious day
Passed with a mute farewell.

Above my head in the soft purple sky
A wild note sounded like a shrill-voiced bell;
Three gulls met, wheeled, and parted with a cry
That seemed to say, "Farewell!"

I watched them: one sailed east, and one soared west,
And one went floating south; while like a knell
That mournful cry the empty sky possessed,
"Farewell, farewell, farewell!"

"Farewell!" I thought, It is the earth's one speech:
All human voices the sad chorus swell:
Though mighty love to heaven's high gate may reach,
Yet must he say, "Farewell!"

The rolling world is girdled with the sound,
Perpetually breathed from all who dwell
Upon its bosom, for no place is found
Where is not heard, "Farewell!"

"Farewell, farewell,"—from wave to wave 'tis tossed,
From wind to wind: earth has one tale to tell;
All other sounds are dulled, and drowned, and lost
In this one cry, "Farewell!"

—From the October Atlantic.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING SEPTEMBER 26.

N. P. Martin, $1.10; James Ramsden, 40 cents; Julius Kirschbaum, 45 cents; D. J. Bastian, 20 cents; George Lewis, 20 cents; George H. Foster, $1.34; A. K. Loring, 48 cents; G. M. Royce, 20 cents; P. S. Sherman, Jr., 20 cents; George Iles, 30 cents; J. S. Palmer, 25 cents; Galen Coffin, $3; A. J. Moody, $3; W. H. Parsons, $3; O. M Hawley, $2 25; J. Vila Blake, $2.25; F. A. Green. $3 50; E. M. Berry, $3; J. Spencer, $5; A. G. Wheelock, $3; Ellen Groot, $3; H. G. White, $5; John Consalus, $3; R. B. Miller, $3; M. B. Comins, $3; C. A. Thompson, $4.50; E. B. Seeley, $1.50; G. H. A. Morse, $3; M. C. Huling, 3; Oscar Roos, $3; Will. Kennedy, 50 cents; W. M Bennett, $3.50; J. A. Walters, $6; Emeline Fowle, $1.50; C. Ankele, $2.25; John D. Stranahan, $3; H. S. Bancroft, 1.50; George O. Smith, $3; W. W. Frothingham, $3; George T. Alpress, $4.25; Harry Grundy, $5; J. M. Bussell, $2 25; F. D. Nellis, $2.25; F. S. Allen, $3; J. H. Clifford. $1; George Brucke, $5.25; George Shepherd, $3; Henry Townsend, $3; J. K. Ingalls, $5.25; S. J. Faber, $1.50; Clarence Vail, $3; Robert Haydock, $3; W. H. Wrightington, $3; Mary A. Fenner, $1.50; Miss S. J. Baker, $3; N. C. Nash, $1; C. W. Barrett, 50 cents; J. A. Lapham, 25 cents; C. D. B. Mills, 20 cents; Mrs. Otis, 25 cents; C. A. Day, 20 cents; James T. Blakeney, 20 cents; James Humphreys, 75 cents; W. K. Smalley, 25 cents; N. P. Olson, 15 cents; Warren Griswold, 20 cents; A. W. Kelsey, $1; C. S. Patrick, 20 cents; S. Henshaw, 25 cents; W. I. Bowditch, 25 cents; S. R. Koehler, 25 cents; I. W. Graffam, 25 cents; Charles Hazeltine, 25 cents; G. W. Batchelder, 25 cents; George Batchelor, 25 cents; H. T. Wright, 20 cents; G. F. Upton, 20 cents; Am. News Co., $7.20.

RECEIVED.

Books.

MODERN CHRISTIANITY, A CIVILIZED HEATHENISM. By the Author of The Fight at Dame Europa's School. Boston: William F. Gill & Co., 151 Washington St. 1875.

THE CHURCH PORCH. A Service Book and Hymnal for Sunday Schools. Compiled and Edited by William R. Huntington, D.D., Rector of All Saints Church, Worcester. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co. 1874.

Pamphlets and Periodicals.

THE MARTYRDOM OF JESUS OF NAZARETH. A Historio-Critical Treatise on the Last Chapters of the Gospel. By Rev. Dr. Isaac M. Wise. Cincinnati: Office of the American Israelite.

OF SELF-CONSCIOUSNESS. An Essay by Rev. Charles E. Grinnell.

BIBLIOTHECA DIABOLICA. Being a Choice Selection of the most valuable Books relating to the Devil, etc. On Sale by Scribner, Welford & Armstrong, 654 Broadway, New York. 1874.

SERMONS by Mr. Hope Moncrieff, at St. George's Hall, London.—"The Spirit of God:" August 2.—"The People of God:" August 9.—"The Will of God:" August 16.—"The Salvation of God:" August 23.—"The Service of God:" August 29.

ATLANTIC MONTHLY. October, 1874. Boston: H. O. Houghton & Co.

OUR FIRST HUNDRED YEARS. In 12 Parts: Part 3. New York: United States Publishing Co.

PENN MONTHLY. October, 1874. Philadelphia: 506 Walnut St.

SANITARIAN. October, 1874. New York: 234 Broadway.

MEDICAL ECLECTIC. September, 1874. New York: R. S. Newton, 137 W. 47th St.

PHYSICIAN'S MONITOR for 1874. New York: W. A. Townsend, 177 Broadway.

HERALD OF HEALTH. October, 1874. New York: Wood & Holbrook.

The Index.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY
BY
THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,
AT
NO. 1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.
Toledo Office: No. 35 Monroe Street. Julius T. Frey, Agent and Clerk.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

Francis Ellingwood Abbot, ... Editor.
Abram Walter Stevens, ... Associate Editor.
Octavius Brooks Frothingham, Thomas Wentworth Higginson, William J. Potter, Richard P. Hallowell, William H. Spencer, Mrs. E. D. Cheney, Rev. Charles Voysey (England), Prof. Francis W. Newman (England), Editorial Contributors.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

BOSTON, OCTOBER 1, 1874.

THE INDEX will be sent to any name not now on our mail-list until January 1, 1876, on receipt of $3.00 in advance. Here is a chance to receive the paper for fifteen months at the price of twelve months. Please tell your friends and neighbors of this liberal offer, and help us to increase our circulation.

OUR ACKLOWLEDGEMENTS are due to Mr. George Jacob Holyoake, for thirty years editor of the London Reasoner, and famous as the chief founder of the Secularist party in England, for his kindness in furnishing us with a printed copy of his lecture on Bunyan, which is contained in this number of THE INDEX. As a piece of genuine literary criticism, its merits will strike every one who is familiar with the Pilgrim's Progress. It is appreciative in the highest degree of that marvellous book, and will command the respect even of those who may not be in sympathy with radical ideas.

"WE MUST each shape our lives by our own standard," writes a correspondent in courteous condemnation of our treatment of the free-love question. But this is only a half truth, which must be supplemented by the further statement that "we must shape our own standard by the truth of things." Morality is an objective science, or it is no science at all; and, like every other objective science, it requires us to conform our thinking to real relations, on peril of fatal blunders. The laws of sexual morality are not whatever the individual fancies them to be, but must be determined by the scientific study of society, its organic conditions and its normal development. Whoever undertakes to determine them by a mere subjective theory, regardless of the fact that marriage is the result of necessary evolution and not of arbitrary enactment, is wholly unfitted to be a teacher on this subject. The trouble with the free-love doctrine is that it is based on a denial of moral obligation as superior to mere sentiment. The conscience and reason of the individual ought to give law to love in his private life; the universal conscience and reason of the race ought to give law to love in all social regulations of marriage. In any other sense, free love is an absurdity—an offence against reason and conscience.

THE STRAIGHTFORWARD and manly conduct illustrated by the following card deserves and commands our profound respect:—

A CHANGE OF BELIEF.

TO THE EDITORS OF THE BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER:—

I should esteem it a favor if you would give publicity to the following statement submitted by me to the Baptist Ministers' Conference in Tremont Temple on Monday, the 21st instant.

EDWARD F. STRICKLAND.

TO THE BAPTIST MINISTERIAL CONFERENCE, TREMONT TEMPLE:—

Gentlemen,—I beg leave to notify you that in consequence of my experiencing a change of belief respecting the fundamental doctrines of your Church, to wit: total depravity of the human family, the eternal punishment of the finally impenitent, the doctrine of the Trinity, and divinity of Christ, I therefore can no longer retain my position in your ranks, and feel it to be consistent with honor and propriety to inform you of my change of sentiments and the dissolution of my connection with the Baptist denomination. In doing so I request that you will give the fullest publicity to the same. The letter of commendation and dismissal from the pastorate of my last charge—the Calvary Baptist Church, of Westerly, R.I.,—now in my possession, will be returned to that body with a copy of this notice.

EDWARD F. STRICKLAND.

BOSTON, Sept. 21, 1874.

ECCLESIASTICAL ENCROACHMENTS.

Liberals are very sceptical at present as to the possibility of religious questions getting into politics. From the Boston Daily Advertiser of September 22 we learn of two instances which have just occurred, and which, however trivial they may appear to some, we consider to be very important signs of the times.

In New Haven, the Catholics openly tried to elect a school board that should carry out their own sectarian schemes. "A prominent Roman Catholic clergyman," says the Advertiser, "had announced from his pulpit that it was time for the Roman Catholics to act and get control of the board, so that their schools might be supported by the public funds. A Catholic ticket was in the field. Two members of the present board are of that religious belief. The excitement called out a vote of 5,000, unprecedented in the history of New Haven school elections. About 1,400 votes were cast for the Catholic candidates, but they were defeated, and the regular nominees were elected by a majority of about 1,500, the cumulative system being used. Many Roman Catholics condemned the sectarian animus of the others, and refused to vote the Catholic ticket." This account shows that nearly one third of the votes cast were Catholic, and that now, as always, great excitement followed the appeal to the ballot in matters of religious belief. The fact that the Catholics were defeated is far less important than the fact that they have openly attempted to carry sectarian plans by political means.

The other instance shows that the Protestant clergy are quite as willing as the Catholics to combine to exert political influence in favor of whatever they choose to advocate. At the "regular weekly meeting of the Methodist ministers" held on September 21 (apparently in Boston), the following resolution was introduced by Rev. Mr. Gill, and adopted: "Resolved, That if the Republican party nominate for Governor a man who is known to be in favor of a license law, or an anti-prohibitionist, we pledge ourselves to vote and use our influence to induce others to vote against his election." The particular object for which the Methodist clergy thus combined is of far less consequence than the fact that they combined at all as a clerical body to influence a political election.

Would either of these events have been likely to occur in 1860? If not, why not? Is any one so blind as not to discern a rapidly growing tendency to bring religious questions for decision to the ballot-box,—so blind as not to discern the great and imminent danger involved in such a tendency? We see no way so speedy and so sure of averting this danger as that of frankly and bravely meeting it. If the true American principle of the utter separation of Church and State shall be unflinchingly carried out by conceding the Demands of Liberalism, all such collisions will be rendered impossible in the future; but such collisions will become increasingly numerous and perilous until that final settlement of the great question at issue. Liberals! You have a great public duty to discharge; are you sufficiently in earnest to discharge it?

PRACTICAL MEASURES FOR THE REPRESSION OF INTEMPERANCE.

Mr. J. Sedgebeer, of Painesville, Ohio, has written us an interesting letter with reference to prohibitory legislation which, as he states, embodies "the substance of twenty-five years of reflection on the cause and partial cure of intemperance, and on the 'license or no license' question." "Being constitutionally opposed to using any kind of intoxicating drinks (even down to lager beer or old cider), I am opposed to granting licenses to any one. But I desire free trade in liquors, as in all other articles of merchandise; holding, however, the venders of intoxicating beverages responsible for all damages of every description, to person or property, which may arise out of their business."

The plan he favors in dealing with intemperance embraces the following points:—

1. Any person who proposes to trade in alcoholic liquids of any kind shall be required to give notice of his intention to the proper authorities, and at the same time give ample bonds for the payment of whatever damages he may be sentenced to pay by the courts.

2. Any person convicted of selling such goods without previously giving the required notice and bonds shall for the first offence be imprisoned not less than thirty days, and for the second offence imprisoned sixty days and fined not less than fifty dollars.

3. Any person found drunk in the streets, or disturbing the public peace in consequence of drinking, shall be arrested and held in durance till sober, and then put on his oath to testify when, where, and from whom he obtained the intoxicating drink. The vender thus pointed out shall be brought at once into court, and examined under oath as to the facts of the case. If guilty, he shall have judgment rendered against him for damages and costs.

4. Such other provisions should be made as may be necessary to give efficiency to the general policy here indicated: the object being to curtail and lessen intemperance, and at the same time to ensure personal freedom to all—simply holding every man responsible for all damages to others which may be entailed by his own free acts.

That the true policy on the temperance question—the policy which shall at the same time protect social interests, and respect individual liberty, in the highest possible degree—lies in the general direction of Mr. Sedgebeer's proposal, seems tolerably plain.

The crime of intemperance must be admitted to be the act of the intemperate man himself, in drinking what deprives him of his humanity for the time being, and makes him an irrational animal guided solely by his passions. But, as no man gets instantaneously intoxicated, he who supplies the sot with drink when he is evidently losing his reason must be admitted to be particeps criminis. If intemperance is a crime at all, the intemperate man must be held to be the criminal, and he who helps make him intemperate must be held to be the accomplice. No view of the case can be a just or true one which reverses the fact, making the vender the principal and the drinker the accessory; yet this is what the prohibitory law does, by punishing the vender and letting the drinker go. We certainly hold that society has a right to treat intemperance as a crime very threatening to its own peace and safety; but we also hold that the intemperate man himself is the primary criminal, while the vender is criminal in a secondary degree. Equitable legislation on the subject must be conformed to this actual state of the case.

It seems necessary, therefore, to assign the severer penalty to the greater offender. If the vender should be punished by one or two months imprisonment in case the sale is made to an improper person, the drunkard should be punished by imprisonment for at least twice as long. Supposing that every man found drunk on the streets should be sentenced to several months' imprisonment in the House of Correction, while the man who sold him the liquor he got drunk on should be imprisoned for a shorter term, is it not likely that arrests for drunkenness would be very soon diminished in frequency? Is it not likely that, if the fact of open intoxication involved with certainty such public disgrace and ignominy, a healthier public opinion would soon be created by the reflex influence of the laws upon it? Make the laws just in themselves, and they become powerful auxiliaries of public morality; make them unjust, and they more or less tend to demoralize the whole community. On every ground both of intrinsic equity and practical expediency, we believe that legislation which confines itself to meting out penalties for actual intemperance in the manner we have suggested will do more in five years to make intemperance discreditable and infrequent than prohibitory statutes can do in fifty years. Such legislation we shall emphatically approve until better arguments for prohibition than we have yet seen shall have been invented. It would not go beyond the universally conceded right of society to protect itself by penalties against dangerous crimes, while it would not violate in the slightest degree the personal liberty of unoffending citizens.

We doubt not a little, moreover, whether it is practicable or really just to make the vender pay uncertain "damages" for acts he did not personally commit. It appears more equitable to fine him a fixed sum for every case in which he is convicted of being an accomplice in the crime of intemperance, according to a fixed scale of fines for the first offence, second offence, and so on. This legislation would be more readily approved by public opinion, we suspect, and therefore more easily carried into execution. The vender would know beforehand exactly what risk he was running by selling to improper persons, and would be cut off from the sympathy of those who might consider the damages excessive in any particular case. There is inherent wrong in any law which, after a given act is committed by one man, makes the degree of punishment it incurs dependent on what some other man does subsequently. This wrong is a grave objection to the "Adair Liquor Law" of Ohio, if we understand it,—not to mention here other objections. The only way in which the recovery of "damages" could be secured with any approach to equity would seem to be something like this: to allow all who could prove their claim to "damages" to recover them from the State, and then to assess the total amount of such "damages" upon the whole body of liquor-sellers in the proportion of the amounts of liquor they respectively sell. This would oblige the liquor-traffic simply to pay its own expenses, which would seem to be no more than just in one view of the matter. But the chances of fraud and evasion would be so great that we doubt the feasibility of such a policy. It would be easier and simpler, we apprehend, to establish a regular scale of fines, as above suggested, and devote the proceeds, after all other expenses were paid, to the relief of those who are the worst sufferers by the existence of intemperance, namely, the families of the intemperate.

These are only crude hints or suggestions, offered with befitting modesty as a slight contribution to the proper consideration of a grave public question. What we are satisfied of is this: that the protection of public interests must be reconciled with the preservation of private liberties, which the prohibitory principle fails to do. The prohibitionists think they strike at the root of the evil by suppressing (or attempting ineffectually to suppress) the sale of alcohol; whereas they only lop off the branches. "Stop the supply!" they cry. We answer, stop the demand. The mad lust for liquor is the fountain of intemperance; drying up the fountain is a more radical cure than damming the stream. You may make an individual temperate against his will by locking him up in jail; but you cannot lock up a whole community. It is impossible to prevent the public's getting what the public are determined to have. Is it not every way wiser, as it certainly is juster, to rely on such means and measures as shall diminish the demand for liquor rather than to fight against nature by striving to suppress the supply? The crazy passion for drink is not natural to man; it is a disease created by ignorance, misery, poverty, idleness, absence of innocent amusements, and a thousand other things which prohibitionists do not seem to consider at all. Just laws may do much to free society from intemperance in the streets and other public places; but nothing short of such improved social conditions as shall give instruction to the ignorant, happiness to the wretched, employment to the idle, honorable ambition and an honorable career to the desperate, pure and elevating recreation to the unoccupied, and so on, will ever cure the monstrous evil of such intemperance as does not make itself an open, public offence. So long as mischievous social conditions prevail, arbitrary suppression will only drive the disease inward to prey on society's vitals. Let us not forget wisdom in our philanthropy, but seek the best things by the best ways.

THE ART OF GETTING TRUTH FROM OTHERS.

Whenever I meet an earnest and honest man, who makes to me a statement of his belief which does not tally with my own, I immediately inquire of myself, "Why did he say that? He must have said it because he believes it to be true; and, surely, he would not believe it to be true unless there really were some truth in it." And so I feel it incumbent upon me straightway to find out, not how much error there is in the man's belief, but how much truth there is in it.

This is the way, I think, we should meet all those who differ from us, and all who advance novel and uncommon theories. For, I take it, all men are natural lovers of truth. The human mind in each individual gravitates towards truth, seeking it as naturally as the growing plant seeks the light. There is no inherent disposition in the mind of any man to avoid the truth, but, on the contrary, one to find it and see it. The moral significance of the doctrine of evolution assures us of just this, and nothing else. It knocks the underpinning from beneath the old theological dogma that men choose evil and error knowing them to be such; and it shows that there is one propulsion, mighty and irresistible, operating upon all the world of Nature and of man towards the true, the good, the beautiful,—in other words, towards perfection. The only remnant of truth left of the doctrine of innate or total depravity is that nobody is perfect; that everybody is imperfect; and that some are much more imperfect than others. We all somewhat stick in the mud of our earthly origin; and yet we all are trying to find a clean and firm place to plant our foot.

In meeting one, then, who differs from me, no matter in what respect nor in what degree, I am not to presume that he is wholly wrong, or that I am wholly right. More than this; if he is at all honest and sincere, I am to presume, not only that his opinions seem to him to be true, but that in fact they are more or less true. If I do not presume this, then I must presume either that he has no capacity to discern the truth, or that he has no disposition to do so. This last presumption, surely, no true radical will make.

My honest opponent has had his own mental processes and his own experience, as I have had mine, whereby to come at the truth. If not equally with myself, yet as truly is he a lover of the truth as I am. From him it never has been wholly hidden, any more than it has from me. Prejudiced he may be, and narrow-minded and wilful. Yet, unless he be utterly stupid or utterly perverse, his opinions and statements do stand for more or less of truth. If I am not myself a confirmed egotist; if I am not disposed to overbear his judgment with my own; if I am not willing to rule the evidence of his mental and moral experience entirely out,—then I shall perceive that the task set for me is to discover the amount of truth there is in his position. And I shall be even more anxious to find out what error may lurk in my belief, than to ascertain what error may be in his.

Now the art of getting truth from others is one well worth studying—so few seem very deft in its practice. Conversation would appear to be the best method for receiving and imparting truth: debate and controversy almost invariably ending in driving people farther apart, instead of bringing them nearer together. Nobody can converse well, who is not above all things sympathetic,—not sentimentally sympathetic, merely, but intellectually so. One must have the power, for the nonce, to put oneself in another's place, to take another's standpoint, to see with another's eyes, in order fairly to understand and appreciate, and do reasonable justice to, another's opinions. Of course this cannot be done entirely, nor is it necessary; but it can be done approximately and effectually,—and it must be, if one would either get or give the truth. By a calm, modest, gentle manner, we must put the person at ease with whom we talk; we must assist him to think and speak his best. If we ruffle, or disconcert, or distemper him, his command over himself, his power to express himself well, is instantly gone. We must listen respectfully and encouragingly; this is a wonderful help to any one who is trying to utter himself, and is a rare accomplishment among talkers. If we think we know more about the subject in hand than the one with whom we converse, we must be careful that we do not show this consciousness, that our manner is not in the least arrogant or supercilious. If our knowledge really is superior, let it manifest itself in all modesty and kindness; only thus can even superiority command respect. We must not get impatient with our interlocutor, nor press our lance too rudely against any weak joint in his armor. We must show him the infirmity of his argument and the untenableness of his position in such a friendly though clear way, that he will be glad to recognize it and yield the point without shamefacedness or attempt at wilful defence. If there is any heat on either side, any friction of controversy, any pride of reason, at once does truth veil her face and retire from the scene.

How increasingly small do we find the number with whom it is profitable to converse, simply because the requisites to a true conversation are not present to temper the spirit on both sides! The dogmatist, the egotist, the opinionated fellow, the self-asserting man, cannot converse; he can only "argue" till doomsday, making himself more narrow, and nobody else any more enlightened. The controversies that take place in public,—in the newspapers and on platforms,—as a rule do not result in making truth conspicuous and luminous, but in drawing lines between partisans, and establishing "sides." Even in private circles, not impossibly in radical clubs, the spirit of debate and combat is apt to appear, setting minds awry, distorting judgments, hardening opinions, obscuring perceptions, and creating chaos generally. Of course, the great Genius of the universe knows how to wrest good out of evil and truth out of error, and is never floored by the most disadvantageous circumstances; he is equal to turning all human asininity into some sort of gain to each and every one. But we cannot help wishing that we all were more docile to the unseen hand that guides, and that we might step along more amiably together in the path that leads to truth.

Any one who has ever entered into the spirit of a true conversation with another knows how, at such a time, the heavens open and the horizon expands; how the vision clears, the thought kindles, and the emotions sweep grandly upward; how one surprises oneself with the new and fine things that one says under the genial stimulus of such unwonted intercourse; and how, in short, the time and the place of such conversation become memorable and glorious, and the mind and heart equally yearn for the occasion to be oft repeated. A. W. S.

ENFORCED ABSURDITIES.

The appended clipping from a newspaper gives a good illustration of the ease with which well meaning people fall into absurdity when they abandon the plain ground of reason for the fanciful ways of sentiment. The piece is so remarkably preposterous that I at first took it to be satirical. But two or three friends to whom it was shown, one of them a devout Episcopalian, expressed their belief in its genuineness, and regarded it as an honest account of the rules by which good ritualists conducted themselves. And why not? Once concede the sanctity of a rite, and you must concede the reasonableness of the most minute regulations made for the purpose of guarding that sanctity from violation or neglect. No care can be excessive; no punctiliousness can be exaggerated; overmuch righteousness is impossible. The casuistry of the Scribes, the scrupulosity of the Pharisees, the pettiness of the priests in all ages and all churches is justifiable, commendable, and even imperative. If the risk of giving offence by dipping the moustache into soup and coffee is great, how much greater the risk of giving more mortal offence by allowing the pendent hair to draggle in the cup which contains no festive wine, but the Redeemer's purifying blood! And what absolute insensibility to the preciousness of the divine ichor is manifested by those who suffer its drops to be absorbed by the gauzy veil designed to protect a dainty complexion from the rays of the sun, or to enhance the charm of a skin-deep beauty, or by the soft cambric, the portage whereof suggests uses even less æsthetic! If our ritualist friends are sincere they will presently carry their reverence for sacred, things much further than these very mild rules prescribe. They will forbid any but consecrated hands to touch the chalice, and will avoid contamination by the insertion of a nonconducting substance in the stem of the cup. They will contrive a method by which the contents of the holy goblet and the consecrated paten may be passed into the recipient's interior without touching the lips that profane the Redeemer by so many light words and so many passionate kisses. The ingenious device of imitating the form of the cross by the position of the hands when the Body of Christ is taken would be improved on by opening the mouth, and shutting the eyes, and letting the priest drop the mysterious morsel upon the tongue. The non sequitur of the last provision need not be insisted on. The priest probably intends to say that the partaker, being unworthy to gather up the crumbs from the Lord's table with the profane touch of fingers, should stoop the head and take the particles up on the tip of the tongue already sanctified by contact with the transmuted bread. A more proper way would be for the priest to collect them himself, at the instant of their falling, and offer them to the next recipient in order.

We are quite serious. If the first principles of the ritualists are correct, a scrupulosity is demanded of them which these few rules feebly express. They are but on the threshold of their formalities. Their reproduction of the Ages of Faith is in its infancy. Nay, they must outdo the Ages of Faith by the additional minuteness which the perfection of modern expedients supplies. The resources of chemistry in our age will certainly assist them in their endeavor to convey the divine elements to the recesses of unregenerate man in a less bungling manner than was practised five centuries ago. Neither they nor the hair-splitters in theology have any right to hesitate on the ground that their directions and definitions, their sentimental or theological fraisse, their delicate shades of faith and observance, may seem ridiculous to people of ordinary common sense. They will, as matter of course. But the more they do, the more certainly will they be in accordance with the demands of a supernatural religion. O. B. F.

RITUALISM IN BOSTON.

Directions to Communicants.

The following printed directions furnished to communicants at the ritualistic Church of the Advent, in Boston, will give a clearer idea of what ritualism is than could be imparted in an elaborate essay on the subject:—

"1. Come fasting; it has been the practice of the Church from the earliest times, and experience will soon teach you the benefit of the custom. If you cannot conveniently come fasting on Sunday, come on a week day.

"2. It is good to prepare one's self for receiving, or to return thanks after receiving, by being present during a celebration of the Holy Communion without receiving.

"3. Come up to the altar rails as soon as the priest turns round to the people, after making his own communion.

"4. Kneel near the middle of the altar rail if there are only a few communicants.

"5. Your hands ungloved; ladies' veils uplifted, otherwise they sweep the rim of the chalice.

"6. Receive the Body of Christ in the palm of the right hand, supported by the left, crosswise, and so raise it to your lips.

"7. When the priest returns the chalice, do not bend down; keep your head erect and unmoved. If need be, gently raise it with your hand on the stem.

"8. Gentlemen will take care that their moustaches do not enter the chalice.

"9. Do not put your head down suddenly after receiving the Precious Blood, or you might strike the chalice from the priest's hands.

"10. Do not use a handkerchief to wipe the lips, after receiving.

"11. If, by any misfortune, a crumb should fall, pick it up, remembering that 'we are not worthy so much as to gather up the crumbs from the Lord's table.'"

Some uninitiated person remarks that the reason given for the concluding direction is a very neat example of a non sequitur.

Communications.

N. B.—Correspondents must run the risk of typographical errors. The utmost care will be taken to avoid them; but hereafter no space will be spared to Errata.

N. B.—Articles for this department should be SHORT, and written only on one side of the sheet.

N. B.—Illegibly written articles stand a very poor chance of publication.

PARKER MEMORIAL AND PARKER'S MEMORY:

THE SPIRITUALIST CONVENTION.

BY BISHOP FERRETTE.

On September 17, having heard that the Spiritualist Convention would hold its meetings in Parker Memorial Hall on that and the two following days, and having never been at a Spiritualist Convention before, I went there in due performance of my duty of seeing and hearing everything. I like that hall for its quiet surroundings, for its harmonious simplicity, for the support, and mellowness, and distinctness that its acoustic dispositions give to the voice, and for the name that it bears. I have preached from its desk, and sat on its seats to hear Samuel Longfellow's beautiful, liberal sermons, delivered in that saintly manner which is his. Thinking of holding afternoon services this winter alternately in French and English, the idea of Parker Memorial was the first that suggested itself to me as that of a natural spiritual home. But I confess that my notions of the decorum of the place, and of general decorum, were put in some dismay when I witnessed the proceedings of that Spiritualist meeting.

"I'm not a chicken: I have seen Many a September gale"

before this severe one. I am not ashamed of hearing or talking on any subject, even on those scabrous, still important, ones, which self-respect compels us to touch with hands gloved in Latinism. I hope I am not a coward either; and if I recognize in our social diseases the work of a dumb devil upon whose mock modesty Mrs. Grundy has made it a rule for every one not to intrude, I will remember that, before being ordained a bishop, I was ordained an exorcist. I'll exorcise the dumb devil and make the possessed speak. But there is a manner of speaking of everything. Great wrongs should never be spoken of scurrilously—that would accustom us to consider sin as a light matter. This is especially true of carnal sins; and in treating of sexual subjects we should never forget that from the name of Venus the ancients derived the word veneration.

Irrelevant matter uttered for the sake of its obscenity, not of argument, deserves no refutation and no mention. But it is justice to say that some speakers expressed with evident earnestness, and without gratuitously lewd verbiage, great and terrible heresies. However I may disapprove the latter, I admit that there should be a place where those things may be freely said; and as I have no superstitious notions of places, let them be said in a church if need be. If Spiritualists are wrong in their solutions of social problems, they are familiar with the questions themselves; while most of their adversaries appear to have as indefinite ideas of those matters, as Napoleon III. is said to have had of the military condition of France just before the Prussian war.

Of Spiritualism proper, that is, of the evoking of spirits and of miraculous intercourse with the other world, very little was said while I was present; and the drift of the speeches was pretty much as if Spiritualism was merely a vehicle for free love,—free love being the satisfaction of all sexual impulses with any person of the other sex, in marriage, or out of it, or across it. Were such a doctrine ever made the basis of the social system of any nation, what would the results be? I will talk of things plainly, lest the self-styled reformers should imagine that it is out of blushing shyness that I am afraid of embracing their views. The first result of promiscuous sexual intercourse would be universal national syphilis, which can only be kept from propagating by limiting each person to one of the other sex. The second result would be to make childhood a hell, the difficult relation existing among us between children of different beds being made the rule instead of the exception, and the family circle, with its holy and blessed associations, being utterly exploded. Happily there would not be many children, for Nature would shrink from propagating the race under such conditions. There would not be many children, because most of them would be killed or aborted by unnatural parents. Conjugal love and parental love are two correlative things; and those who are deprived of the faculty of sticking to one husband or wife for life are also deprived of that love of progeny without which they cannot, as an ordinary thing, bring children to the age of men and women, to be in their turn good fathers and good mothers. A nation of free lovers would therefore in a short time come to extinction for lack of progeny. That lack of progeny would also be insured by the fact that none but old and disappointed people could ever become free lovers. Young people, who have in them all the freshness of heart, and before them all the prospects of life, know better than to become free lovers. The noble young man aspires to win a fair maiden, and make her his forever. He sees no happiness whatever in a love or in a possession, of the perpetuity of which there should be the least doubt. The torment of that doubt would be hell itself. The fair maiden, likewise, wishes to be won forever or not at all. The Convention was preëminently one of gray-haired men and women; but youth, whose business love is, will not have free love on any account, unless driven to it by force. It is true that our reformers demand to be entrusted with the control of youth, but it had better provisorily remain with those who have it. Our present social system, with all its blunders, and the misery and corruption to which they lead, preserves, in principle at least, a tradition of purity which free love knows not.

The radical vice of our civilization, the one which makes prostitution and conjugal misery inherent to it, lies in our false notions as to the importance of the fact of puberty and the proper age of majority. Prevented from marrying, or interfered with in their love affairs, at an age at which parental control should have legally ceased, our youth are driven to sinful alternatives not better than free love, and not worse either. This would not cease to be the case, did the law fix their majority at an earlier age, and not provide that the education of every male, prior to that age, should include a self-supporting industry. A man, young or old, who is not able by his labor to support a family, has no right to have it; and if he wastes his life in vice, that evil, however great, is less great than the crime of begetting children to be helpless paupers. But in a properly constituted society there would be no such alternative. Its presence is the evil that we have to reform; and this reform is to be in a direction opposite to that suggested by free lovers. It is the obstacles to early, and wise, and virtuous marriage, not to promiscuous intercourse, that we want to remove. Our return to the principles of Nature in this respect will be a complete operation, not to be executed in one day. But to deny the possibility of establishing society on those principles would be frivolous, in presence of the fact that such a type of society is the only one in existence among Eastern Christians. The idea of a social constitution like that of Popish and Protestant countries, where big girls old enough to be mothers play with dolls instead of with babies, and where young men waste their strength in self-abuse or libertinism instead of begetting children, would appear to them as strange as would be the sight of the whole people of a city walking on the sidewalks on their hands with their feet upward.

Through early and chaste marriage alone will Nature consent indefinitely to perpetuate a race. Make marriage late, or substitute for it concubinage, or free love, and a race comes to an end; and what will then become of the theories of its pretended reformers? Their houses, fifty years hence, will be occupied by the children of their Irish servants of to-day, who have less of such theories. What I say here is not limited to free lovers who are honestly and cynically such. Their errors are secretly believed and acted upon by increasing multitudes of all ranks and of all outward forms of belief. About this great system of corruption, "mum" is the fashionable word of order. Christ exorcised the dumb devil out of one man; who shall exorcise him out of a whole body social? The worst part of the task is not that of dealing with the possessed man who has already begun to speak. With him we can argue at least.

Let then free lovers, or Spiritualists (if that be the name), be met with argument, and that even in Parker Memorial Hall, if they, in future occasions, will use it so as not to make a serious speaker ashamed of his presence there. But in meetings conducted as that at which I was present they will run, indeed, very little risk of refutation, whether they be held in Parker Memorial Hall or elsewhere. If the Hall Committee at all foresaw what was to take place, on what grounds could they have permitted their hall to be used in this manner? On the ground of liberty of speech? I know that they profess in this respect very liberal principles; and if their liberal principles extend so far as that, I will not object a word. I will only suggest that the Hall drop Parker's name. Would Theodore Parker, if yet alive, be seen in his own hall while thus occupied? His widow, who is living among us surrounded with our respect, certainly would not. But if the considerations were that the Hall is not yet paid for, that a heavy debt hangs upon it, and that money must absolutely be raised, let the Committee rather go to the public for it. If, to make a picture of the extremities to which they have been reduced, they will only read some abridged report of the proceedings of the late Spiritualist Convention, they will certainly excite sympathy. After all, the Parker Memorial case is not an isolated one. The Christian Church also would be more creditable to the memory of her hero than she is, had she not to let herself out to the world for a living.

—

[It is due to the Committee of the Hall to say that their undoubted reason for letting it on this occasion was their willingness and desire to encourage freedom of speech. Was it not a right of the free-lovers to be allowed freedom of speech? Unquestionably. Then the Committee did well in not refusing them the use of the Hall for their Convention. There the responsibility of the Committee ended. If the various speakers, or any of them, violated the laws of purity or decorum in what they said, upon themselves must rest the blame of the offence. We attended one evening session of the Convention, and, while the ideas broached were sufficiently distasteful to us on grounds of reason and common sense, we ought to bear witness that we heard no obscene language used that evening. Let this distinction be borne in mind: the Committee did right, on every principle of true liberalism, not to refuse their Hall to this Convention, while the officers and speakers of the Convention itself must bear all blame for whatever bad thing was said or done at the meetings. Last year we felt called upon to criticise respectfully the refusal of this Hall by the Committee to Mrs. Woodhull; now we feel called upon emphatically to approve their granting of it to the free-love Convention. This we do without the least approval of free-love as a social theory; and we add that the Spiritualists as a body ought not to be considered free-lovers. Nay, we add that espousal of free-love notions ought not to be a ground of personal censure at all; personal immorality alone can justify that. "By their fruits shall ye know them"—not their speeches.—ED.]

SECRET ORGANIZATION.

NEW YORK, Sept. 21, 1874.

EDITOR INDEX:

Dear Sir,—Your correspondent in THE INDEX of Sept. 3 favors a secret organization of Liberals. While agreeing with him as regards the isolation of many who favor free thought on religious subjects, I would express myself as opposed to secret organizations.

Is not the outspoken advocacy of faith in humanity as opposed to faith in Evangelical Christianity what is most needed among those of liberal views? And will not the forming of secret societies by us tend to lessen the open advocacy of liberal views in the same ratio as it increases our earnestness to build up the society, leaving to it the open, manly work we as individuals should do?

And there were danger, also, that our minds would be closed to free inquiry, if such inquiry in any way might hurt our society.

Looking back but a short time, and remembering the influence of the Abolitionists, who were particularly outspoken, we should be reminded that those who favor free thought should be opposed to secret organizations.

We ought to be ready at all times to receive new light, even should such light carry us back to the old faith and not forward; and I cannot feel that free inquiry could be materially benefited by secret societies.

Just at this time the whole world is commenting on Professor Tyndall's late address, which surely would influence very few if he were the exponent of a secret society.

I am glad you wrote that all your instincts are opposed to secret organizations, for any other views would seem unworthy of THE INDEX.

But if it were proposed to form social societies for a free and open exchange of views on all subjects of interest, such idea, I think, would meet with general favor among Liberals. There are many places where the known Liberals are too few to form Liberal Leagues, and therefore we who live in such places must content ourselves without meeting our friends in council.

Better "isolation" than secret societies in times of peace; for the moment we cease bearing our testimony for the truth openly, we become less manly.

Yours truly, A.

NORTH COLLINS YEARLY MEETING—RESOLUTIONS ON MARRIAGE, etc.

DETROIT, Mich., Sept. 19, 1874.

F. E. ABBOT:

My Friend,—In THE INDEX I see the "social question" sometimes discussed; of which I make no complaint. I thank you for your strong and clear exposure of so-called, but miscalled, "social freedom" not long ago. We need the gospel of self-control, and the higher harmony and purity that go with it, not of self-indulgence. We need a clear and high ideal of the sanctity of marriage,—the life-long union of one man with one woman, in which each devotes soul and person to the other in mutual and reverent love, guided by wisdom, and which banishes all wish for "variety." This is the demand of man's nature, and the higher our culture, the more perfect our development, the more will this demand be met. This union must be openly and publicly recognized, for the common good and for that order which is "heaven's first law;" and for this recognition, and the regulation of duties and responsibilities which grow out of marriage, we want laws, just and equal, and always shall. For the frailties and mistakes of poor humanity we need provision, and so need divorce; but the ideal of the lasting marriage must rule for best results. I look upon woman suffrage as the only hope for the repeal of the present injustice of marriage laws, and especially for the framing of statutes which shall protect the person and the maternity of woman from the awful crime and outrage now kept hidden under the sacred name of marriage. At North Collins, Erie County, New York, in August, was held the "Yearly Meeting of Friends of Progress"—a large and influential gathering, mostly of Spiritualists, for free discussion. This question came up, and was fully discussed, with a fair hearing of various views.

The resolutions I give, as a contribution toward the best thought on this subject, were heard by fifteen hundred persons, and the vote was hearty and unanimous from all parts of the audience with but a single "no."

"Resolved, That we earnestly favor woman suffrage, as just and as a help to higher civilization; and especially do we feel the need of woman as a law-maker with man, that our marriage laws, so largely based on the falsehood of woman's subjection, may give place to laws inspired by the idea of her equality, under which there shall be personal liberty, protection for the sanctity of maternity, and equal property-right—all helping to a higher sacredness of home and family, and to a decrease of vice and licentiousness, both in and out of marriage.

"Resolved, That, while we believe in monogamic marriage, we believe in divorce as an escape from cruelty and crime, and a relief from the sad mistake of an unhappy and loveless union."

These represent the convictions and matured thought of a large company of intelligent and liberal men and women.

Truly yours, G. B. Stebbins.

TEMPERANCE ONCE MORE.

Editor of The Index:

My Dear Sir,—Since I have been a subscriber to The Index, I have been much interested in the various subjects on which it treats, and while finding much to agree with, I find something to which I am compelled to object. The attitude of yourself and of most of your correspondents on the temperance question has so far been of the latter class.

With the general drift of your lecture published in the paper of August 20, I fully agree; while I think the principles you so strongly recognize may be applied in a manner different from that which you so vigorously advocate.

I saw the rise of the temperance movement in the United States, and have been an outspoken advocate of it in principle and practice for forty years. I have always been able to act with all classes of the real friends of the cause in every practical effort to overthrow the enemy against which we have so long had, and still have, to contend, while I have not always been in agreement with the methods adopted, as the most likely to secure success. But I would have temperance succeed, by any method which any class of workers have thought proper to adopt, if only such method can secure success.

Believing intemperance to be the greatest evil except superstition that has ever cursed mankind since the first husbandman drank of the vine and was drunken, I will help and encourage every class of temperance men and women to try their plan, while I plainly set before them the only method which to my understanding can ever cause the curse to disappear.

Perhaps I shall not be considered a true man by those of your school, as you say that no true man can follow parties until parties follow right principles, etc.; but although I should be found in the minority in the taking of the vote by which the majority decided the drinking of alcoholic beverages to be universally a sin (for I do not so believe, and I never knew such a vote to be taken where I have belonged), still I do hold it to be universally unsafe, and I can act with the majority in striving to put away the evil from the land. Although it is inconsistent and absurd for Christians to take such a position, yet there is safety in abstinence, and no certain safety without it, as the observation of my whole life has taught me to believe; and I am not responsible for the inconsistencies of those who pronounce judgment against the practice of the Master whose disciples they profess to be.

You are perhaps right in saying, "Nothing is more unjust or more harmful to the temperance cause than heated denunciations of strictly temperate men under the name of moderate drinkers, as the worst enemies of the temperance cause;" but I think abstinence to be the safer and therefore the better principle. For myself I never felt any danger, but for the sake of and to help to save my fellow-men, I will abstain, and try to persuade others to do the same.

Your idea of the true temperance principle is the one that prevailed in the world from the days of Noah until the close of the first quarter of the present century; and I never met with a young man whom I considered in danger and sought to save, while his countenance was flushed, and his eyes bloodshot, and his step unsteady, from the wine he had taken, who did not use the same argument, and thought he could always stop at the right time and place. If such young man was to be saved, it was only by taking the pledge of abstinence, and adhering to it; and, although there have been many backslidings and much falling away, thousands have stood who could not have stood upon the principles you advocate, because their strength of will was not equal to their understanding.

Men accustomed to drink, and loving the indulgence, will not take the pledge, unless they feel themselves in danger and wish to escape from it; and it is too often, alas, that they are found not able to stand. No one is compelled to take the pledge: each one does it of his or her own free will, either for the safety of self or to help to save others. If a man feels it to be a fetter, and that he has cast away his moral freedom, he has only to choose whether he will be free from the self-imposed restraint, or be free from the bondage of a ruinous self-indulgence. I am not able to perceive any greater moral bondage in a pledge than in a resolve not to do a special act without signing his name to a paper containing such a promise; for the one is in reality as much a pledge as the other, only the one is made to himself, the other to his peers, and the violation of the one is equally as bad as the other.

Yet I would not condemn the man that is temperate merely because he does not pledge himself, although I should feel that he would help to promote the cause more by doing so than by refusing.

You say, "There are not a few persons that are greatly tempted to do what they are prohibited from doing, and sometimes they go and do it just to get rid of the offensive prohibition." Such a person has lost his manliness any how; and if there is so much "human nature in it," it is a sad commentary upon human nature, which every lover of his race should strive to elevate above so mean a motive. Again: "The pledge once broken, the sacred sentiment of self-respect is so fearfully injured that many a poor fellow straightway rushes headlong into the wildest excesses, believing that all hope of salvation is gone"—and he would have done the same had he taken no pledge, for such a mind would not have strength to stand without it.

I admit that "moral means alone can lay the foundation of a true reform;" and, as I do not wish to be tedious and the subject is inexhaustible, I will postpone the farther consideration of the subject to another time in which I will consider your other objections to the temperance party.

Yours in behalf of all real reforms,

D. S. Grandin.

Upper Gloucester, Maine.

[We have read Mr. Grandin's article with great respect, and thank him for the extremely gentlemanly way in which he controverts our position.—Ed.]

THE NORTHUMBERLAND SOCIETY.

Northumberland, Pa., Sept. 3, 1874.

Editor of Index:

Dear Sir,—The concluding paragraph of a late article in The Index, written by Rev. D. H. Clark, apart from its questionable taste, has a remark, which in justice to some of "the descendants of the brave iconoclast" (Priestley) merits a reply. The facts of Priestley's treatment by his countrymen, the destruction of his property, danger to his life, and compulsory exile, make Mr. Clark's claim to a "similar experience" absurd. But the rôle of martyr is more easily assumed than the title deserved. Mr. Clark, after careful thought and study, as he informed his congregation, changed his religious views and announced the change to them. They were not prepared to accept the views which he held, and declined to listen to them or to pay him for preaching them. In the matter both parties acted conscientiously. If Mr. Clark's views were the result of thought, so also were those of his congregation; and theirs, to many of them, were endeared by association, and hallowed by those experiences which at times make what we believe more to us than life itself. Consequently they preferred not to accept the new gospel offered to them. Believing what they held to be the truth, but in no wise "bidding" their minister to believe the same, they remained true to their own convictions, accepting what was truth to their hearts.

Mr. Clark received no personal unkindness from his congregation at or after the time of the separation; but surely he can testify to more than ordinary kindness from some of those he so unjustly blames, to which, as I was no participant except in sympathy with the occasion which called it forth, I may allude.

In theology Mr. Clark chose one path; his congregation, another. That these paths diverge may be a matter for regret, but certainly not for just censure.

Respectfully, Fanny B. Toulmin.

[The precise circumstances of this case are not familiar to us; but enough is stated above to show that the society at Northumberland dismissed their minister because they did not like his theological "views." On the Orthodox theory, this would be quite the ordinary course to take; but we hope our correspondent will pardon us for thinking that a Unitarian society, founded by a radical like Priestley, would have shown a greater fidelity to truth and spiritual freedom, if they had not "declined to listen." We do not blame the society, because it is a Christian one; but the case is one more illustration of the incompatibility between Christianity itself and liberty of speech. No liberal can be satisfied with a society which "declines to listen" to any side of any question.—Ed.]

A MANLY ACT OF SEPARATION.

16 Medford St., Chelsea, Mass., Sept. 25, 1874.

Editor Index:

My Dear Sir and Brother,—In requesting the publication of the enclosed statement, I venture to solicit the advice and coöperation of your co-laborers, many of whom have passed through the same fiery ordeal that it has been my lot to encounter. I am also desirous of enjoying the privilege of replying to the various correspondents of the "religious press" who, I am informed, are busy in charging their heavy theological guns to pour into, and if possible sink, the deserter who has dared to detach himself, and go ahead of their slow sailing and cumbrous fleets.

I beg you will accept my sincere thanks for the valuable aid you have afforded during my three years' struggle for mental freedom by gratuitously sending me a copy of your invaluable paper, thus enabling me to select the works of the great minds of the age that are fast revolutionizing the bigotry and superstition of the churches.

I shall have much pleasure in corresponding with the friends and champions of free religious thought, feeling that a nineteen years' ministerial experience in the Close Communion Baptist ranks may not prove uninteresting.

Believe me faithfully yours,

Edward F. Strickland,

Pastor of the First Union Association, East Stoughton, Mass.

The following document was read by me at the Conference of Baptist Ministers in Tremont Temple, last Monday, Sept 21:—

To the Baptist Ministerial Conference, Tremont Temple, Boston:

Gentlemen,—I beg leave to notify you that, in consequence of my experiencing a change of belief respecting the fundamental doctrines of your church—to wit, total depravity of mankind, the eternal punishment of the finally impenitent, the doctrine of the Trinity, and the divinity of Christ,—I can no longer conscientiously retain my position in your ranks, and feel it to be consistent with my sense of honor and propriety to thus publicly inform you of my change of sentiments and the dissolution of my connection with the Baptist denomination; and request that you will be pleased to give the fullest publicity to this statement.

I also beg to inform you that the letter of commendation and dismissal from the pastorate of my last charge, the Calvary Baptist Church, Westerly, R. I., now in my possession, will forthwith be returned to that body together with a copy of this notice.

Edward F. Strickland.

Boston, Mass., Sept. 21, 1874.

CONSTANCY OF MORAL FORCE.

The constancy or persistence of matter, in all its varied changes, was a magnificent guess in ancient days. Modern observation and experiment have verified the guess, and extended it to force, proving that the various modes of motion always produce the same total, however different forms may vary in amount.

A further extension of the same principle into the sphere of morals seems possible; and what is true of carbon and iron, heat and electricity, may be also true of moral forces, good and evil.

The constancy of enjoyment of life can be noticed in the cases of insects, and the domestic animals; which in proportion to capacity seems to be as great as in man, the climax of the series.

Evolution of form and mind may be unlimited, but the evolving intellect no more than keeps pace with the evolving universe; the hind wheels of the wagon never overtake the front ones, no matter how constant and rapid their motion may be. And all pervading truth in Nature seems to be that nothing shall be received that shall not be paid for; there are no gratuities, and no wrong has been done in leaving so much earth to remain earth, and making a little of it into men.

All expectations of millennial bliss and perfection seem absurd in this view; for all that a philanthropist does here is balanced by what a blackguard does elsewhere; each develops his individual nature, and works accordingly.

It is better to be natural than to be good; and attempts to create or annihilate moral force are as vain as the search after the philosopher's stone or perpetual motion.

J. G. H.

Montreal, Canada.

An irreconcilable, under the title "Wanted, an Englishman," pitches into the corporation of informers calling themselves the Society for the Suppression of Vice. "If I were asked on my conscience what I believe to have been among the most frightful corrupters of the human mind and heart, what particular corrupters of society have most frequently made me exclaim in anguish, Can there be a good God? I should name certain theological doctrines, and certain ecclesiastical ways of looking at things. I believe in my conscience that certain so-called religious ways of looking at social questions have been, and still are, incalculably worse hindrances to human well-being than all the coarse impulses that ever provoked society to suppress vice. I believe that if persons of the stamp of those suppressors would only help, or at least would not hinder, the access of daylight to matters over which they now shut down the hatches, the daylight would prove itself the natural purifier and sweetener, and we should get rid, without unjust compulsion, of all this sewage."—National Reformer.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12	Insertions,	10c	per	line.
" 13 " 25	"	8	"	"
" 26 " 51	"	6	"	"
" 52	"	5	"	"

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.

TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,

has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, assisted by ABRAM W. STEVENS, with the following list of ditorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
THOMAS W. HIGGINSON, Newport, R.I.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 4.

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:
FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

ASSOCIATE EDITOR:
ABRAM WALTER STEVENS.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
T. W. HIGGINSON, Newport, R.I.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
F. W. NEWMAN, England.
CHARLES VOYSEY, England.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS,

OF THE

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. Abbot, D. A. Wasson, T. W. Higginson, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. Wasson on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. Abbot, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. Wasson on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. Abbot on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age;" an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. Higginson on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potier on "Religion Old and New in India;" also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonneschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Sympathy of Religions, by T. W. Higginson. 25 cents.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 10 cents, singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

Price.

ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets 1.50
Concord Days 1.50
Records of a School. A new edition 1.50

ALCOTT (LOUISA M). Little Women. Two vols 3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories 1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl 1.50
Little Men 1.50
My Boys, &c 1.00
Shawl-Straps 1.00
Work; A Story of Experience 1.75

ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS. 1.50

ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism 2.00
New Poems 2.00
Literature and Dogma 1.50

AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. 1.50
Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine 2.00
Edelweiss 1.00
German Tales 1.00

BACON'S Essays 1.25

BAGEHOT on the English Constitution 2.25
Physics and Politics 1.50

BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy 1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol 1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol 5.00

BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms. 2.50

BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations 3.00

BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems... 2.00
The Rising Faith 2.00

BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols 5.00

BIBLE in the Public Schools.
Records, Arguments, and Decision in the case of John D. Minor et al. vs. the Board of Education of the city of Cincinnati: et al. in the Supreme Court of the City of Cincinnati 2.00
Arguments of Ramsey, Sage and King in favor of the use of the Bible ..... .50
Arguments of Stallo, Hoadley and Mathews against the use of the Bible ..... .50
The Opinion and Decision of the Supreme Court of Ohio in the above case ..... .25

BRACKETT (ANNA C.) The Education of American Girls ..... .

BROOKS' (CHARLES T.) Translations. The Layman's Breviary 2.25
The World-Priest 2.25
The Tall Student ..... .75

BUECHNER'S Force and Matter 3.25

BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols 6.00

CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol ..... .90

CARPENTER (DR. W. B.) The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions 3.00

CERVANTES' Don Quixote 1.50

CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing 1.50

CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet Naturalist. With Memorial Verse. 2.00

CHENEY (MRS. E. D). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside 1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience 1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated 1.50

CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions 3.00
Common-Sense in Religion 2.00

CLARKE (Dr. E. H.) Sex in Education 1.25

CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World ..... .75

COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. 3.00
Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.... 5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age ..... .20

CONWAY (MONCURE D.) The Earthward Pilgrimage 1.75

CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol 2.00

CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE; Its True Aims and Requirements A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans 2.00

DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship 2.50

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies" 1.50
The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor" 1.00

DARWIN'S Origin of Species 2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols 4.00
Journal of Researches 2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals 3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated 6.00

DESCARTES (RENE.) Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences 2.25

DICKENS' Child's History of England 1.50

DUHRING (JULIA.) Philosophers and Fools. A Study 2.00

ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each 1.00
Comprising—
Adam Bede.
Romola.
The Mill on the Floss.
Felix Holt.
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life.
The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols 3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols 3.50
Wit and Wisdom of 1.25
The Spanish Gypsy 1.50
How Lisa Loved the King ..... .50

EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.. 2.00
Essays. Second Series 2.00
Miscellanies 2.00
Representative Men 2.00
English Traits 2.00
Conduct of Life 2.00
Poems. With Portrait 2.00
May-day and Other Pieces 2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold 1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold 1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols 5.00
Society and Solitude 2.00

EVANS (E. P., Ph. D). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanase Coquerel the Younger 1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols 5.00

FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion 2.00

FEUERBACH (LUDWIG.) The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation. 3.00

FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.. 2.00

FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity 1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers ..... .20
Child's Book of Religion 1.00
Life of Theodore Parker 3.00

FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols 9.00

GALTON (FRANCIS.) Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences 2.00

GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol 5.00
Elective Affinities 1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols 3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham 1.00

GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life 2.00
Literary and Social Judgments 2.00
Creed of Christendom 3.25

GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait 5.00

HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter s Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France 1.50
Thoughts about Art 2.00
The Unknown River 6.00
The Intellectual Life 2.00
Chapters on Animals 4.00

HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second 1.00
Child World. Part First 1.50

HAMILTON'S Lectures.
1. Metaphysical Lectures 3.50
2. Logical Lectures 3.50

HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol 2.00
Twice-Told Tales.
Mosses from an Old Manse.
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.
The Marble Faun.
The English Note-Books.
The American Note-Books.
The French and Italian Note-Books.
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.

HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers ... 1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance 1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment 1.50
Atlantic Essays 2.00
Oldport Days 2.50

HOWELLS'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey 2.00
Suburban Sketches 2.00
Venetian Life 2.00
Italian Journeys 2.00
A Chance Acquaintance 1.50

HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "'Ninety-Three".. 1.75

HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits 10.50

HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life 1.75

HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses 1.25
Bits of Travel 1.50

HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature 1.25
On the Origin of Species 1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism ..... .50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals 2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.... 1.75

INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems 2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen 1.50
Songs of Seven 2.50

INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skelligs 1.75
Studies for Stories 1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series 1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours 1.25
Mopsa the Fairy: A Story 1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect ..... .60

INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures 2.00

INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES.
No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall 1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot. 1.50
III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith 1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain 1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq 1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr 2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine 1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew. 1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D 1.50

JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers. 1.50

JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India 5.00

JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian 2.50

JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols 12.00

KERR (ORPHEUS C). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous 2.00

LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols 4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols 6.00

LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.... 4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics 2.00

LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham 1.50

LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. 3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols 4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed 3.00

LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life. 1.50

LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D'C). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews 1.00

LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols 4.00
Prose Works. Portrait 4.00

LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols 4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series 1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series 1.50
Among my Books 2.00
My Study Windows 2.00

LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Posies for Children. .75

LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man.. 2.00
Pre-historic Times 5.00

LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols 8.00
Elements of Geology 3.50

MACDONALD (GEORGE.) The Vicar's Daughter 1.50

MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife 3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education 3.00
Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848 ..... 3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann 1.25

MARTINEAU (JAMES.) Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol..... 2.50
The New Affinities of Faith ..... .25

MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind ..... .75

MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire 1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations 1.50

MILL (JOHN STUART.) Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each 2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each 2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. 1.50
Political Economy. New and revised edition 2.50
The Subjection of Women 1.25
Essay on Liberty 1.25
Representative Government 1.50
Autobiography 2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works ... 1.0

MILLER (JOAQUIN.) Songs of the Sierras. 1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands 1.50

MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species 1.75

MORLEY (PROF. JOHN.) Voltaire 2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols 5.00

MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-Time Stories 1.50

MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series 2.50
The Same. Second Series 3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume 2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion 2.00

NASBY (PETROLEUM V). Swingin' Round the Cirkle 1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky 1.50

NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy 4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed 2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations.. 2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy 1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical 4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism. .25
Against Hero-Making in Religion ..... .25

PARKER (THEODORE.) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion 1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols 4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols 3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings 1.50
Historic Americans,—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham... 1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence... 1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations,—A.D. I. and MDCCCLV. A Christmas Story ..... .60

PARSONS (THEOPHILUS.) The Infinite and the Finite 1.00

PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar 1.50
The Trotty Book 1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts 1.50
Hedged In 1.50
The Silent Partner 1.50
What to Wear? 1.00

PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition 2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates 2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena 1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts 4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc 5.00
The Expanse of Heaven 2.00

ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante 2.50

SCHELLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies 6.00

SCIENCE PRIMERS:
1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S... .50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe ..... .50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With illustrations ..... .50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth ..... .50

SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols 31.25

SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition 2.00

SMILES'S (SAMUEL.) Self-Help 1.50

SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical 1.25
First Principles 2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Æsthetic 2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers 2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed 2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols 5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols 5.00
Philosophy of Style ..... .50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.. 2.00
Sociology 2.00

SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus ..... .25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics 9.00

STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny 1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin ..... .00

STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New 2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols 12.00

TAINE'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols 7.50
The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske 2.50

TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems 1.75

THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.. 1.25
Vanity Fair.
The Newcomes.
Adventures of Philip.
Pendennis.
The Virginians.
Esmond, and Lovel the Widower.
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol. 1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.
1. Barry Lyndon, Hoggarty Diamond, &c.
2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.
3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c.
4. Four Georges, Humorists, &c.
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unreprinted Pieces.

THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals 1.50

THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods 2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.. 2.00
The Maine Woods 2.00
Cape Cod 2.0
Letters 2.00
A Yankee in Canada 2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimac Rivers 2.00

TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind 2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols 5.00

TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer 1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People 2.00
Light and Electricity 1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps 2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion 2.00
On Sound 2.00
Radiant Heat 5.00
Forms of Water 1.50
Lectures on Light 1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall ..... .50

TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures 1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings 1.50

VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each 3.00
Vols III. IV. and VI., each 3.75
The Voysey Appeal ..... .50
Voysey's Defence at York ..... .50

WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden 1.00
Saunterings 1.50
Back-Log Studies 2.00

WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion 1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols 6.00

WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life 1.50
Essays and Reviews 3.00
Character and Characteristic Men 1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.... 1.50
Success and its Conditions 1.50
Washington and the Revolution ..... .30

WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life 1.50
We Girls: A Home Story 1.50
Real Folks 1.50
The Other Girls 2.00
Pansies. A volume of Poems 1.50

WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols 4.00
Child Life 3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place, Boston.

ROWLAND CONNOR,

Having finished his engagement with the Free Congregational Society of Florence, will answer invitations to lecture for liberal societies. Address at

JAMAICA PLAIN, MASS.

THE BOUND INDEX FOR 1873.

The bound volume of THE INDEX for 1873 (Volume 4) will be promptly forwarded to any address on receipt of $3, by express, at the purchaser's expense. A complete file for the year can be furnished in no other form.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A CHEAP OFFER!

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 14 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 75 CENTS.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass

THE INDEX IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

THE FREE SUNDAY ADVOCATE.

A MONTHLY JOURNAL AND REVIEW DEVOTED TO THE INTEREST OF THE NATIONAL SUNDAY LEAGUE.

The objects of the League are to advocate the opening of all Museums, Art Galleries, &c., on Sundays; to maintain during the summer the running of cheap Sunday Excursions; to provide during the winter "Sunday Evenings for the People," and generally to promote everything conducive to rational recreation on Sunday.

The Free Sunday Advocate is published in London, England, and is conducted by an Honorary Editorial Committee, consisting of the following: Mrs. J. H. Simpson, London; Thomas Marshall, London; Fred'k Long, London; Francis W. Souther, London; Mark H. Judge, Hampstead.

The ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION for delivery by post to any part of the United States is one dollar (payable in advance). Address

THE FREE SUNDAY ADVOCATE,
256 High Holborn, London, W.C., England.

CHARLES SUMNER'S GREAT WORK.

PROPHETIC VOICES

CONCERNING AMERICA.

By CHARLES SUMNER.

Fine Edition, Tinted Paper, with Steel Portrait, Crown 8vo., Cloth extra, $2.

Aside from its literary and historical merits, this volume has a special interest, from the fact that it was the last work on which r. Sumner was engaged before his death.

"PROPHETIC VOICES" will be found of great value to all who take an interest in the history of our country, so full is it of passages in which the unexampled prosperity of our land has been foretold by philosophers, poets, statesmen, and orators, of whom the lamented author has also given interesting sketches.

Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A NEW, SEARCHING, TIMELY BOOK, entitled

"THE GENESIS AND ETHICS OF CONJUGAL LOVE."

By Andrew Jackson Davis.

Treatment of all the delicate and important questions involved in Conjugal Love is straightforward, unmistakably emphatic, and perfectly explicit and plain in every vital particular. Mr. Davis has recently examined the whole field of Marriage, Parentage, Disaffection, and Divorce, and this little volume is the result; which now comes into the world because it is now both wanted and needed by all women and men.

* * * Our friend Andrew Jackson Davis has written a book this time that concerns everybody, and on this side of the great river. It certainly touches their bosoms if not their business, and people who do not care a pin what Mr. Davis thinks of the Summer Land will be interested to see what he knows about conjugal love, and the duties of the marriage relation. His book has a table of contents as attractive as a Delmonico bill of fare.—Golden Age.

Price, in paper covers, 50 cents; in handsome cloth, 75 cents; in full calf and extra binding, $1. Postage free. The trade supplied on the most liberal terms. Published by the "Progressive Publishing House" of A. J. DAVIS & CO., No. 24 East Fourth Street, New York City.

STUDENTS FITTED for any College.

Please address
EMILY J. LEONARD,
Meriden, Conn.

CONSTANT EMPLOYMENT.—At home, male or female, $30 a week warranted. No capital required. Particulars and valuable sample sent free. Address, with six-cent return stamp. C. ROSS,
Williamsburg, N. Y.

FREE DISCUSSION is held at HOSPITALLER HALL, 593 Washington Street, Boston, every Sunday, at 10½ A.M., 2½ and 7½ P.M. All that relates to the Religious, Political, and Social interests of mankind constitute the subjects for discussion. THE INDEX and Index Tracts are for sale every Sunday at Hospitaller Hall.

WEST NEWTON ENGLISH AND CLASSICAL SCHOOL.—The twenty-first school year of this Family and Day School, FOR BOTH SEXES, will begin Wednesday, September 16, 1874.

For particulars address
NATH'L T. ALLEN, Principal,
West Newton, Mass.

At home Saturdays.

TO NEWSPAPER PUBLISHERS.

Having conveniences for doing the best of newspaper printing at reasonable prices, I should like to contract for composition alone, or for composition, press-work, and mailing, for one or more weekly papers.

Best of references given, and satisfactory work guaranteed. GEO. H. ELLIS,
7 Tremont Place, Boston.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c., of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing

THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX.

Bound volumes of THE INDEX for 1871, 1872, and 1873, will be sent by express (at the purchaser's expense) on receipt of $2.50, $2.50, and $3.00 respectively. These volumes are exceedingly valuable singly, irrespective of each other; for the important essays and other articles they contain are of permanent interest, and will furnish as instructive reading twenty years hence as to-day. No more valuable present could be made to a friend struggling out of Orthodoxy than one of these volumes.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

WARREN'S TRUE CIVILIZATION.

Price 50 cents.

PRACTICAL DETAILS,

showing the workings of the

COST PRINCIPLE.

Price 25 cents.

For sale by

S. H. MORSE,

25 Bromfield St., Boston.

PERKINS' ANTHEM BOOK!!

Price $1.50. $13.50 Per Doz.

A new and excellent collection, by W. O. PERKINS. Will be warmly welcomed by Choirs, as the anthems are not difficult, and are just what is needed for "Opening" and "Voluntary" pieces.

SONG MONARCH!

Price 75 Cents. Per Dozen, $7.50.

The best book of the Season for Singing Schools. By H. R. PALMER assisted by L. O EMERSON. Music principally secular, and is of the most interesting character.

THE LEADER!!

Price $1.38. $12.00 Per Doz.

The New Church Music Book, by H. R. PALMER assisted by L. O. EMERSON, gentlemen whose previous books have been more successful than any others. Please examine.

AMERICAN SCHOOL

C READERS.

IN THREE BOOKS.

Price 35 cents, 50 cents, and 50 cents.

Perfectly adapted to graded classes, in Primary and Grammar Schools. By L. O. EMERSON and W. S. TILDEN. Already in successful use in the schools.

Sold by all dealers. Either book sent postpaid for retail price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO.,

BOSTON.

CHAS. H. DITSON & CO.,

711 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE.

Our organization some time since decided to direct its efforts for the present towards securing the

Repeal of the Laws

whereby church and other corporate property is unjustly exempted from its share of the burden of taxation.

As a means to this end, we have published for general circulation several thousand copies of a

TRACT

on Church Exemption, being the article by Mr. Abbot which appeared in THE INDEX of Nov. 27.

We have already issued three editions, the last of which is nearly exhausted.

We desire soon to issue

Another Large Edition

of this and other tracts on the subject, so that we can place a copy in the hands of

EVERY VOTER IN THE STATE,

and generously to supply the calls for them in other States.

To do this, we need funds; for, although we have made arrangements for printing the Tract at very low cost, it is impossible for the Boston League, with its various other expenses, to bear the entire expense alone.

Will not, then,

All Friends of the Movement

come forward and help us with liberal donations?

We frequently receive communications from parties wishing tracts to distribute, asking how much they shall pay. To such we reply that the cost to us is about $2.50 per thousand, and we shall be pleased to furnish them at this price per thousand, or 30 cents per hundred, to all who will circulate them. But all additional donations will be gratefully received for the purpose of circulating them gratuitously throughout the country.

Last winter this subject was brought before the Legislature of the State, and many petitions were presented asking a repeal of these unjust laws.

The matter is still in their hands, and at the next session will undoubtedly be acted upon. Meanwhile the

Voice of the People,

favoring justice and equity, should be distinctly heard.

We shall soon be ready to send out

BLANK PETITIONS AGAIN,

thus giving an opportunity to those who have not already done so, to protest against this continued wrong.

Let us make it

THE LARGEST PETITION

ever presented to our legislative body.

Will those willing to assist in circulating these petitions please

SEND IN THEIR NAMES?

We would say, also that we feel deeply the need of

Other Organizations

in this State, to coöperate with us in securing equality and justice, by pressing the "Demands of Liberalism." If, in any locality, there are those who are inclined to

Form a Liberal League,

we are ready to render such assistance as lies in our power.

LIBERALS!

If all will unite and work, the results sought can be accomplished

Address

BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE,

NO. 1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

Per order of the
EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

NONPAREIL Farm Feed, Bone, Drug, and Hand-grinding MILLS. Ten Sizes. Also Cotton-Seed Hullers. Illustrated pamphlets free. Address

SEDGEBEER, SHEPARD & MILLER,
181 East Front Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

TYNDALL'S ADDRESS.

A very neat copy of Professor Tyndall's remarkable Address before the British Association on August 19, in pamphlet form, with large type and good paper, will be mailed postpaid on receipt of TWENTY-FIVE CENTS.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE AMERICAN EDITION

OF

MONCURE D. CONWAY'S

SACRED ANTHOLOGY,

A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES,

has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.

Address THE INDEX,
1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,

BANKERS,

LEROY, MINN.

Branch Office, 137 Broadway, N. Y.

Money Invested in First Mortgages on Improved Farms in Minnesota and Iowa, running three to five years, with Coupon Interest Notes, drawing 9 per cent. annually in advance, or ten per cent. paid semi-annually in advance, or 12 per cent. per annum, annually, free of expense to the Loaner.

☞ 10 per cent. paid on receipt of money at the Bank, or in New York, till invested.

For Full Particulars, send for Circular.

137 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

REAL ESTATE SECURITIES, paying 8 to 10 per cent. interest, or

Investments in Real Estate in Chicago and vicinity,

if judiciously made, are the best and safest modes of employing capital. The old

Real Estate and Loan Agency

OF

ERNST PRUSSING, 143 RANDOLPH STREET,

Chicago (Established 1853),

Guarantees perfect title and ample security in all its Real Estate Loans.

Firstclass securities always on hand. Interest and principal collected without charge. Real Estate Investments made on commission or on shares; taxes paid, &c.

Orders of capitalists and real estate owners respectfully solicited.

REASONS FOR USING THE

EUREKA SPOOL SILK.

It is full length. It is full size. It is smooth and elastic, and is equally adapted to hand or machine use.

Many kinds of spool silk are a perfect fraud, being not only shorter in length, but a much finer size than they are represented to be, and of so poor a quality as to be unfit for use. The ladies will always find the Eureka Silk exactly as represented. Every spool is warranted, and the manufacturer's name indelibly branded on every spool. Call for it.

RADICAL AND LITERARY

LECTURES

BY

JOHN WEISS,

RADICAL LECTURES.

The Idea of Hereafter.
An Act of Faith.
Intelligence in Religion.
Religion and Science.
Heart in Religion.

SHAKSPEARIAN LECTURES.

FIRST SERIES.

1. Cause of Laughter.
2. Irony and Humor.
3. Dogberry, Malvolio, Bottom, Touchstone.
4. Ajax in Troilus and Cressida: The Porter in Macbeth: The Fool in Lear.
5. Falstaff.
6. Hamlet.

SECOND SERIES.

1. The Women of Shakspeare.
2. Portia.
3. Ophelia.
4. Macbeth and Lady Macbeth.
5. " " " "
6. Contrast in Shakspeare's Characters.

Address JOHN WEISS,
32 E. Brookline St., Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year. LIBERTY AND LIGHT. Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 5. BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, OCTOBER 8, 1874. WHOLE NO. 250.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF ——.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in ——:

Also, as soon as five hundred such Liberal Leagues shall have been formed in different places, to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be hereafter called, in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the needed reforms.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the National Convention of Liberal Leagues when called together.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

So far as I am concerned, the above is the platform of THE INDEX. I believe in it without reserve; I believe that it will yet be accepted universally by the American people, as the only platform consistent with religious liberty. A Liberal League ought to be formed to carry out its principles wherever half a dozen earnest and resolute Liberals can be got together. Being convinced that the movement to secure compliance with these just "Demands" must surely, even if slowly, spread, I hope to make THE INDEX a means of furthering it; and I ask the assistance and active co-operation of every man and every woman who believes in it. Multiply Liberal Leagues everywhere, and report promptly the names of their Presidents and Secretaries. Intolerance and bigotry will tremble in proportion as that list grows. If freedom, justice, and reason are right, let their organized voice be heard like the sound of many waters.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

BOSTON, Sept. 1, 1873.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State; and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation.

GLIMPSES.

READ THE INSTRUCTIVE and incisive article on "The Two Hodges," on a following page.

THE BOSTON Radical Club will meet at Mrs. Sargent's, 13 Chestnut Street, on October 19, for its first session of the season.

THE RADICAL CLUB of Syracuse, New York, had a lively discussion over Tyndall's address on September 27. Messrs. Green, Mundy, Boynton, Calthrop, and others, took part in it.

"KICKING AGAINST THE PRICKS" is a Scriptural phrase which well characterizes the fate of the radicals at Saratoga. A less sacred but equally felicitous phrase is "fooling with the business end of a wasp."

THE SECOND RADICAL CLUB of Boston held its first meeting this autumn on September 28. It is intended to have a wider range of topics discussed than was the case last year. Professor Gunning will deliver a scientific lecture before this club on October 12.

THE WASHINGTON Chronicle says: "If thievery in journalism were punishable with death, we should be the sole surviving journalist of this unhappy country." When you hear an editor indulging in such language as that, clap your hands on your literary pockets, and think yourself lucky if you do not find them empty.

IN 1868, Bishop Reinkens (not then a Bishop) visited Rome, and was arrested for having a newspaper in his pocket! "Are you quite sure," queried the suspicious official, "that you are a born Catholic?" "I am quite sure," was the impatient rejoinder, "that I was born a Catholic, but you are doing your best to render it doubtful whether I shall remain one."

AT THE CONVENTION of the Young Men's Christian Association, held at Germantown, Pa., on September 25, the secretary of the international committee reported 946 Associations in the Union, 48 of them possessing buildings valued at $200,000 each. There are 78 general secretaries giving their whole time and energies to this work. The numbers, wealth, and influence of the Young Men's Christian Association are rapidly increasing; while the liberals travel their separate ways like G. P. R. James's "solitary horseman."

WHILE THE Economic Science Section of the British Association, at their recent Belfast meeting, was discussing the relations of labor and capital, delegations from the workingmen of the place (who had been on a strike for seven weeks) and from their employers were present. The practical suggestions they heard led to a mutual understanding which terminated the strike. The next day work was resumed, and Professor Tyndall, in his closing address, had the pleasure of announcing the fact to the Association. "Religion" must yield to science the crown of pacificator!

Dr. BLAUVELT apparently thinks that Christianity could survive, even if the inspiration of the Bible should be given up as a lost dogma. Romanism might survive the loss, as it relies on perpetual inspiration through the Church and the Pope; but surely Protestantism loses all its "inspiration," if it loses the "inspired Bible." The Doctor's airy hope does not offset this candid and crushing admission: "Even in the judgment of multitudes of the most intelligent Christians living, therefore, it may be regarded settled that it will be utterly impossible to save the belief in so much as the leading supernatural features of Christianity, if, despite modern objections, the effort be made to save that belief by maintaining the Orthodox dogma of the inspiration of the Bible."

THE FOLLOWING DESPATCH to the Boston Journal bears date of September 20: "Henry L. Norman, once a Methodist preacher in London, has come to the United States as a missionary from the Mohammedan religion. After spending a week in this city he started last evening for Chicago. A reporter of a Sunday paper called upon him at the Windsor House yesterday and got from him the following recital of his errand: 'I have been sent here by a wealthy Mohammedan of Constantinople, who made his fortune in trade with England and America, and so became somewhat familiar with Christian countries. He was struck with the energy of Christians in spreading their religion, and being intensely devoted to his own faith, he became convinced that counter measures ought to be taken. He formed my acquaintance in London, and much of our leisure for months was spent discussing Mohammedanism. The result was I became a convert to his views. It would not interest you or the public to follow the operation of my mind all through this radical change of belief, but I assure you that I am now a firm, conscientious follower of the Eastern religion. That religion is not understood in Christian countries. If it was, it would make converts rapidly. Why, sir, you have probably no adequate estimate of the extent of Mohammedanism. Its followers number two hundred millions, spread over half a dozen Eastern countries.'"

THERE is a noble article in the Irish World of September 12, on "The South: Arrogance of the Ex-Slaveocracy." It counsels the South to come to its senses, stop its bloody blackguardism, and go to honest work; and it concludes with these ringing words: "Men of the South! awake to the requirements of the hour. Recognize the fact that the nation has passed through a revolution. Recognize the fact that the slave power was demolished and beaten flat to the ground, and that it can never more lift its iniquitous head. Cut yourselves loose from the trammels of the aristocracy. Cast away your own childish prejudices against the black man. It was the hand of the Omnipotent GOD that broke his fetters and liberated him! You are entered upon a new era. Advance in it in the newness of the spirit of our regenerated nation. Cherish the memory of your departed heroes, but do not fight for the shadow of the Lost Cause. Dismiss every lingering antipathy to the 'Yankees'—an antipathy which in the past was fostered by your old despisers, the slaveocracy. Clear away the débris of the broken-down walls of partition; go to work like honest men and reconstruct; and then our men of enterprise and our mechanics—a score of whom are worth a thousand of your 'gentlemen'—will go down to you and coöperate with you, and will build you up to the glorious position which you are entitled to occupy." If our Catholic fellow-citizens obey the grand spirit of this whole article, they will have no warmer friend than THE INDEX.

[For THE INDEX.]

The True Optimism.

A DISCOURSE BY WM. J. POTTER.

"We know that all things work together for good to them that love God."—ROM. viii., 28.

I suppose that all people who have any thoughts about the matter want to believe in the proposition announced in this sentence of Paul. Perhaps most people have moments and seasons when they do believe it. And yet I suppose to most people there come frequent times when they are compelled to doubt it,—times, at least, when "things" seem so adverse to good, when the apparently untoward and evil circumstances that beset human life press so heavily, that it does not look so certain that they "work together for good." Even if faith come to the rescue of the bewildered understanding with the assurance that, since Infinite Goodness reigns, it must be so, nevertheless the question arises, and keeps urging itself, how it can be so. Though Faith may be able to say, We believe that somehow, however dark and difficult the problem may look, all the ills of life are wrought over into good, yet if reason do not see at all into the process, if the logical understanding gets no clew towards a satisfying solution, it is hard to keep back intruding questions, and to hold that height of certainty wherein the mind with unshaken confidence can affirm that it knows.

"We KNOW that all things work together for good." Do we know it? To say that we believe it must be so, because we believe that the Sovereign of the universe is infinitely good, is rather to beg the question at issue than to answer it. This is the refuge of the baffled mind when, having come to the limits of its knowledge, it then throws into the scale for its beliefs the weight of its hopes, aspirations, and desires. And this refuge is legitimate provided the limits of knowledge are not reached too soon. If we have proved the road over which we have been travelling to be safe, though many a passage-way at the time may have seemed perilous and many an ascent insurmountable, we learn to trust it to the end. It is natural and right, too, that we should accept the veracity of our better aspirations and hopes. Until proved the contrary we may legitimately accept their testimony as evidence of the real drift and tendency of things in the universe. The writer of the epistle to the Hebrews says, "Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." And there is a grand truth in this statement; a very full and satisfying truth. That ideal which the human soul possesses in its higher hopes and desires it instinctively trusts as the pledge of a future reality. And reason may well accept this natural mental bias, to trust the future for something better than the past has provided, as a proof that the immanent spirit which is the central life of Nature and of man is moving in the direction of good and is overruling evil for the promotion of good. Still, there are few people who can in all circumstances keep this high ground of faith. Hope is not knowledge. Aspiration is not certainty. A vision of the future may be trustworthy, but it is not to ordinary people so palpable a reality as a present fact. Faith may be good evidence for things not seen, but the things seen are so close at hand, and cover so fully the field of vision, that they are apt to shut out all sight of this evidence. And these things that are seen are sometimes so inscrutably evil, so impenetrably dark, that, even though the soul may believe there is light beyond, it yet cannot trace one ray through the thicket,—cannot explain how all this evil is to be transmuted into the substance of virtue, how it is to be surmounted and put to use in the progress of the world. Optimism—the belief that the world is the best possible, and that every act and incident in it at any particular time is the best possible in view of all circumstances and in reference to the ultimate good of the whole—may be a true theory; and it may be a comforting theory to the theologian in his studies, to the philosopher in his speculations, to any person in moments of serenity, when individually free from the pressure of evil conditions. But I suspect that this belief does not generally come to comfort those who stand most in need of comfort. When the iron enters one's own soul it is not so easy to be an optimist. I can hardly conceive it possible that those classes of society who are crushed under some great oppression, who are ground down by poverty, who are the victims of injustice and tyranny, who are forced to live in daily companionship with vice and misery; or those upon whose hopes and careers has fallen the blight of constant disappointment and failure, upon whose once fair auspices and happy home there has come, for instance, the wreck of fortune and love that persistent intemperance brings in its train; or those—and they may be in the most guarded and moral social circles—whose hearts are smitten by a sudden blow from some villany too black to name—I can hardly conceive that any persons in such conditions can comfort themselves with the thought that "all things are the best possible,"—can look up out of their misery, out of their sense of humiliation and wrong, and say serenely, "Whatever is, is right." No; there are ills in our human lot too profound, too heavy, too bitter, for any who are under the burden of them to have the heart to say, "This is all as it should be; this is what I need; this is the best thing which could possibly have been arranged for me." Could such a sentiment find utterance, it would seem, indeed, but solemn mockery, and would betray a want of the very feeling from which must come the motive power which is to resist the ills of life and triumph over them. If optimism is to be interpreted as meaning unconditionally, in the moral as in the material universe, that "whatever is, is right," as Pope put it in his oft-quoted aphorism; if it mean that everything in the world this moment is the best thing possible in the eye of Infinite Goodness, and just as we might conceive Infinite Goodness would approve and wish it to be, then,—to my mind, optimism is most false both in theory and experience.

And thus understood, it not only seems to me groundless in reason, but dangerous to morals. I cannot bring myself to say that even all things are the best possible considered with reference to the after and ultimate good of all persons; that Infinite Goodness, though looking to the future, were it to keep full control of human conditions and actions, would arrange everything, will everything, just as we find it to-day. Such a doctrine of optimism appears to me to blaspheme the Infinite Goodness nearly as much as did the old dogma of predestinating a portion of the human race to eternal misery. To suppose that a Being of Infinite Purity could look with complacency upon the assassin's crime, the swindler's plot of lying and robbery, the profligate's infamous lust and treachery, the cruelties under which millions of human beings have been crushed by selfish power, because in the future His omniscient eye sees that good will come out of them,—much more, to suppose that He has by his own free purpose and will arranged all these acts as the best way of producing this after good,—this is to violate the very idea of goodness, and to confound all valid distinction between right and wrong. The only sense in which I can conceive optimism to be acceptable to a rational and morally earnest mind is that the world as a whole is the best possible, considering that human beings are free responsible actors in it and help to make it what it at any moment is,—that is, that the conditions of human existence with regard to physical and moral evil have progressed as far as could rationally be expected on the plan of making man a prime agent in improving his own condition.

Why man was made a responsible agent in arranging his own lot and destiny, why he was made subject to evil and suffering instead of being necessitated to a path of rectitude and happiness, is another question; and a question which it may be difficult to answer. We can only say that he is not thus necessitated,—that the human race, considered collectively or individually, has before it the tremendous task of working its own way up and out from evil conditions, and by a rational and virtuous use of its own powers achieving its own destiny. And we can say, besides, that this seems a higher order of being, even with all the liabilities and actualities of evils that attach to it, than would be a condition of existence in which there should be only a mechanical adherence to right. At any rate, so things are; and however better it might seem if we had all been made angels incapable of going astray, it is evident that, if we are ever to reach that state, it must be by our own effort and struggle. And very likely there can be no such thing as conscious angelhood, no such thing as the full development of a vital, organic, moral personality, without this effort—without the rational perception and choice of truth and right rather than their opposites. In history, the fact that man by his own effort has been making his lot better, that human virtues have been continually blotting out the record of human crimes and woes, that truth and justice have triumphed over wrong, and right and love have been gradually winning supremacy over brute might and cruelty,—it is this fact that gives us a right to affirm that there is a supreme moral order ruling in the affairs of men. Man has himself overruled his own evil doings. Whenever, therefore, it be said that "the world is the best possible," and that "all things in it are arranged in the best possible way for the ultimate good of all," we can justly use the optimistic assertion only in the sense that it was best that man should be left free, or should become responsible to a great extent for his own condition; and that, being left free, though he will bring many evils upon himself, his moral intelligence can be trusted to overcome them and ultimately to make "all things work together for good."

But Heaven forbid that we should suppose that with reference to man's future good all present things are alike available as material,—that one act is as good as another; that a bad man is as good for the purpose as a good man; that wickedness is as serviceable as virtue; that all moral distinctions vanish in the presence of some supreme transforming spirit that takes all our human conditions, the ill and the good, the bitter and the sweet, the vicious and the virtuous, and, putting them all together into its crucible, straightway brings forth a product always of the same texture and serviceableness! Heaven forbid that in any absolute, unconditioned sense, we should say "Whatever is, is right," and that we should lose our horror of evil and crime because possibly we may see some way in which they may, by-and-by, ages hence perhaps, be converted into good! All things do, indeed, work together for good. But they do so because human beings keep clear in their minds the distinction between things as they are and things as they ought to be, and strive to make the "ought to be" actual. They do so because man sees the difference between good and evil, and knows from daily observation and experience that there are many things in the world that are not right, and that will not be likely to come right, or be transmuted into any form of goodness, unless human beings take hold and help do it. "All things work together for good,"—but not without man as a worker.

And if we recur to Paul's words from which we set out, we shall see that they also express essentially this condition. "All things work together for good to them that love God:" in other words, to paraphrase the conditional clause, to them who look up rather than down,—to them who seek the truth, who espouse right, who strive to know and to do the good, who honor virtue, who love the Infinite Excellence, in which all truth, right, beauty, goodness, are conceived to harmonize as parts of one Ideal, and who study constantly to copy that ideal into character and life. In a word, all things work together for good to those who love and aim at the good. The spirit of this aspiration and effort is the transmuting agency that converts the base elements of human error and wickedness into the pure coin of virtue. Those to whom this effort and aspiration are wanting, those whose look is downward, those whose career is only a yielding to the cravings of selfish passion, those who find their most alluring solicitations in the direction of sensual appetite, those who are bound in the chains of avarice and animalism, those who have given themselves up to false and vicious propensities and are making little or no struggle against them—these have no right to hope that things will in any way work together for their good. The soliciting spirit of the Eternal Goodness must find some coöperating response within the soul, or its effort is in vain. Not until that desire for goodness, which we cannot suppose is ever wholly crushed out even of the worst of men, is somehow, somewhere, aroused into a positive purpose and endeavor, so that the soul looks and reaches up again, will a man find himself possessed of the faculty of making even the ills and sorrows of his lot steps in his ladder heavenward.

If we apply these principles to the problems of life's evils, we shall find them as true in practice as in theory. Look at the history of the human race. Humanity has progressed in proportion to the activity of its own rational and moral intelligence. The work of progress has not been carried on by some overruling Power outside and independent of the power that resides in the human faculties. It is through the human faculties themselves that the divine purpose is unfolded, and the destiny appointed for man by the Creative Spirit is gradually achieved. Henry Ward Beecher once said, "The elect are those who will, the non-elect are those who won't." That is the modern interpretation of the Calvinistic doctrine of foreordination. And it is a true hint of the actual historical fact that the Creative Intelligence works through human agency, and depends for its success, in no small measure, upon the coöperation of the human will. Humanity advances and achieves its grand triumphs, not through any spirit of fatalistic philosophy that would fold the hands and piously leave everything to God, but through its own prying, restless energies. The Hindu Brahmins have taught that men get nearest to God when they renounce the world and its activities, and indulge in retired meditation, cultivating an artificial spiritual clairvoyance; and this sentiment has reappeared to no little extent in the Christian Church. But nearer the truth was the old Greek legend which represented Hercules as mounting to Olympus and becoming a companion of the gods through his gigantic labors for the benefit of man on earth. It is true that in the historical progress of the race the doings of evil men are gradually overruled for good, and the pernicious result ultimately eliminated from the product that permanently remains. But this is because there are always some people, many people, who are seeking and striving for just that end—Herculean hearts and wills seeing clearly the demands of truth and right, and setting themselves to the task of answering them. And if, as Count De Gasparin has well said, "there are moments when certain causes rule so absolutely that everything serves them, war as well as peace, defeats as well as victories, obstacles as well as means," it is because of the vast momentum which any moral truth has acquired through the consenting and coöperating exertions of many rational wills to push it forward and give it supremacy. Without this the great moments would never arrive.

And the same thing is true in our individual experience. We overcome personal trials and obstacles of every kind, we defeat evil both in its causes and in its results, when our heart and will lay hold upon goodness with their whole strength. In this alembic of a supreme moral purpose all experiences are dissolved, however hard they may be to bear—temptations, adversities, griefs, old transgressions—and all are converted into materials of future character. We then mount by the very obstacles that would seem to hinder us. We get visions of heaven through the very tears that sorrow wrings from our eyes. This is the mood in which all things work together for good, the working spirit being in the human soul; and it is in this mood that we come to understand, with Paul, how "neither death nor life, principalities nor powers, height nor depth, things present nor things to come, shall be able to separate us from the love of God,"—which to Paul was specially manifest in Christ, but which is equally manifest to-day throughout the universe. Through this human mood of aspiration after goodness and active receptivity to it, light streams into the darkest places of human experience. Often we may see how the evil actually passes into good,—how under the hammer of temptation and trial the soul may be tempered to a finer virtue. We see men and women pressed under great burdens of woe, who, instead of sinking thereby, rise under the burden to heights of wonderful strength and serenity; we see sometimes sweetness and purity of character growing right out of the midst of foul corruption, the ashes of sorrow converted into "beauty of holiness," the thorns which passion and wrong may have pressed upon the brows of their victims to torture them blossoming into crowns of roses for their immortal glory.

And with these principles, which seem to be thus confirmed both in the aggregate history of the race and in individual experience, we may even venture to ascend to the larger and more metaphysical problem of the existence of evil in the general plan of creation. When we contemplate the universe as a whole, through all the ages and epochs of its marvellous history, whether we view it as believers in the theory of its gradual evolution or of its creation by special acts, what a scene do we behold! How everywhere into the web of existence are woven inextricably the opposing elements of good and evil! Not only in our human life, but in the great world-experience of which our human life is a part, the light and the shade are everywhere commingled. Light and darkness, virtue and vice, beauty and ugliness, joy and pain, right and might, hope and fear, order and violence, love and hate, creation and carnage, life and death, reason and passion, justice and wrong, spiritual aspiration and animal appetite, the attraction of a mental ideal and the clog and weight of physical circumstance—thus everywhere are the world-elements matched in fierce and persistent contention. Verily, from the very beginning of motion in the first plastic form that matter assumed in the primal origin of things to the latest struggle with calamity or temptation that may be going on this moment in any human breast, it is a "struggle for existence;" a struggle for existence under that law which recent science, with a narrower application, has styled "the survival of the fittest." What wonder if, in viewing this struggle, theologians have felt themselves obliged to conceive of an incarnate principle of evil in some satanic personage, or that philosophers have affirmed that the world is ruled by fate rather than by providence. But science itself, and in this very phrase, "survival of the fittest," is beginning to show us the mistake of both theologian and philosopher. For what means this "survival of the fittest"? It means the survival of the worthiest,—not by any means always the survival of the strongest, or the largest, or the fiercest. Whole species of animals, huger and mightier than any now existing on the earth, have become extinct. Savage races of men, persistent, and strong, and fierce, in adhering to their savage ways, have yielded to the milder manners of civilized men. And the cruelest individual passion or most degrading personal appetite, though it be the accumulated hereditary power of many generations of vicious indulgence, has succumbed again and again to the pleading voice of conscience and the refining influences of goodness. "Survival of the fittest" means, then, in the end the survival of the best. It means that in this long struggle for existence among contending forces of which the universe is the scene, the victory is finally on the side of the true, the good, the beautiful; it means that right finally gets the better of might, justice triumphs over wrong, truth disarms error, roughness and uncouthness become moulded into beauty, and goodness is crowned while vice is enslaved. It means, therefore, that the struggle is not merely a blind conflict of blind forces, but that in it is an aim; that it is not simply a battle but a steady drift towards a goal; not a contest only, but a march. And this aim, this constant upward tendency and drift, this advance through the conflict, this progress in the process, must have been involved in the very first appliance of force from which all things have come, or in the primal substance which was the seed of the universe. In that first act of creation or first step in evolution not only was motion, activity, life, involved, but in it was a power that determined the direction of the motion and the life. In other words, in that first creative impulse the true and the right were weighted with a power (a power inherent in their very nature) sufficient to enable them to overcome all obstacles, and to survive all possible exigencies of the struggle. If, as a philosophic poet has recently well said, evil is inherent in "creation's temperament," it must also be said that good inheres in "creation's temperament" too, and lies still farther back, and holds the primal supremacy. Evil is the natural resistance which the elements of the universe make to the power that would mould them into order and symmetry. It is the condition of development and the necessitated slowness of the process. It is the pain incident to growth and birth. But good is the substance of the developing power itself; the vital essence in which the process of creation began. More than condition or incident, it is that which gives to the process impulse, direction, and goal.

And what is this but to say that there is a Providence in the affairs of the world and in the affairs of men? Literally a pro-videns—a foreseeing of, and a general aiming towards, an end. Not a Providence merely vouched for by questionable tradition, or resting on proof-texts that vanish before rational inquiry, but a Providence the existence of which is proved by the irrefragable testimony of science. Not the kind of Providence which is supposed to intervene in the affairs of life in special emergencies, and to come at every pleading desire that man may lift to the skies for personal relief from some pain or peril, but a Providence immovably established in the very order, law, life of the universe itself,—a Providence, through all the ages and epochs of the past as in the present, ever educing good out of ill, and in the human world doing this by the successful incarnation of its purpose in the hearts and wills of human beings; a Providence that this moment is soliciting every man and woman among us, through the knowledge that our minds may gather, through the pressure of conscience, and through all the gentle sentiments of human sympathy and helpfulness, to become the instruments for working out its beneficent intent.

A SMALL BOY AROSE at a Sunday-school concert and began quite glibly: "A certain man went down from Jerusalem to Jericho, and fell—and fell"—(there his memory began to fail him)—"and—and fell by the roadside, and the thorns sprang up and choked him."

AN ELDERLY lady endeavoring to post a letter in a hydrant is a spectacle to make an oyster weep.

[For THE INDEX.]

THE TWO HODGES.

BY AN EX-PRESBYTERIAN MINISTER.

The Rev. Charles Hodge, D.D., is, and has been for thirty years, a professor in the Presbyterian Theological Seminary at Princeton, New Jersey, an institution for training students for the ministry which is not only the oldest, but the best endowed, most popular and influential of all the theological schools belonging to that religious body. Of the four thousand ministers now in the Presbyterian Church, by far the greatest number have been educated at Princeton.

The Rev. Archibald A. Hodge, D.D., is the son of Dr. Charles Hodge, and is the leading professor in the Theological Seminary at Alleghany City, Pennsylvania, an institution only second in importance to that of Princeton. I propose to call attention to the public character and influence of each of these gentlemen in order, premising that the private character of both is unimpeached and unimpeachable. And first the Rev. Charles Hodge, D.D.

I. About the year 1830, the politicians of South Carolina concocted their plan for a dissolution of the Union, and the establishment of a grand slaveholding oligarchy, after the Roman model of civilization. To carry out their scheme to success, they saw the absolute necessity of securing the coöperation of the Church. An ordained clergyman in all the sects being recognized by the people as a minister, or ambassador of Jesus Christ, commissioned from the Court of Heaven to treat with the rebellious children of men, had an influence with the ignorant masses which no other man in society possessed. He had his audiences under his control twice every Sunday. He could make statements before them which, however untrue, could not be contradicted by a hearer. He held religious meetings through the week in private houses and school-houses, always carrying with him the air of a conceded holiness and infallibility. He visited among his people socially, solemnized the marriages of their children, buried their dead; and his utterances, both private and public, were regarded as the voice of God.

A priesthood so able to confuse and pervert the natural conscience on the moral question of slaveholding, the politicians saw, would be an invaluable auxiliary in their treasonable work, and they undertook the easy task of bringing them over to their interests. They began with the Presbyterian Church, at that time the most influential of all the sects in the country.

Besides one or two newspapers, the Presbyterians had a quarterly review called the Biblical Repertory, and the Princeton professors were the chief writers for it, Dr. Hodge being the editor. This review circulated among the clergy, the students of theology, the ruling elders, and intelligent members of the Church, and was very influential in forming the opinions of these various classes.

The antislavery leaven which the fathers of the Republic had put into the Declaration of Independence and the Preamble of the Constitution had taken such effect through the labors of Garrison and his coadjutors, that there were, about this time, nearly one thousand organized antislavery societies, all demanding for the slave immediate emancipation, and, as auxiliary thereto, all holding stated meetings for raising funds to print and circulate books and tracts, and to send out lecturers everywhere into the highways and hedges for the purpose of enlightening the people, and inducing them to act on the great issues before them.

At this array of moral power outside the Church the slaveholders were thoroughly alarmed, and they saw more clearly than ever that their schemes would fail unless they could secure promptly the coöperation of the Church.

In 1836, the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, which was a representative body of one minister and one elder from each of the Presbyteries composing the entire denomination, and a court of the last resort to settle all questions of doctrine and discipline, met at Pittsburgh. Commissioners from twenty-seven slaveholding Presbyteries, embracing men of both the schools in controversy, new and old, disregarding in their pro-slavery zeal the doctrinal questions about which they had previously quarrelled, assembled in open caucus, organized, and, like the politicians in Congress, adopted the tactics of intimidation by resolving: "That, if the forthcom-"ing Assembly shall undertake to exercise authority "on the subject of slavery, so as to make it an immo-"rality, or shall in any way declare that Christians "are criminal in holding slaves, a Declaration shall "be presented by the Southern Delegation declining "their jurisdiction, and our determination not to "submit to their decision."

This proceeding had the desired effect. A nail was driven through the conscience of the Church, and it only needed to be promptly clinched on the other side to make everything safe. This important service was rendered by the Rev. Charles Hodge. This gentleman had written a pro-slavery article for the Princeton Repertory which was so admirably adapted to the purposes of the slaveholders that the regular day of publication was anticipated, and the document issued on the spot, in pamphlet form, by the Pittsburgh press, intended, as the title-page said, "for gratuitous circulation" among the members of the Assembly. The article was thus placed in every one's hand, and its plausible reasonings captivated the willing minds of the brethren, and prepared the Assembly for what followed.

Robert I. Breckenridge, a distinguished lawyer of Kentucky, in the warm gush of his religious conversion from the bar to the pulpit, had, in a speech recorded in the African Repository, the organ of the Colonization Society, given the following definition of slavery, which, wherever read, tended to convince men of common sense and honesty, in the Church and out of it, of the intrinsic wickedness of the slave system:—

"What is slavery as it exists among us? We reply, It is that condition enforced by the laws of one-half the States of this Confederacy, in which one portion of the community, called masters, is allowed such power over another portion called slaves, as—

"1. To deprive them of the entire earnings of their own labor, except only so much as is necessary to continue labor itself, by continuing healthy existence—thus committing clear robbery.

"2. To reduce them to the necessity of universal concubinage, by denying to them the civil rights of marriage—thus breaking up the dearest relations of life, and encouraging universal prostitution.

"3. To deprive them of the means and opportunities of moral and intellectual culture; in many States making it a high penal offence to teach them to read—thus perpetuating whatever evil there is that proceeds from ignorance.

"4. To set up between parents and their children an authority higher than the impulse of nature and the laws of God, which breaks up the authority of the father over his own offspring, and at pleasure separates the mother at a returnless distance from her child—thus abrogating the clear laws of Nature, thus outraging all decency and justice, and degrading and oppressing thousands upon thousands of beings created like themselves in the image of the Most High God. THIS IS SLAVERY, as it is daily exhibited in every slave State."—African Repository, 1834.

Dr. Hodge's Repertory article on account of the high standing of the author, and by its specious arguments so well calculated to mislead, overrode the noble antislavery utterance of the young convert in Kentucky, and all others like it, and completely permeated the governing influences of the Church with its pro-slavery sentiment. In proof of this the Assembly which met next year, in 1837, without any charges being stated, and without judge or jury, proceeded to "exscind" four large Northern synods of the Church on the pretext that they were heretical in their theology, and non-Presbyterian in their discipline, but really because they contained nine-tenths of all the active opponents of slavery in the Church.

This revolutionary act was of the nature of a test by which the pro-slavery men found their natural and proper places on the principle of elective affinity. Dr. G. A. Baxter, President of the Theological Seminary of Virginia, had been a very zealous new school man, as had been all the members of his Presbytery. But he was suddenly converted from the new to the old, and then fought desperately against his former friends at the North. When the news of this fact came down to Virginia, every tongue was eloquent in denouncing him as a traitor to the new school cause. He was compelled, therefore, on his return home, to call the brethren together, and to issue a printed address to his constituency justifying his tergiversation. In this document he says: "One motive with me for going into the "Convention [the Old School Convention which im-"mediately preceded the meeting of the Assembly, "and chalked out a programme of its proceedings] "was to feel the pulse of our Northern friends on the "subject of abolition; and on this point I was grati-"fied beyond my most sanguine expectations. There "were one hundred and twenty-four members of the "Convention, of whom one hundred were members "also of the Assembly, and among them but two "abolitionists." This address satisfied the new school of slaveholders, and they all cheerfully fell into line with their old school brethren, and were ready for the event of the next year.

In 1838, the Presbyterian Church split, and almost the entire South, amounting to between thirty and forty Presbyteries, went with Dr. Hodge, and took, on the subject of slavery and Orthodoxy, what was called the "Princeton ground." The abolitionists in the Church, who had not been "exscinded" in the decapitation of the four Northern synods, although few in number, were brave and persevering in their protests against the pro-slavery majority; and they kept up the struggle until 1845, when, by an overwhelming vote, the General Assembly of that year declared that Southern slavery was no sin, no bar to Christian communion, and that to say that it was so would be to condemn both Christ and the Apostles. The most of them in consequence of this action lost all hope of reform, and left the Church.

Now, suppose that Dr. Hodge, instead of writing his elaborate Repertory article as a defence of slavery, thus working, either ignorantly or wilfully, into the hands of the slave-holding conspirators, had been true to God and liberty, and made it antislavery in sentiment,—the whole history of the country from that day to this would have been different. If any one doubts this, let him look at the facts. The Presbyterian clergy were very numerous and wide-spread over all the Middle, Western, and Southern States. They were abler and better educated men, and nearer to the people, than the ministry of any other sect. In addition to this, they were the authorized and recognized teachers of the people in morals and religion. Dr. Hodge, from his position in the leading theological seminary, had more power in moulding the views of the clergy, and through the clergy of the people, than any other hundred men; for in those days the pulpit wielded a much greater influence over the people than the press did. The Presbyterian Church with such a ministry as it had, with its great wealth, and with so many of its distinguished elders and members engaged in politics and the learned professions, exerted a vast influence over all the other sects. It is not too much to say, therefore, in view of these facts, that Dr. Hodge had it in his power to checkmate the slave-holders in their revolutionary designs upon the government; and not only so, but to bring the whole power of the Church to bear upon slave-holding itself as a crime, and thus to put it under the ban of a religious public sentiment which would ultimately bring about its entire abolition. When, however, the Presbyterian Church, under his lead, set the example of going over bodily to the cause of the slave-holders, the Methodists, Baptists, Episcopalians, and Congregationalists went too, until the whole American Church, except a few denominations, so inconsiderable in numbers and influence as not to count anything, became the bulwark of American slavery! They branded the abolitionists as infidels, and turned the religious sentiment of the country against them. They upheld the Fugitive Slave Law, as one of the compromise measures of the Congress of 1850, on the plea that the Apostle Paul sent back Onesimus, a runaway slave, to his master. They made the slave-holders believe that their cause was the cause of the Bible and of God, and thus prepared the way for the rebellion of 1861.

Dr. Smyth, Dr. Thornwell, Dr. Adger, Dr. Palmer, and many other Presbyterian ministers, all former students under Dr. Hodge, at Princeton, were clerical ring-leaders in the rebellion; and, when the war was begun by an attack on Fort Sumter, these reverend gentlemen, with their brother traitors, had not a doubt that their two allies, the Church and Democratic party of the North, would stand beside them, and make their triumph easy. But they were doomed to the humiliation of seeing both these confederates displaying the white feather when the hour of danger came. For the gun that opened fire upon Fort Sumter waked up the masses of the people, and even those who had been hoodwinked by the Church; and, seeing the issues before them, they rallied for the salvation of the imperilled Republic. The Southern men, with faces one moment red with indignation, and another blanched with fear, saw their Northern allies turning traitors to them as they themselves had turned traitors to the government, and they afterwards fought and sacrificed with a heroism which in itself was grand. Only two or three that I now remember—Rev. Dr. Plummer, of the Alleghany Theological Seminary, Rev. Dr. Vandyke, of Brooklyn, and Dr. Southside Adams, of Boston, remained openly true to the South. All the rest, from one motive or another, fell in with the tide of patriotism that swept over the land, stultified their church teachings on the subject of slavery, and made themselves hoarse in singing the John Brown song. But the government to-day advertises for tombstones for more than five hundred thousand men whose bodies sleep in the national cemeteries, and who were all sacrificed in putting down the slave-holders' rebellion. And mighty as the nation is, it is now staggering, like a drunken man, under a load of two thousand millions of debt incurred in the same terrible effort.

After a review of this history, it must be conceded that no man in the nation, not even Davis or Lee, is so responsible before God for the blood and treasure expended in saving the Republic as Charles Hodge is. And if the doctrine of consequential damages, which our commissioners at Geneva so eloquently pleaded in the convention for arbitrating the Alabama Claims, is true,—as we believe it is in foro conscientiæ,—there is no man in the United States at whose door lies so much blood as at the door of Charles Hodge. By his great influence in the religious world, and especially in the Presbyterian Church, he could have sounded the tocsin of alarm in due time, and headed off the rebellion, and given a death blow to its cause. But he did not do so, for he had no heart for such work. He held the word of promise to the ear of the South for twenty-five years, but broke it to the hope when the crisis came. He saw the armies of the North overrunning the whole Southern country, and reducing its inhabitants to poverty by fire and sword, because they undertook to build up an institution which they believed to be divine, and which he had defended by the most specious arguments based upon Scripture. Within a few years, the Northern Presbyterians, in their General Assembly, have made the most humiliating concessions to induce their Southern brethren to come back to the old fold. But who can wonder that the South, thus far, indignantly reject the dirt-eating overtures, when they remember how basely they were betrayed by their Northern brethren, with Dr. Hodge at their head? As slavery is abolished, and cannot be served any longer by Dr. Hodge or any other ecclesiastic, this gentleman has given in his adhesion to the cause of the "Religious Amendment" of the Constitution, and may be expected to serve it with the same zeal he displayed in the service of slavery.

II. The Rev. A. A. Hodge, D.D., is a professor in the theological seminary, at Alleghany City, Pennsylvania, where, like his father at Princeton, from the position he occupies, he wields an influence he could not otherwise have, in teaching the teachers of the people. He is by no means the equal of his father in native ability or learning, but the son walks in the footsteps of his illustrious predecessor in being a cast-iron conservative in all matters of reform. He is opposed to universal suffrage in the Commonwealth, and regards it as an evil of inconceivable magnitude. He believes that there should be a property qualification for voters, and that a very high one. He believes that the Christian religion should be recognized as the fundamental law of the land,—that the Christian Sabbath, by which he means the Orthodox ideas on that subject, should be established by law,—that the Christian education of youth should be enforced by law, by which is meant converting the public schools into institutions for teaching religion with the Bible as a text-book. He holds that all disbelievers in the being of a God, in the divinity and lordship of Jesus Christ, and in the inspiration of the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments should be disfranchised. That is to say, that Unitarians, Universalists, Free Religionists, and Jews, to say nothing of Spiritualists, Materialists, and Atheists, no matter how sincere and honest they may be in their opinions, nor how pure they may be in their lives, should have no vote, but be consigned to the same category of political incapables with women, idiots, and convicts. To embody these opinions into law, and thus make them effective, he is willing to make the Church one by affiliating the Presbyterians with the Methodists, Baptists, and even the Roman Catholics! The ideas mentioned are not isolated abstractions, as every one sees, but are linked together in close relationship, and culminate in the grand scheme to which the two Hodges are devoted, for securing the theological Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, and "putting the government squarely under CHRIST."

Now, if these opinions of Dr. A. A. Hodge were held by a set of weak-minded enthusiasts among the clergy who pound the pulpit every Sunday in advocating them before their hearers, we could smile at their folly and pass on. But when a professor in a theological seminary holds them as vastly important issues now pressing upon the public attention, and inculcates them on the receptive minds of his students whom he sends out every year by scores in the high character of ambassadors of Jesus Christ, to inculcate them again upon the people who have votes, we can easily see that he is doing the work of evil on a large scale.

This influence is in a sense secret. That is, the professor in the lecture room, and the preacher in the pulpit, and elsewhere, inculcates these views. There is no opportunity of denial, no showing of the other side of the question; for, when the Legate from the Court of Heaven speaks, it is the duty of the people to hear and believe, not to question and debate. And as at first blush the common run of Christians are pleased with the scheme as affording them something to do besides going to church, and as comporting with their high character of good soldiers of Jesus Christ, the Captain of their Salvation, they become committed to it, and therefore turn a deaf ear to all argument.

He must be a blind man who cannot see that the plan of the two Hodges for putting an Orthodox confession of faith into the Constitution, "to be carried out by appropriate legislation," is a revolutionary one, which, if precipitated by the madness of its devotees, will deluge the land with blood just as certainly as the Church's pet institution of slavery brought on the late civil war with all its horrors. Multitudes of our people in their folly laugh at the growing combinations of the ecclesiastical forces to bring on this new revolution, just as the incredulous North laughed to scorn the reported threats of the slave-holders to subvert the national government. The abolitionists, who had studied the subject of slavery, and understood it, gave public warning of the Southern schemes long before they developed in blood; but their words seemed to their countrymen as idle tales, and they believed them not, till the storm of war actually broke upon us, and found us all unprepared.

In like manner the men who have studied the Religious-Amendment question point to the avowed object of its friends, call attention to the organized forces of the Church, bound by the logical necessity of her creeds to carry out the measure, and warn the public of the day of wrath that is inevitably coming; and all they get for their pains is a smile of incredulity. The Radicals themselves, disabled for co-operating with even saints and angels in any good cause by their intense and pharisaical individualism, are waiting for another Bull Run defeat, before they get their eyes open to see that the Church, still believing in her creeds, is in earnest for revolutionizing the government, and making it subsidiary to her purposes; and that we can only meet an organized force on the field of conflict by an organized force, unless we are prepared to submit to defeat. I have shown that the influence of the two Hodges in promoting this bad cause, on account of their position as professors in theological seminaries, is in arithmetical progression, when compared with the influence of any other score of men in the country. What do the people, and especially the classes which it is proposed to disfranchise, think about the matter?

THE UNITARIAN CONFERENCE AND THE F. R. A.

EXTRACTS FROM THE "CHRISTIAN REGISTER'S" REPORT OF THE SARATOGA CONFERENCE.

Mr. Moors, from the Business Committee, reported back Dr. Clarke's resolutions, with the recommendation that they pass. They were as follows:—

"Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed by the President to convey to the National Council of the Congregational Churches meeting in New Haven, in October, our sympathy with their work in maintaining and defending the independency of the churches from ecclesiastical authority, and our wishes for their success in advancing Christian life and work in our land."

"Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed by the President to attend the next annual meeting of the Free Religious Association, and express our good wishes and sympathy with their endeavor to promote the cause of religious liberty."

The Chair put the question upon the first resolution, and declared it adopted. . . .

The vote by which the resolution was passed was reconsidered, and on motion of Dr. Clarke was amended by substituting "freedom" for "independency," and again adopted.

The second resolution then came up for discussion.

Rev. T. J. Mumford thought the Committee on Fellowship, in presenting the resolution, assumed that the Free Religious Association is a sect, or denomination. Their leading men resent such an idea.

The Chair stated that the resolution did not come from the Committee.

Dr. Clarke explained that he offered the resolution on his own responsibility, at the suggestion of another. He thought we all did sympathize with the Free Religious Association in the matter of seeking to establish religious freedom.

Rev. C. G. Ames preferred, if any action was to be taken in regard to the Free Religious Association, it should be in another form; he would therefore move a substitute for the resolution as follows:—

"Resolved, That the Council of this Conference be directed to convey to the Free Religious Association, or its officers, the assurance of our profound interest in its work; that we recognize the importance and usefulness of its contributions to religious thought, and efforts for its purification; and that no differences of outlook or method shall work any weakening of the tie which binds together all who seek to learn what is true, and to apply it as the law of human life."

Dr. Bellows thought it not the right thing to ask this Conference to pass such a resolution in reference to an association with whose general spirit they could so little sympathize. He objected to having brought in at the fag end of a session a question like this, that touches the profoundest feeling of this body.

Objection being made to the continuation of the discussion, as it was past the hour of adjournment, the President declared the Conference adjourned.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Conference was called to order by the President at half past three o'clock.

Gov. Padelford, of Providence, R. I., hoped the resolution would not pass. As for Christian liberty, everybody enjoys it, or can enjoy it.

Mr. Green, of Chelsea.—I do not sympathize with the Free Religious Association; but with many of its members I do sympathize. I doubt not a majority of them went out from us because they were not of us. Can we sympathize with them? I sympathize with all who are building up the kingdom of God in the life and spirit of Jesus Christ. I am not bigoted, and do not wish to get on the yoke again from which I have been so long free.

Gov. Padelford.—The religious denominations send missionaries abroad to the Moslems; and they all believe in a Divine Being; and that is all our free religious friends believe in.

Mayor Doyle, of Providence.—I am sorry this resolution has been introduced. Christian men and women can have no sympathy with a movement that is a renunciation of Christianity. Those who are in sympathy can enjoy this renunciation; but let them not ask this Conference for sympathy. This kind of thing prevents our contributions to the Unitarian cause. The laymen will give for what represents Christ and Christianity, but not for what is called Free Religion. In the name of this Conference, so magnificent in point of numbers, and as a layman, I protest against this whole plan of seeking to come into fellowship with the free religious movement.

Rev. E. E. Hale.—It is now nine years that this Committee on Fellowship has been entrusted with the duty of seeking the fellowship of other denominations. In the opinion of the Council, the Unitarians are a Christian body, occupying, if not a central position, a position as near the centre as any body in Christendom. From this grand position we have sent out our expressions of sympathy to whatever body was working for God. We have joined with others in such matters as were of national importance. We have sent delegates to the Board of Foreign Missions, because asked to do so. Wherever asked to send delegates we have sent them. This action has been acquiesced in. We have voted to send delegates to the Congregational Orthodox Council. Young men here request us to send delegates to the Free Religious Association. It is perfectly legitimate to send such delegates.

Dr. Clarke.—It often happens that a motion is discussed not upon its merits, but upon some secret motive supposed to be in the mind of its originator. Circumstances have left upon the minds of some of our members that the Unitarians have not been perfectly fair towards them. Now this expression of sympathy would be a good thing, not only because true, but because it would tend to remove this feeling of unfairness, and go some way to prevent angry discussion. From the days of Theodore Parker to the present time, there is no man who has stood more firm against all opposition to Jesus. I have gone among the opposers, and said what I had to say to them. I can say to those who are in sympathy with the Free Religionists that I sympathize with every effort for religious freedom. There is nothing in their constitution opposing Christianity. Their platform is open to all. They neither defend nor oppose Christianity. There is no reason why I should not join. Our friends are wrong in saying that the Free Religious Association is opposed to Christianity.

Rev. S. R. Calthrop, of Syracuse, N. Y.—It fell to my lot to speak on the Free Religious platform. I went as a Christian invited to defend Christianity. I said this platform is not a Christian platform, and it ought not to be. In such case we should be the insulting parties. Was I to insult an intelligent and worthy Jew, who was upon the platform by my side? It is not an anti-Christian platform. If it was I should be the insulted party. It was free to all religions. Not a word was said against me or the cause that I represented. Mr. Abbot is a truth-speaking man. He has prejudices, and wanted to make that platform anti-Christian. But that was not done. If you believe truth is mighty and will prevail, then welcome all discussion. You will be welcomed upon the platform of the Free Religious Association, and can speak your mind there freely.

Rev. E. C. Towne.—I oppose this resolution for two reasons. One is that a large portion of those belonging to this Conference cannot reconcile their consciences to such action. The other is that the Free Religious Association is not in such a state of sympathy with this Conference as to expect sympathy. They are in a state of antagonism to this body. They have drifted to the position of Mr. Abbot. They are not in a position to care anything about such a resolution as has been offered.

Rev. A. F. Bailey, of Canastota, N. Y.—There is something to be taken into consideration in regard to the bearing of this matter upon the influence of this denomination. I am from Central New York, where there is not a single person that was originally a Unitarian. None there had read Channing till within a few years. On the one side are the Orthodox, on the other a heterogeneous mass, Spiritualists, materialists, those who agree with THE INDEX, and some who believe in Christ. We should stand in the position of a mutual friend of Christianity and Free Religion. I am a Christian, also a Free Religionist. A friend as squarely upon the Unitarian platform as myself has expressed the fear that you are about to lower the standard of freedom, and that your denomination is no longer to be the refuge of souls.

Rev. C. G. Ames thought a like scene to the present might take place in the Congregational Council when our delegates should present themselves. One class there may take the ground that we are not Christians, and object to fellowship with us. Does not the opinion in regard to the Free Religious Association that prevails here rest upon a wrong notion, upon a misunderstanding of its animus and purpose? The purpose deep in the heart of that Association is to find God's answer to the question, What is truth? I act in that body because it is consistent with my Christianity. The love of virtue is the love of God, says Channing. All men who love God and their neighbors, who seek truth and obey it, are worthy of Christian sympathy. I will take truth, even if I find it on heathen ground; and it is Christian wherever found. I want we should all be united in one family. I look towards the Orthodox on one side, and to the Free Religionists on the other. I am grieved at a want of justice towards the latter when they are just as near to us as the Orthodox. I would not have this Conference take the ground that all the truth and all the good are in Christianity. I will not believe there is any antagonism between any truth or good and Christianity. I will accept neither Mr. Abbot's nor Mr. Potter's definition of Christianity. We must all unite in the spirit.

Rev. Robert Collyer.—There is one word it occurs to me to say. I wonder how it will strike our Free Religious friends to have a vote like this sent them, that comes out of our body like pulling teeth. Let it pass over two years, and see if the Free Religious Association can get along without our sympathy. A resolution of sympathy should be loving and tender. Who are these people we are talking about? There are among them some of the finest, sweetest men and women with whom we have acquaintance. I think in the spiritual state of existence Jesus will say to these who never made any sort of point about him that they are among the very nearest to him. We should recognize in these men and women high and noble souls who are seeking to live out the truth. These men have gone out beyond our boundaries; but they are good fellows, ever noble and beautiful. In the name of Jesus, of the God who made us, let us send this vote of sympathy to them.

Dr. Bellows.—I regret that this resolution has been introduced into this assembly. Members had a right to introduce it; but the wisdom, expediency, policy, of introducing it is another thing. There is a responsibility resting upon us in regard to promoting these mere theories of dainty and delicate minds. We may have sympathy with men and women, but this Association would be foolish to express sympathy with what we find good in their purposes, when we should be sure to be misunderstood. I should like to put my foot upon this whole movement. When there is so much more with which we disagree, why should we go out of our way to express our sympathy with what is good in a movement whose general purposes we disown? I admire a man with a Christian spirit even though he rejects Christianity. Perish my tongue before I condemn such a man, or depreciate his spirit because it has not a Christian label. I will not express my sympathy with a movement which reflects upon the noble men and women who have built up our denomination from the purest of motives; nor would I by such an act cast a direct reflection upon the largeness of our own freedom. It would be admitting that we are associated with a body that denies men their religious freedom. Why should we placard ourselves with infirmity and defect, as if there could be a larger liberty than we enjoy? We do not profess that our religion, that the religion of Jesus, can stand in the way of any intellectual or religious freedom. We say rather that Jesus himself is the very inspiration of science and of liberty. Had it not been for the protection that his religion has thrown about the minds and hearts of men, we should be without those scientific attainments which are now our boast. I was exceedingly sorry that the Unitarian Association was compelled to take such action as would cut off Mr. Potter's name from the Year Book. I will not myself stand watching to keep away any from our enclosure, slight as are our barriers to keep out intruders. But it would be of the nature of an outrage to the average mind of the Unitarian body to pass such a resolution as is now before us, which could produce only a most uncomfortable feeling in three-fourths of the members of the Unitarian body.

Rev. Charles Noyes, of Cincinnati, was willing that all who entertained a square opinion upon the subject before us should express it. He would go counter to that intense feeling in regard to the right or wrong involved. This Conference was a body without authority. Is my parish to be excited because I happen to vote one way or another? I speak for myself. My society might have sent two delegates who are heartily in sympathy with the Free Religious Association. All the other societies might have happened to do the same thing. Then this would have been a meeting of the Free Religious Association instead of a meeting of the Unitarian body. It would have been a mere accident. The vote upon this question, whatever it may be, does not carry the burden some seem to think. It will only express the opinion of individuals, and not that of the body. Without any excitement, in brotherly love, let us vote this matter up, or vote it down. What does it amount to? So many voted to express their sympathy, so many not. I may sympathize with a man and not with his opinions. Never can I refuse my sympathy with every conscientious effort to build up the kingdom of God.

On motion of Gov. Padelford, the whole subject was laid upon the table by a decisive vote. . . .

The Business Committee reported back the resolution of Dr. Bellows, with the recommendation that it pass. It was as follows:—

"Resolved, That this Conference heartily endorses the action of its officers in inviting to be present with us the church at New Bedford, by its pastor and lay delegates, and wishes its general spirit to be interpreted by this particular action."

Mr. Doyle, of the Committee, dissented. He was against the resolution. He should vote against fellowship with men who renounced Christianity, first, last, and always.

Gov. Padelford thought the resolution ought not to pass.

Mr. Doyle.—I wish to ask the Secretary if the society in Florence was invited.

The Secretary.—No; because it is not a Unitarian society.

Mr. Doyle.—Was the Rev. O. B. Frothingham's society?

The Secretary.—If it is in the list of Unitarian societies in the Year Book it was.

Rev. George Batchelor, the Secretary, continued. I have no interest whatever in the passage of this resolution. It is swallowing the camel before looking out for the gnat. He would not send such a resolution to one with whom we had just said we would have no fellowship. Mr. Potter's name has been excluded from the Year Book; and so we have the anomaly of a Unitarian church with a minister not Unitarian.

Mr. Batchelor being asked to whom he addressed the letters of invitation, replied, To the pastors as represented in the last Year Book; if there was no pastor, to a delegate attending the last Conference; if neither pastor nor delegate, to the church under its corporate name.

Rev. R. R. Shippen.—I regret that we are drawn into the old Year Book question. The Year Book has two lists: one, a list of Unitarian ministers; the other, a list of Unitarian churches with their pastors, whoever these pastors may be. Every church has a right to choose its own ministers; and we have Unitarian churches with Universalist ministers, or ministers of any other denomination. The New Bedford church is on this list of Unitarian churches, and has as much right to an invitation to this Conference as any other church. It would seem to be superfluous to thank the Council for doing its duty.

On motion of G. Washington Warren, the resolution was laid upon the table.

Rev. C. W. Buck, of Portland, Me.—Twice this Conference has been invited to put one foot forward, and twice has failed. He could not be satisfied to go home to his people without making a third attempt. He hoped the Conference would abandon this standstill position. He closed with a resolution, as follows, which went to the Business Committee:—

WHEREAS, This Conference has heretofore repeatedly affirmed its devotion to the Christian faith; and whereas the word Christian is a word of indefinite meaning, by reason of which indefiniteness misunderstandings and embarrassments have arisen, and are likely to arise; therefore, in order to define more clearly the idea of this Conference, and to promote fellowship among its members,

"Resolved, That the words "Christian" and "Christianity" refer in the intent of this Conference not to creed, or to ceremony, or to profession, but to righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Spirit."

Mr. Doyle inquired of the Chairman if it was imperative upon the Committee to report back every resolution that was referred to them.

The Chairman replied that the very object of referring to the Business Committee was that they might decide whether the subject proposed was of importance enough to come before the Conference to the exclusion of other business, or a proper one to come before the Conference at all. Much more business is always proposed than can be attended to. At the last Conference there were nearly forty propositions in the hands of the Business Committee that were not reported upon.

IT WAS ONCE ruled in an action for libel, brought by a clergyman against a pamphleteer, that to call a lawyer a d——d fool was actionable, because nobody could be a d——d fool without being a bad lawyer; but that the same term applied to a clergyman was not actionable, since a man might be a d——d fool and yet be a very good parson.

THE SARATOGA CONFERENCE.

The action of the Conference which is likely to occasion most comment was with reference to our relations to the Trinitarian Congregationalists and Free Religionists. The resolution in favor of sending a committee to New Haven was not passed without a struggle, and earnest and forcible speeches were made against it. It was thought by some that our Trinitarian brethren must be already sufficiently assured of our readiness to regard them with sympathy and fellowship whenever they, as a body, shall give us any reason to suppose that our sympathy and fellowship are desired. Such strong statements of the fraternal spirit of leading Trinitarian Congregationalists were made as to overcome the scruples of the majority on the score of self-respect, and the committee appointed,—Rev. Dr. Rufus Ellis, Rev. E. E. Hale, and Dorman B. Eaton, Esq.,—can hardly fail to have a courteous reception.

The resolution in favor of sending a committee to assure the Free Religionists of our good wishes and our sympathy in their endeavor to promote the cause of religious liberty was defeated by an overwhelming vote; but although the minority was a very small one, numerically, it contained some of our ablest and most distinguished ministers. They made earnest and eloquent appeals in behalf of extending our sympathy in both directions, but they spoke in vain. The great majority of our ministers, and almost all our laymen, were unwilling to send a committee to the Free Religionists, for many reasons. Some were opposed because the Free Religionists, as a body, are not engaged in any religious or humane work, do not even affirm the existence of a God, or the immortality of the soul. Others voted to lay the motion on the table, because whatever the Free Religionists might be theoretically, they were practically anti-Unitarian and anti-Christian. It was thought that their alleged theological neutrality was not a fact. Although Mr. Abbot impeached Christianity, the Free Religionists raised a large fund to sustain his paper, while the leaders of the movement became contributing editors. THE INDEX appears fifty-two times a year, and the Free Religious Association meets but once. Thus the paper has made a much wider and deeper impression than the platform, and the Free Religionists are generally known and judged by their organ. There was no personal hostility towards individual Free Religionists, and no objection to the organization of a philosophical club, at meetings of which all questions should be open questions; but the majority wished to reserve formal expressions of their sympathy for positively religious and Christian denominations, and they could neither be reasoned nor persuaded out of this position. Still they were not illiberal Christians, for they heard Messrs. Ames and Calthrop with delight, and there was not a whisper of opposition to electing as officers Christians of the most liberal and progressive type. Radical Christians were just as much welcomed and honored in the Conference as conservative Christians, and no one questioned the right of members of either class to join any heterodox or Orthodox club if they desired to do so. It was only a determination on the part of representatives of Christian churches to restrict expressions of the sympathy of the Conference to organizations of religious faith and Christian confession.—Christian Register.

SOME TIME ago the Amherst students honored Daniel Pratt, the Great American Traveller, with the title of "C. O. D." That illustrious man has now been still further complimented by the Dartmouth boys who recently nominated him for the presidency in 1876, and gave him the honorary degree of "S. T.—1860—X."

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING OCTOBER 3.

M. Hellman, $4.75; Geo. A. Hamilton, $3; Eliza S. Leggett, $5.25; J. H. Platt, $5.25; S. M. Whistler, $1; W. Wallace, 15 cents; John W. Plumlee, $1; Joseph Trounstein, $6; A. Trounstein, $6; C. B. Crandall, $2.25; N. Davis, $1; J. S. Rogers, $3; E. P. Phillips, $4; P. Lenk, $2.25; W. H. Peck, $5.25; D. K. Hall, $1.75; A. T. Foss, $3.75; George Chamberlin, $3.75; Charles Hazeltine, $1; G. W. Bachelder, $3; Jay Hvatt, $3; C. B. Boyce, $5; S. J. Logan, $3; J. A. Marshall, $2.75; A. Gender, $2.25; Mrs. A. B. Rogers, $1.50; Mrs. F. W. Titus, $4; G. Marshall, $1; R. G. Macgill, $3; N. Little, Jr., $3; John Gillis, $2; E. R. Simons, $2.25; J. H. Deering, $3; Gabrielle Bach, $3; S. O. Kellogg, $5; S. H. Seaman, $2.25; W. L. Elyria, $2; Norman Johnson, $1; H. M. Erskine, $2.25; E. W. Blakeley, $3; J. K. Wright, $1; C. A. Hayden, $1.50; B. Gardner, $3; Aug. Brentano, $6.30; G. H. Foster, 80 cents; J. J. French, 20 cents; D. C. Hawxhurst, 40 cents; G. H. Barton, 25 cents; F. A. Angell, 25 cents; W. C. Tenney, 20 cents; John Wilson, 25 cents; A. W. Kelsey, 25 cents; Charles Nash, $100; S. F. Libby, 25 cents; Lee's Bazaar, $1.35; C. H. Horsch, 60 cents; J. H. Clifford, 50 cents; S. Floerschim, 25 cents; C. H. Lee, 25 cents; A. H. French, 25 cents; J. Clifford, 20 cents; H. E. Prince, 20 cents; J. T. Dickens, 25 cents; J. A. Newbold, 25 cents; J. A. J. Perkins, 25 cents; W. J. Potter, 25 cents; H. H. Bowers, $3; C. Smith, $1.80; Alban Andrén, $3; Levi Abbot, $3; W. H. Knapp, $3; John H. Nichols, $3; W. J. Barnes, $2; L. P. Babb, $3; Charles Goodspeed, $5; A. L. Grinnell, $1.50; F. E. Baker, $1.50; C. L. Ehrenfeld, $3; R. G. Fell, $1; E. Naumberg, $5.50.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—Postage on THE INDEX is five cents per quarter, dating from receipt of the first number, payable in advance at the place of delivery.

N. B.—When writing about a former remittance, always give the date of such remittance as exactly as possible.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY
BY
THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,
AT
NO. 1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

Toledo Office: No. 35 Monroe Street. Julius T. Frey, Agent and Clerk.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

Francis Ellingwood Abbot, ... Editor.
Abram Walter Stevens, ... Associate Editor.
Octavius Brooks Frothingham, Thomas Wentworth Higginson, William J. Potter, Richard P. Hallowell, William H. Spencer, Mrs. E. D. Cheney, Rev. Charles Voysey (England), Prof. Francis W. Newman (England), Editorial Contributors.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

BOSTON, OCTOBER 8, 1874.

THE INDEX will be sent to any name not now on our mail-list until January 1, 1876, on receipt of $3.00 in advance. Here is a chance to receive the paper for fifteen months at the price of twelve months. Please tell your friends and neighbors of this liberal offer, and help us to increase our circulation.

THE ILLINOIS Methodist Conference, lately in session at Mattoon, by a majority report of a special committee on the subject, have declared in favor of church taxation. This report is an able document signed by James Leaton and M. D. Hawes; and it does honor to their consciences and their intellects alike. At our earliest opportunity we mean to reproduce it in full.

THE ENGLISH Church Herald says that, "if Parliament created the Church of England," then it "created a damnable anti-Christian imposture;" meaning that the Church is an imposture unless Divinely created. Very likely; the Herald knows best about that. But when it is proved to everybody's satisfaction (as it will be) that the Church is a man-made institution, let it be remembered that it was not THE INDEX which called it an "imposture"—least of all an "anti-Christian" one. Whether the Church is an imposture or not, Christianity, and not anti-Christianity, must be responsible for it.

THE PROMINENCE of Petrarch among the "humanists," in Kaulbach's great cartoon of "The Era of the Reformation," reminds us of the letter written by Garibaldi to General Bordone for the celebration at Avignon of the fifth centenary of Petrarch's birth, on the twentieth of July last. "Petrarch, as much as Dante," wrote the old hero, "is certainly one of the most vigorous of the great pioneers who struck at the very foundation of the monstrous edifice of superstition, at a time when inquisitors of all orders roasted human flesh with as much ardor as could be shown by the anthropophagi of the Cannibal Islands."

OTHERS, as well as we, seem to have found Professor Tyndall's thought a little indeterminate on some fundamental points. The Nation says: "Exactly what kind of religion Mr. Tyndall thinks possible among people who believe not merely in the Copernican system but in the evolutionary theories of Mr. Herbert Spencer, and the discoveries of Darwin as to the origin of species, we cannot discover from his address; but the hints thrown out seem to point in the direction of a religion, not of belief, but of imaginative devotion, escaping belief to find a refuge in the contemplation of the eternal mystery of the universe. 'Man has never been, and he never will be, satisfied with the operations and products of the understanding alone; hence physical science cannot cover all the demands of his nature,' Mr. Tyndall says at the beginning of his lecture; and at the end he declares that he is willing to affirm religion to be a field 'for the noblest exercise of what, in contrast with the knowing faculties, may be called the creative faculties of man.' His suggestion as to the future of religion is not unlike some remarks more at length by Mr. Herbert Spencer, in one of his papers on sociology, which we noticed some time since, and, indeed, may be taken to represent an opinion very commonly held among a number of well-known scientific men, who recognize the insoluble and impenetrable mystery of existence, and, at the same time, qua men, devote themselves to the soluble and the penetrable."

UNITARIAN "SYMPATHIES."

The doings of the Unitarians at Saratoga, so far as relates to the Free Religious Association, may have sufficient interest for the majority of our readers to justify the republication of a portion of the report in another part of this paper, and a few remarks here.

Rev. James Freeman Clarke, who is one of the best of men and a noble representative of the best side of Unitarianism, tried to broaden the sympathies of his sect in two opposite directions at the same time. He moved that a committee of sympathy should be sent to the Orthodox Congregationalists in council at New Haven, and succeeded; but, when he moved that a similar committee should be sent to the Free Religious Association next May, he failed. The Conference is willing to fraternize with Orthodoxy, but not with Free Religion. In this it is simply true to its Christian colors. It could not without absurdity do otherwise. Although we heartily respond to the kind feelings which prompted the utterances at Saratoga in favor of sympathetic relations with the Free Religious Association, we must confess that we feel relieved that the resolution was voted down. It could not have meant anything at bottom; and it would have been impossible to accept it as meaning anything. Not that we doubt in the least the sincerity of those who desire to express their sympathy for the Free Religious Association. These men meant what they said; but if they really represented the sentiments of the whole Unitarian denomination, there might never have been any Free Religious Association to sympathize with. The plain truth, which the forward-looking men of the Unitarian Conference are slow to see and admit, is that, while individual Unitarians may sincerely sympathize with Free Religion, the Unitarian denomination does not and cannot do this. It is a question of principle that divides the Conference and the Association as organized bodies; and no sympathetic resolution can unite them. The Christian Union, which will be considered by some more impartial than THE INDEX, states the case with great clearness and force in its comments on this very subject: "The ground taken on both sides upon this question deserves attention. Dr. J. F. Clarke, certainly himself a Christian in as full and eminent a sense as any man in the denomination, favored the expression of sympathy with the Free Religionists, expressly on the ground—which all the speakers on this side seem to have taken—that the Free Religious Association was not hostile to Christianity; that it was open to its friends as well as its opponents; and that it represented only the principle of absolutely free inquiry for truth. But, in spite of this plea, and the able advocacy of Dr. Clarke, Edward E. Hale, Robert Collyer, Charles G. Ames, and others, the motion was emphatically rejected. It was rejected on the ground that in effect the weight of the Free Religionists was cast against Christianity, and that sympathy with them would be interpreted as lukewarmness toward Christianity. Thus, while equally warm and faithful friends of distinctive Christianity were found on both sides of the debate, the great majority of the Conference chose to emphasize their Christian faith in the most unmistakable manner. They said in effect: It is more important to declare that Unitarians are Christians than that they believe in freedom of inquiry."

That is the burden of all Unitarianism: it throws a pound to Christianity and a penny to freedom. Why not recognize the truth? The very sympathy now offered is neutralized by the assumption that accompanies it—that there is no necessary antagonism between Christianity and freedom, and therefore that the Free Religious Association cannot be hostile to Christianity. We must argue in precisely the opposite way—that there is a necessary antagonism between Christianity and freedom, and therefore that the Free Religious Association must be hostile to Christianity. This truth the people get at by a species of quick instinct which dissipates the labored mystifications of those who want them to be Christian and free at the same time. The Unitarian laity are wiser than their radical clergy in this matter. They know the unwisdom of playing fast and loose in practical matters, and, beginning to perceive that freedom is anti-Christian, they are coming (not very reluctantly, either) to give it up. The clergy must submit to this leadership, or lose their places; they may define and refine to their tongues' content, but Christian they have got to be on penalty of being cashiered, and they know it perfectly well. They may not object to this well-understood limitation of their liberty; they may persuade themselves that on the whole they rather like it; they may even be lost in wonder and amazement that any one can be so restive or unreasonable as to want to jump the fence they themselves venerate. But it is scarcely the thing to vote themselves in sympathy with those who have jumped all such fences, and are chiefly busy in helping others to jump them. If their sympathy were more than verbal or skin-deep, they would jump the fences too; and an expression of sympathy unaccompanied by this proof of its earnestness would be something for which we, at least, could not be honestly grateful, yet for which we should be expected to express gratitude. Sympathy is indeed a good thing; but sincerity is a better one. We are greatly relieved, therefore, that the Conference, having from the beginning planted itself on Christian ground, did not pretend to express sympathy for an Association which has from the beginning planted itself on the ground of freedom. We respect it all the more for refusing to be coaxed or persuaded into self-stultification, and can now heartily and sincerely extend to it such sympathy as we involuntarily feel for all strong conviction which leads to self-consistent action.

What is the real attitude of the Free Religious Association towards Christianity? The favorers of Dr. Clarke's resolution seem to consider it that of colorless neutrality; while its opponents seem to consider that this "alleged theological neutrality is not a fact." It is of some interest to know what the truth is in this matter.

First of all we must correct Mr. Calthrop's statement that "Mr. Abbot wanted to make that platform anti-Christian." We do not want to "make" it anything under heaven that it is not; we helped originally to make it what it is, and see no reason to change it. But we point to the Constitution of the Free Religious Association as it stands, and maintain that, although it does not so much as mention the words Christian or Christianity, this Constitution is as fundamentally anti-Christian as the Constitution of the United States is fundamentally anti-monarchical. It simply affirms, in a direct and unqualified manner, "that absolute freedom of thought and expression which is the natural right of every rational being." The application of this principle, broad and unlimited, it leaves to each individual member; it carefully refrains from making any special application of it to Christianity or Judaism or any other religion. So strongly do we approve this reticence, which is only respect for individual differences of opinion, that we should personally feel compelled to leave the Free Religious Association if it should insert an avowedly anti-Christian plank in its platform. Its sole business is to affirm unqualified liberty of thought in religion; and to let the irresistible corollaries of this principle gradually force their own way into individual minds. In the long run men will find out for themselves that Liberty is anti-Christianity; every individual or association that espouses liberty is set against Christianity by a power he or it cannot control. But if the Association should undertake to exclude any one who thought Christianity and liberty compatible, it would do a great wrong. Mr. Calthrop, for instance, thinks that he can be Christian and free too; he has a right to interpret for himself its Constitution; he is not conscious of any reason why he should not stand on that platform, and there is no reason, so long as that unconsciousness continues. But nevertheless it is logically certain that the ground of unlimited freedom is anti-Christian ground, whether men know it or not; and no Christian can consistently occupy it.

In our view of the matter, then, the Free Religious Association does not profess to hold neutral ground at all; for its Constitution professes no neutrality, and we have as good a right to interpret it as any other. We hold that neutrality between Christianity and freedom is an absolute impossibility; that there is no such thing as an "extra-Christian" position which is not also "anti-Christian;" and that the Association, being pledged to freedom, is thereby pledged against Christianity. Whoever disputes this construction of the Constitution can only make good his position by proving that Christianity and freedom are not hostile and antagonistic to each other; and the sooner this radical discussion is opened, the better. Not to submit to the Christian claim is to protest against it; the Free Religious Association, by ignoring it altogether in their Constitution, thereby make a protest against it which is perfectly intelligible to the world at large. The Unitarian Conference are right; whoever has joined the Free Religious Association under the impression that it is neutral in its attitude towards Christianity has made a great mistake, unless he can show that Christianity and liberty are compatible in idea and practice. A general clearing-up on this point would have just now a capital effect.

EGGS AND CRADLES.

I have little taste for continued controversy, and will simply say that I see no inconsistency in my two metaphors of eggs and cradles; though it is always hard to make an illustration express the exact truth. I think that we should use, with both cradles and eggs, just so much force as is necessary to clear ourselves from them; and that, having done this, we can generally employ ourselves better by living our own life than by stamping on the fragments.

T. W. H.

BREAKING THE SHELL.

When the chicken's beak has pecked a hole in the eggshell, it can put itself to no better use than to continue pecking till it has let the rest of the bird out, too. "Stamping on the fragments" suggests a rabies of wanton and aimless destructiveness to which no Anti-Christian within the circle of my acquaintance would for an instant plead guilty; but, seeing how closely immured in the calcareous prison of Christianity is still the great mass of my fellow-citizens, I think that the "smashing" process by which one has partially escaped should not be desisted from till all are freed. The race is a unit; whose liberty is fully won while his brothers are in bonds? That is indeed a noble exhortation: "Live your own life." Be it mine to have no life that is not Man's—no freedom while he is a slave—no ambition but to dedicate head, heart, and hand to shattering the fetters, viewless and unfelt as air, yet stronger than steel, that chain him down to captivity of soul! F. E. A.

ORGANIZATION.

THE INDEX often contains remarks of some severity, from editor and correspondents, on the alleged unwillingness of radicals to organize. As far as I have seen, the obstacle to organization among radicals seldom lies in indifference or indolence, but rather in the difficulty of finding a common ground of action, and an impression that, while this is the case, each will act more efficiently by himself.

I take it that, as a rule, organization is the strong point of conservatives, individual enthusiasm of radicals. The latter are like Esquimaux dogs, who may be driven with great success, if you attach each separately to the vehicle, but who usually tear each other in pieces if you harness them in the same traces. If the Free Religious Association, for instance, had attempted to do as much organizing as some have desired, it would have gone to pieces long ago. It has existed and grown stronger, because it fortunately attempted no more than the time was ripe for. And I have often noticed that those who are most strenuous for organization are often those who are least capable of it, because they are incapable of waiving a single point of their private creed, even in order to coöperate with others. Any organization requires a great deal of such waiving, but an organization of radicals most of all. Therefore the real obstacle to be removed is usually intellectual; it is necessary to discern and state this common ground; whoever busily engages himself in working out the principles at issue, and in keeping their application morally pure, is helping toward organization in the end. But premature organization of those who have not yet worked out clearly their common ground is apt to end in reaction and in a greater scattering than before. Such has at least been my observation.

T. W. H.

THE CHRISTIAN LIMIT.

The National Conference of Unitarian and other Christian Churches has claim for small consideration at the hands of THE INDEX. The action at Saratoga on the proposition to exchange friendly greeting with a conference of Free Religious men in another State was precisely what might have been expected from such a body. To some it seemed surprising that two men, Dr. Bellows and the excellent Seth Padelford, should have been able to overbear the influence of other men—such as Freeman Clarke, Robert Collyer, Edward Hale—whose weight of mind, wealth of influence, and earnestness of feeling were generously thrown on the other side. But it is evident that the mass of laity and clergy there were immovable under the force of any appeal or argument, and decided as they did on the strength of a stubborn conservatism that gave no reasons and listened to none. Had Dr. Bellows said nothing, and the champions of liberality said more, it may be doubted if the result could have been different. A dogged conviction, consisting in part, perhaps, of personal dislikes, and partly antipathies, but more probably of sectarian instincts, would have been more than a match for the glowing sentiment of the most eloquent men. This is said in no spirit of complaint or sarcasm. To us, not forgetting to thank the generous friends of the broadest fellowship, it seems that the laity were in the right, even though stupidly so, and our noble friends in the wrong, though generously and sympathetically so.

Could the vote of the Conference have been other than it was consistently with the fundamental principle of its Constitution? Could the fundamental principle of the Constitution be altered consistently with any kind of Christian confession? What would a vote of sympathy have implied? What margin is there for an enlargement of the platform on which the leaders of the Conference have taken their stand? If the question be merely one of names, there is nothing to be said. But the leaders of the opposition protest that the question is not one of names at all, but of cardinal ideas. The words "Christian," "Extra-Christian," "Anti-Christian," cover beliefs; and the beliefs cover verities of the utmost moment. Mr. Potter, as to his character, may be a lamb without spot, but as to his opinions he is a wolf. Now Christianity is still, as it ever has been, a system of opinions, pretty clearly defined; opinions which the Unitarians profess after their own manner to entertain. The Christian tradition is dear to them; the Christian dogma is precious. They have indeed refined on it till they have nearly refined it away; they have attenuated it till in parts it is no longer visible; they have diluted it till the original milk of the word has become imperceptible. They have strained its terms through the sieve of definition till their substance cannot be detected. Still, while they profess to hold the dogma, while they seriously imagine themselves to be the only people who comprehend it, while they are so infatuated as to suppose that their version of it is the pure development, the final perfection of its essence, instead of being, as it really is, its last vanishing point,—while they believe this, they are not to be blamed for their dogmatism. Nay; because, in Unitarianism, the Christian dogma tapers off into vacuity, retaining only the merest suspicion of the New Testament faith, and being the utmost possible attenuation of the grand theology that ruled Christendom for a thousand years, it is of the utmost importance that no further shadings should be attempted.

If the Unitarians went further, where would they go? The next step is Theism,—with a savor of sentiment from the New Testament, with a touch of mysticism from the Old Church, with a few tender names and associations from the religion of Romanism and Protestantism; but nevertheless Theism, as undisguised and unmistakable as that of Francis Newman or Chunder Sen. That is the next step out of Unitarianism, and it leads a hemisphere away from every postulate of Christian theology.

Now Theism is a word of terror to the uninstructed, such as the masses of the Unitarian laity are; and it is a word of abomination to the dogmatical, such as the common run of Unitarian ministers are. If the National Conference were to extend its fellowship, it must consent to be confounded with Theism; and to this neither the Conference nor the Theists should agree. Secretary Fox's blunder in writing to Mr. Potter was a providential one; and it has from the first been hard for me to see how the Unitarian body could have acted otherwise than as it did, in view of the reply that Mr. Potter gave. The vote excluding him from the number of Unitarian ministers, like the vote withholding expression of sympathy with the Free Religious Association, declared the Unitarians to be a Christian sect, which is the truth. That is what they are and are proud to be. Theists they are not, and do not wish to be thought. We hope their rights will henceforth be respected, and that they who discard the Christian system of theology, root and branch, and hold a larger faith, will no longer knock for admittance at that pasteboard door, or ask recognition from the ranks they have left. O. B. F.

LONDON LETTER.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Sir,—Is it true that Roman Catholicism is on the increase in America? I mean increasing in a greater ratio than other branches of the Christian religion. If this be the case, can you at all account for it on other grounds than the mere zeal and activity of the priests?

It seems to me that with the lessons of history before our eyes, we cannot safely ignore this inquiry, or without great peril to liberty and enlightenment allow such an encroachment to go on unresisted.

Toleration, of course, must not be tampered with. To every sect or church equal liberty must be granted, and so when I speak of resistance to Rome I confine myself strictly to those forms of opposition which are humane and legitimate.

Of this I may say more anon; at present I would invite your readers to consider on what grounds the Roman Catholic religion is more to be dreaded than any other form of Christianity, and why its progress should therefore be more jealously watched.

Now, so far as the dogmas of Rome are concerned, there is comparatively little to object to more than we object in general to the Christian religion. Rome only demands a little more credulity. She only adds a fourth person to the Trinity, and bids us trust in a pure and high-minded woman as much as in her son. Her dogmas of the need of salvation, the peril of endless damnation, the atonement of blood, intercession and mediation, differ but very little from those of the Anglican, Methodist, and Baptist communions.

True, she makes a little more demand on credulity and encourages graver superstition by her view of the sacraments—the dogma of transubstantiation requiring belief in perpetually recurring miracle. But this extra pinch of supernaturalism is only a bagatelle, which we cannot regard as a serious ground for placing the Church of Rome in a black catalogue by herself. Nay, we wonder that Protestants, having gulped so much and swallowed so many New Testament camels, should be so eager to strain out the gnats of Romish miracle.

Nor, as far as her public teaching goes, can we fairly accuse Rome of tending to immorality more than other Christian churches. If the usual Evangelical doctrines of atonement and imparted righteousness tend to antinomianism and immorality, the way in which these doctrines are taught authoritatively by Rome is far less coarse and demoralizing. In Dr. Möhler's Symbolism, the teaching of Rome contrasts most favorably with that of our little Bethels.

Take the Romanists on the one hand and Protestants on the other, there is hardly a pin to choose between them, as regards the foolishness of their superstitions or the worthlessness of their teaching. We must look elsewhere for anything to justify our peculiar hatred or dread of the Romish system.

And this, I think, is not far to seek, though it is very commonly overlooked. We find it in the personal relation between the individual member and the priest.

The priest demands, and the Church authorizes the priest to demand, absolute obedience from every child of the Church under his charge. In everything, great or small, at the absolute discretion of the priest, every man and woman must strictly obey his will.

In all else the Church of Rome is remarkably lax; "her yoke is easy and her burden is light." She regulates the amount of incredibles to be swallowed, by the intellectual digestion of each of her customers. She binds and looses at pleasure the bonds of moral restraint, requiring more virtue from the more virtuous and less from the morally weak.

But all her kind indulgence is reserved only for those who have earned it by an entire surrender of their wills to the dictation of the priest. There is only one thing she will not tolerate, and that is sin; and there is only one sin in her eyes: disobedience.

Defiance of her authority or rebellion against the dictates of the priest renders any one liable to eternal damnation. All manner of sin and blasphemy is freely forgiven, except the one unpardonable sin of self-will. A true Catholic, therefore, becomes a mere tool in the hands of the priest. He has no longer to concern himself with codes of morality, or to consult the whisperings of conscience. He has only to do exactly as he is bidden, whether it be what other men would call right or whether it be wrong. Nay, it must always be right, for the priest is the mouthpiece of God, and whatever he bids must be holy.

Who can wonder that under such a system, those who are hostile to it, or not under its protection, are in perpetual danger—danger to life and limb as well as to property and prospects in life? The only wonder is that the force of civilization should ever have had strength to overcome such a foe, or the wisdom to outwit its cunning.

This system, I venture to say, places the Church of Rome quite apart from the other branches of Christianity, and justifies our most vigorous onslaughts.

Such a system might have done good when men were more like brutes, and may even still be valuable for the negro and other races in the boyish stage of humanity; but for men and women of mature intellect to be thus tied hand and foot, yea, even tied in their thoughts and their hearts; to live, move, speak, think, and love as they are bidden by a mere fellowman who has the impudence to claim Divine authority for his interference—this is not to be patiently endured by any who care for the welfare of the human race, or prize the dignity of self-control.

Rome has of late been on her best behavior before the world; excepting a few cases of kidnapping (à la Mortara) and now and then a heavy draught of deadmen's shoes, she has not shocked public opinion very much. Her worst misdemeanors, namely, her malediction against science and its teachers, her anathemas against her rebellious sons in Germany and elsewhere, and her antique pilgrimages, have only made the world laugh. But the system on which her very life depends remains unchanged, and, though apparently slumbering at present, and not busy with rack and thumbscrew, with sword and stake, she can at any time reach out her hand and find these or equally deadly and efficacious weapons wherewith to smite her foes and to silence her accusers. Is she ashamed of the part, do you think? Or is she not a little afraid of frightening timid, and hesitating, and temporizing converts? Time will show.

Very truly yours,

CHARLES VOYSEY.

CAMDEN HOUSE, Dulwich, Sept. 12, 1874.

Communications.

N. B.—Correspondents must run the risk of typographical errors. The utmost care will be taken to avoid them; but hereafter no space will be spared to Errata.

N. B.—Articles for this department should be SHORT, and written only on one side of the sheet.

N. B.—Illegibly written articles stand a very poor chance of publication.

WHAT WAS SLAVERY?

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

There are signs that truth and argument have lost their power with the American people. The pulpit and the press play upon the popular mind like ventriloquists and performers in magic, until it may well be said, as in Hudibras:—

> "Doubtless the pleasure is as great
> Of being cheated as to cheat."

It has been so long,—grows more so, apparently, every day.

Long ago, the abolitionists of America proved the Christianity of the country the natural, pronounced, persistent foe of freedom, and especially the freedom of our millions of chattel slaves. James G. Birney was a slave-holder in Kentucky, a judge in one of its highest courts, stood at the head of elegant society, and was a ruling elder in the Presbyterian Church. Becoming deeply convinced of the great sin of holding men, women, and children as property, as goods and chattels, at loss of all earthly possessions and prospects, he emancipated his slaves, removed them to free States, provided for their employment and self-support, and afterwards removed to Ohio, only to suffer more severe persecution than even that from which he fled with his family out of Kentucky.

Judge Birney afterwards wrote and published a little work entitled: The American Church the Bulwark of American Slavery. Subsequently Stephen S. Foster took up a similar line of argument in a larger work entitled, The Brotherhood of Thieves; or, a True Picture of the American Church and Clergy. The latter ran through many editions, until more than twenty thousand copies were in circulation; and I never knew that one of its facts or statements was ever called in question. Successfully, they could not have been questioned. It was indeed slavery convicted by its own witnesses, they speaking for themselves without being subjected to a single cross question.

Mr. Birney's book, as far as it went, was precisely of the same character. And many others followed of similar quality; some even reaching to volumes of hundreds of pages.

But I will now submit a testimony to the atrociousness of the slave system from the land of whips and chains itself, and a clergyman's testimony, besides. In a former letter, I referred to Bishop Meade, of Virginia, as compiler of Sermons to Slaves and Slaveholders, by Rev. Thomas Bacon, formerly of Maryland. The volume is on my table, and the following are extracts from the sermons; perhaps too copious altogether for your short columns, but you can abridge of course to suit them. The whole would be but small part of what lies before me in this and another volume of similar import:—

"When people die, we know of but two places they have to go to, and one is heaven, the other hell. Now heaven is a place of great happiness, which God has prepared for all that are good, where they shall enjoy rest from their labors. And hell is a place of great torment and misery, where all wicked people will be shut up with the devil and other evil spirits, and be punished forever, because they will not serve God. If, therefore, we would have our souls saved by Christ, if we would escape hell and obtain heaven, we must set about doing what he requires of us; that is, to serve God. Your own poor circumstances in this life ought to put you particularly upon this, and taking care of your souls. . . . Almighty God hath been pleased to make you slaves here, and to give you nothing but labor and poverty in this world, which you are obliged to submit to, as it is his will that it should be so. And think within yourselves what a terrible thing it would be, after all your labors and sufferings in this life, to be turned into hell in the next life; and after wearing out your bodies in service here, to go into a far worse slavery when this is over, and your poor souls be delivered over into the possession of the devil, to become his slaves forever in hell, without any hope of ever getting free from it. If, therefore, you would be God's freemen in heaven, you must strive to be good and serve him here on earth. Your bodies, you know, are not your own; they are at the disposal of those you belong to; but your precious souls are still your own, which nothing can take from you, if it be not your own fault. Consider well, then, that if you lose your souls by leading idle, wicked lives here, you have got nothing by it in this world, and you have lost your all in the next. For your idleness and wickedness are generally found out, and your bodies suffer for it here; and what is far worse, if you do not repent and amend, your unhappy souls will suffer for it hereafter.

"Having thus shown you the chief duties you owe to your great Master in heaven, I now come to lay before you the duties you owe to your masters and mistresses here upon earth. And for this you have one general rule, that you ought always to carry in your minds, and that is, to do all service for them, as if you did it for God himself. Poor creatures! you little consider when you are idle and neglectful of your master's business, when you steal, and waste, and hurt any of their substance, when you are saucy and impudent, when you are telling them lies and deceiving them, or when you prove stubborn and sullen, and will not do the work you are set about without stripes and vexation,—you do not consider, I say, that what faults you are guilty of towards your masters and mistresses are faults done against God himself who hath set your masters and mistresses over you in his own stead, and expects that you will do for them just as you would do for him. And pray do not think that I want to deceive you, when I tell you that your masters and mistresses are God's overseers; and that if you are faulty towards them, God himself will punish you severely for it in the next world, unless you repent of it, and strive to make amends by your faithfulness and diligence for the time to come, for God himself hath declared the same.

"And in the first place, you are to be obedient and subject to your masters in all things. . . . And Christian ministers are commanded to 'exhort servants to be obedient unto their own masters, and to please them well in all things, not answering them again, or gainsaying.' . . . You are to be faithful and honest to your masters and mistresses, not purloining, or wasting their goods or substance, but showing all good fidelity in all things. . . . Do not your masters, under God, provide for you? And how shall they be able to do this, to feed and to clothe you, unless you take honest care of every thing that belongs to them? Remember that God requires this of you, and if you are not afraid of suffering for it here, you cannot escape the vengeance of Almighty God, who will judge between you and your masters, and make you pay severely, in the next world, for all the injustice you do them here. And though you could manage so cunningly as to escape the eyes and hands of man, yet think what a dreadful thing it is to fall into the hands of the living God, who is able to cast both soul and body into hell!" . . .

And again, on page 116:—

"'All things whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so unto them;' that is, do by all mankind just as you would desire they should do by you, if you were in their place, and they in yours.

"Now, to suit this rule to your particular circumstances; suppose you were masters and mistresses, and had servants under you, would you not desire that your servants should do their business faithfully and honestly, as well when your back was turned as while you were looking over them? Would you not expect that they should take notice of what you said to them? That they should behave themselves with respect towards you and yours, and be as careful of everything belonging to you as you would be yourselves? You are servants; do, therefore, as you would wish to be done by, and you will be both good servants to your masters, and good servants to God, who requires this of you, and will reward you well for it, if you do it for the sake of conscience, in obedience to his commands. . . . Take care that you do not fret, or murmur, or grumble at your condition; for this will not only make your life uneasy, but will greatly offend Almighty God. Consider that it is not yourselves, it is not the people you belong to, it is not the men that have brought you to it, but it is the will of God who hath by his providence made you servants, because, no doubt, he knew that condition would be best for you in this world, and help you the better towards heaven, if you would but do your duty in it. So that any discontent at your not being free, or rich, or great, as you see some others, is quarrelling with your heavenly Master, and finding fault with God himself. . . . There is only one circumstance which may appear grievous that I shall now take notice of, and that is CORRECTION.

"Now, when correction is given you, you either deserve it, or you do not deserve it. But whether you really deserve it or not, it is your duty, and Almighty God requires, that you bear it patiently. You may, perhaps, think that this is hard doctrine, but if you consider it right, you must needs think otherwise of it. Suppose, then, that you deserve correction, you cannot but say that it is just and right you should meet with it. Suppose you do not, or at least you do not deserve so much or so severe a correction for the fault you have committed, you perhaps have escaped a great many more, and are at least paid for all. Or suppose you are quite innocent of what is laid to your charge, and suffer wrongfully in that particular thing, is it not possible you may have done some other bad thing which was never discovered, and that Almighty God who saw you doing it would not let you escape without punishment one time or another? And ought you not in such a case to give glory to him, and be thankful that he would rather punish you in this life for your wickedness than destroy your souls for it in the next life? But suppose that even this was not the case (a case hardly to be imagined), and that you have by no means, known or unknown, deserved the correction you suffered, there is this great comfort in it, that if you bear it patiently, and leave your cause in the hands of God, he will reward you for it in heaven, and the punishment you suffer unjustly here shall turn to your exceeding great glory hereafter."

Such was, such is, American Christianity. Anti-slavery ministers were expelled from associations, conferences, and presbyteries, as well as pulpits, for refusing to accept it as Divine, God-given, God-approved. And multitudes of abolitionists were excommunicated from their churches for the same offence, when such expulsions were held to be exclusion from heaven; and such exclusion from heaven was of course to be eternal imprisonment in deeps of hell!

PARKER PILLSBURY.

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 26, 1874.

THE RIGHT AND WRONG OF "PROHIBITION:"

A REPLY TO MR. HARRY HOOVER.

MY DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

Although I believe it a mistaken "love of freedom" when liberals now and then oppose a compulsory school-law, yet I will find no fault with them; for I believe their opposition is a legitimate result of their liberalism, or radicalism, the natural offspring of their "love of freedom," or jealousy of "individual rights." Nor can I blame them for favoring or advocating a prohibitory liquor law, assuming, as I must, that their philanthropic or moral aspirations find such a law desirable, because, as they believe, beneficial; always provided, however, they act upon convictions free from prejudices and fanaticism, and allow an honest opponent an equal liberty in regard to his own views and convictions. But I can have little charity for such narrow-minded, fanatical letters as the last INDEX (August 27) brought us from W. C. Moore, John W. Higgins, and others. I like criticism by argument; but I abhor the abuse of an honest opponent by fanaticism and bigotry. If most letters and articles by prohibitionists are generally characterized by these latter, the worse for prohibition.

But there are, also, candor compels me to admit, pleasant exceptions. One such creditably exceptional letter appeared in THE INDEX of August 6, from the pen of Mr. Harry Hoover. Enthusiastic prohibitionist as he, too, is, his whole article is, nevertheless, written in the most dispassionate manner; his criticism of the previous articles of Messrs. Einstein, Frothingham, Underwood, and your own remarks, is fair and argumentative without the least abuse. He deserved, then, a kind answer and a reply in the same friendly spirit, even if he had not challenged one at the end of his article, saying, "Will some of you gentlemen 'rise and explain'?"

Let this, Mr. Editor, be my excuse for sending you again an article on the old subject of temperance. As your recent lecture answers and refutes most of Mr. Hoover's arguments, I will limit myself to such points as your lecture did not touch.

"Drinking liquor may be a vice," says Mr. Hoover, "but selling it for gain is a crime." This is a great, a fundamental, mistake of Mr. Hoover's; one, however, which he shares in common with other prohibition advocates. The drinking of liquor is no more a vice than is the drinking of tea, coffee, or even of water; hence selling liquor can be no crime, be it sold for gain or otherwise. It is but the degrading and brutalizing oneself consequent to drinking to excess, or the becoming a slave to the passion of drinking, that constitutes the vice. "Ah," I hear the prohibitionist exclaim here, "that is just what makes me oppose liquor-drinking, and that makes the selling of it a crime; for if there were no liquor and no one to sell it, there would be no degrading and no brutalizing oneself by it." Not so fast, Mr. Prohibitionist. You, no doubt, will admit, that it is not the liquor per se that you oppose, nor yet altogether the drinking of it, but the possible, or, as you probably would insist to have it, the inevitable, consequences of it. Very well; be it so. But have you also considered what, if you carry out your principle, preventing drunkenness by prohibiting liquor so that no one can have it, would become of man's morality? Have you ever considered that it is not the forced abstinence from liquor, but the self-imposed denial of what the grosser passions demand, that raises man above the animal, makes him a moral being? And would you not, by your prohibitory principle, weaken or destroy this precious moral sense of man? Suppose, then, you act in all other things analogically, thoroughly, consistently, on this principle; must it not necessarily lead to "prohibition" of a man himself? For you certainly will not deny that the sexual passions are neither less general nor less destructive to some individuals than liquor is to some. Now suppose, further, that you act with regard to these passions as you propose to act with regard to the passion for liquor; you might prevent much more certainly all the evil consequences of the sexual passions than you ever can the alleged evils of liquor-drinking; but what would be gained? Would you, even if you could, prohibit, i.e., eradicate, these passions? Or would you prohibit all satisfaction of sexual passions because some individuals abuse them? Perhaps you will call this illustration extravagant; though I think it quite pertinent. But even if this is extravagant, it is by no means the only one that can be adduced. The evil results of luxury, fashion, and extravagance of all sorts, are as frequent and ruinous to families and individuals as are even the excesses of liquor-drinking; nay, probably much more so, because more universal. Why, then, demand prohibition for the one, and not for the other?

Pure grape wine and lager beer are as much under the bane of prohibitionists as liquor, and, if they could have their way, equally to be prohibited. Practical experience, however, proves conclusively that the former kinds of drinks are (of course, excess excepted) not only harmless, but decidedly beneficial, healthful, nourishing, and strength-giving. Any intelligent observer may notice more vitality and energy among the inhabitants of the wine-growing portions of France and Germany than in the countries where they raise no wine, and where it, consequently, is scarcer and dearer, and hence less frequently drank. It is likewise a notorious fact, proverbial in Germany, and more especially in that paradise of beer-drinkers, Bavaria, that brewers and coopers, the two chief beer-consuming classes, are also the strongest men. It must, then, be clear to every one who is not blinded by prejudices, that wine and beer are good and beneficial, and cannot be classed with liquor, albeit they, too, contain some alcohol, and hence may become intoxicating. Another, and a very strong proof, too, of this is the witness, I may almost say the universal witness, of American travellers, who generally return entirely cured of their prejudices, and advocates of wine and beer-drinking. The manner of drinking abroad, and its consequences, may, it is true, contribute not a little to convert these American travellers. This manner of drinking is a much more important point than the majority of Americans are aware of, or is generally allowed by them; yet it is proof patent that no prohibitory law, but society alone, can and must abate the evils of intemperance. No, Mr. Editor, "prohibitory laws" will never do it; if it ever shall be done, it must be done by society, by regulating drinking, and not by prohibiting it; by frowning it down, and not by fining it pecuniarily. But this is a subject that requires an independent article to do it justice, so I will not pursue it any further.

"Moral persuasion is a powerful lever in the regeneration of mankind," admits Mr. Hoover himself in his article; but, as if afraid of having admitted too much, he immediately adds, "but it is not of universal application." And why not, pray? What could hinder its universal application? Was the "temperance" movement less effective forty or fifty years ago than now, and did it not do incomparably more good when it was carried on on the "moral persuasion principle" (the so-called "Washingtonian plan") alone? But perhaps Mr. Hoover will, with the prohibitionists generally, deny this, and claim that there are "some individuals" not amenable to moral suasion. Yet what but a wrongly constituted society and unspeakable social wrongs have reduced these individuals to their "lost condition"? Let society do its duty by bettering their condition materially, intellectually, morally, socially, by remedying or destroying the causes that made it a "sad necessity" for them to seek the cup that brings forgetfulness of their wrongs and sufferings; and the demand for prohibition will be heard no more.

MORRIS EINSTEIN.

TITUSVILLE, Pa., Sept. 3, 1874.

"PATRIOTIC SONS OF AMERICA."

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Dear Sir,—In accordance with your request that some one would give you "further information concerning this order," I find in the Camp News for September that this patriotic order was first organized in Philadelphia in 1847. Prior to the rebellion, its organization was very imperfect, its progress slow, its ramifications extending but little beyond the Middle States; and, when the war of the rebellion opened, its organization was suspended, owing to the general enlistment of its members. In 1866, its reorganization was effected on a more substantial basis, since which time it has steadily increased, and now numbers a membership of 26,000 or more.

Its objects may thus be stated:—

1.—The inculcation of pure American principles.

2.—Opposition to foreign interference with State interests in the United States of America.

3.—The cultivation of a fraternal and brotherly love.

4.—The preservation of the Constitution of the United States, and the propagation of free education.

The following is a preamble of the order:—

"WHEREAS, The experience of all ages and all countries distinctly shows that popular liberty—born amid the din of battle, baptized in patriotic blood, and rocked by the rude storms of civil strife—demands for its preservation against the rage of party spirit, the wiles of ambition, and the stern arm of power, the undivided love of all her votaries, and the firm determination of all her friends, in an eternal struggle with her foes; the history of the world most painfully proves that it is the business of one generation to sow the seed, of which another reaps the harvest, be it of grain or tares, of good or evil:

"Now, therefore, we, the undersigned, Sons of America—children of its soil, reared beneath the shadow of its flag, loving it as none other can love, knowing it as none other can know, and having an interest in its future welfare, nearer, truer, deeper than all mankind besides,—do hereby associate ourselves into an order, for the purpose of maturing ourselves in the knowledge and encouraging each other in the practice of our rights and duties as citizens of a country in which we are called to exercise among our fellow-men the common rights of sovereignty; in which act of association we severally pledge ourselves to the observance and support of the laws of the land and regulations of this body, as becomes the sons of freemen, willing to submit to the restraints of social order, and acknowledge no other bonds but those of duty to our God, our country, and ourselves."

The following qualifications for membership are required:—

"No person shall be entitled to membership in the order except he be of good moral character, eighteen years of age, a believer in the existence of a Supreme Being as the creator and preserver of the universe, born on the soil or within the jurisdiction of the United States, in favor of free education, opposed to any union of Church and State, and to the interference of any foreign power, directly or indirectly, in the affairs of this government."

It might be urged that this order is proscripttve in its exclusiveness; but they claim this right for the sake of peace and harmony in their ranks. Camps can be beneficial or not, just as they may decide. They have distinctive regalia—sashes of red, white, and blue, studded with stars in imitation of our country's banner.

They say: "Understanding this, seeing how fast our great sea-board cities, and through them our legislative bodies, national and State, are becoming factional, sectarian, and anti-American, will not all true Americans hasten to join our ranks, and to start camps in sections not now tenanted by the order? To this, and with this appeal, your influence is asked in the cause."

I am not, my dear sir, a member of this order; but in so far as I know, it is on the side of liberty. In conversation with the orator of the day at the picnic alluded to in THE INDEX of September 17, I was informed that they, as a body of American citizens, were closely watching the organization of Romanism in its attempts to undermine liberty, etc. I asked him if their order would be ready to defend freedom if assailed by Protestants. To this he said: "We certainly would." I asked him if he was familiar with the Religious Amendment Movement, and what he thought of it. He replied that he condemned it; and, as an order, they were bound to be true to the principles of freedom as guaranteed us in the United States Constitution. I would here say that the gentleman in question is a Christian and church member. In conversation with a number of the members of the order here, I find that they are opposed to the exemption of ecclesiastical property from taxation. The camp organized in this village, about a year ago, now numbers about eighty members. The Camp News is the organ of this order, published by Henry J. Stager, Box 2273 P.O., Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. Any one wishing further information might address the editor as above, or the national president, Emmor H. Lee, Esq., Third and Linden Streets, Camden, N.J.

S. M. WHISTLER, M.D.

NEW KINGSTON, Pa., Sept. 23, 1874.

THE "A NO. 1" SIN.

A short time since I saw the statement in one of the daily papers, that Ann Eliza Young, the exnineteenth wife of the Mormon Prophet, when asked how control was retained over the women of Utah to keep them in such an abject and repulsive condition of servitude, replied that from their earliest childhood they are taught that such is the will of God, and that to doubt, or question, or discuss the matter is the most heinous of sins! The whole Christian world is ready to stand aghast in horror at such tyranny; but this method of coercion is by no means new or peculiar to Mormonism. It is as old as priestcraft, and those who enjoy the "light" and "freedom" of Christianity are not entirely free from its power.

To illustrate, allow me to recall the following words from the great London preacher, Spurgeon: "Oh! sirs, believe me, could you roll all sins into one mass—could you take murder, and blasphemy, and lust, adultery, and fornication, and everything that is vile, and unite them all into one vast globe of black corruption, they would not equal even then the sin of unbelief. This is the monarch sin, the quintessence of guilt; the mixture of the venom of all crimes; the dregs of the wine of Gomorrah; it is the A 1 sin, the masterpiece of Satan, the chief work of the devil."

In this connection, let me relate a little story, the truth of which I can vouch for, having been an eye witness:—

In the little town of A——, in the western part of Massachusetts, an effort was made a few winters since, by a zealous few, to start and organize a church which should be sound in the doctrine that total immersion is the true method of baptism. As those holding these views were in a small minority, it of course became necessary first to recruit their ranks. Accordingly a hall was engaged, and a course of high-pressure revival meetings inaugurated. These having been kept up through the winter evenings, it was found, when spring approached, that their efforts had been rewarded by a goodly number of converted sinners, to say nothing of the capture of a few stray sheep from neighboring folds. When the long evenings began to wane, however, the religious fervor began to cool correspondingly, until at last it became necessary that something should be done to get the new converts committed, before the "Holy Spirit" should withdraw its influence entirely. Accordingly it was decided to meet on a certain Sunday at a beautiful little lake near the village, and administer to them the rite of baptism.

At the appointed time a large concourse of people gathered on the banks of the lake, as it was a novel sight in those parts. The air was chilly, the hill-tops were yet dotted with snowbanks, and the waters were fearfully cold; but the emergency was great and the ceremony went on. One by one the shivering devotees were led into the lake to a sufficient depth, and then solemnly plunged into the icy water by the officiating clergyman, who meanwhile pronounced the formula of the ceremony. Several had thus passed the ordeal with no very serious difficulty, when a young lady after wading to quite a depth became suddenly affected. The chilling waters had evidently so checked the circulation in her limbs as to cause a rush of blood to her head, and amid gasps and cries she came near going into convulsions. A scene of confusion began on the bank, and a rush to the rescue would probably have soon been made, had it not been for the remarkable presence of mind of the clergyman, who, comprehending the situation, dashed water upon her head until circulation was partially restored. The remainder of the ceremony was soon performed, and the wretched and frightened victim borne away in an exhausted condition by her friends; when the minister turned to the audience and insulted their intelligence in a little speech substantially as follows:—

"My friends, as many of you may never have witnessed the ceremony of baptism before, this may seem strange to you; but, I assure you, it is no uncommon thing for persons to be thus affected, while in a great excess of joy."

If this be not superstition and priestcraft, what is?

Q.

CARLYLE.

MR. ABBOT:—

While not wishing to interfere in any manner in the controversy between Mr. Smith and yourself on "Woman's Right to the Suffrage," I cannot refrain from noticing what I regard as a somewhat singular assumption in your reply. In paragraph five you state: "We cannot admit that 'the power to rule best is a divine right to rule, whether the sovereign be king or people.' That smacks too much of Carlyle, who is no true democrat."

Is the Carlyle flavor the reason why it cannot be admitted? Suppose it does "smack too much of Carlyle," and that he is "no true democrat," is democracy so unquestionably God-given that "it is necessary to-day" to regard it with the same reverent awe and trust that we have been taught to yield to Christianity? Is democracy such an unquestionable gospel that it were better, "if need be, to go down with it to the bottom," than to tolerate the divine right of the best rule?

Carlyle says: "One thing I will remind you of, that the essence and outcome of all religions, creeds, and liturgies whatsoever is, to do one's work in a faithful manner." I know of no work written by Carlyle in which this sentiment does not "smack" so strongly as to constitute the basis of his argument, and notably so even in his most "anti"-democratic writings.

Please understand I am not attacking democracy so much as the apparent assumption by you that it must not be attacked, even if we "die."

If Carlyle were better read, and a tithe of his horror of "mendacities and unveracities" could be infused into human hearts, I believe it would far more benefit the race than any extension of suffrage; "that is to say," to quote again from Carlyle, "the calling in of new supplies of blockheadism, gullibility, bribability, amenability to beer and balderdash, by way of amending the woes we have had from our previous supplies of that bad article."

Whether it is more "necessary to-day to adhere inflexibly to the equal rights of mankind" than to their welfare and happiness, I think admits of question, however strongly the statement "smacks of Carlyle."

Yours truly, L.

[Our caustic correspondent is not wont to read THE INDEX so carelessly as in this case. He seems to infer we have no admiration for Carlyle because we dislike some things in him. Besides the gospel of "faithful work" (which is a most true one, and greatly needs disciples to-day), Carlyle has also another gospel of contempt for the weak and the simple, as if they were the natural-born subjects of the strong and the wise. Does "L." approve this latter gospel? If so, it needs a direct defence from him. Strong or weak, wise or simple, rich or poor, white or black, male or female, no one has an inalienable right to rule another. "L.'s" last paragraph above makes a false issue. Not welfare and happiness versus equal rights, but welfare and happiness through equal rights.—ED.]

A LADY and gentleman of Troy, N.Y., whose connubial bliss is perfect in everything save the presence of children around the domestic fireside, were examining some illuminated mottoes in a bookstore the other day, when the wife picked out one bearing these words: "God bless our home." The husband thought that very good, but still not exactly what they wanted. Looking a little further he picked up this one: "Suffer little children to come unto me."

"PLEASE, papa, give me some of the Lord's prayer meat." "The Lord's prayer meat?" queried the father, with about equal proportions of exclamation and interrogation in his voice, while curious glances were exchanged all round the table. "Isn't it 'liver us from evil?'" There was no gainsaying the honest little face that backed the petition, and "Lord's prayer meat" passed in among the traditions of the family. —Independent.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12	Insertions,	10c per line.
" 13 " 25	"	8	"	"
" 26 " 51	"	6	"	"
" 52	"	5	"	"

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.

TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,

has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, assisted by ABRAM W. STEVENS, with the following list of ditorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
THOMAS W. HIGGINSON, Newport, R.I.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 4.

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

ASSOCIATE EDITOR:

ABRAM WALTER STEVENS.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
T. W. HIGGINSON, Newport, R.I.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
F. W. NEWMAN, England.
CHARLES VOYSEY, England.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS,

OF THE

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. Abbot, D. A. Wasson, T. W. Higginson, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. Wasson on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. Abbot, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. Wasson on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. Abbot on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age;" an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. Higginson on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potier on "Religion Old and New in India;" also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonneschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Sympathy of Religions, by T. W. Higginson. 25 cents.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 10 cents, singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets	1.50
Concord Days	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M). Little Women. Two vols	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl	1.50
Little Men	1.50
My Boys, &c	1.00
Shawl-Straps	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism	2.00
New Poems	2.00
Literature and Dogma	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine	2.00
Edelweiss	1.00
German Tales	1.00
BACON'S Essays	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution	2.25
Physics and Politics	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A). Radical Problems	2.00
The Rising Faith	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols	5.00
BIBLE in the Public Schools. Records, Arguments, and Decision in the case of John D. Minor et al. vs. the Board of Education of the city of Cincinnati: et al. in the Supreme Court of the City of Cincinnati	2.00
Arguments of Ramsey, Sage and King in favor of the use of the Bible	.50
Arguments of Stallo, Hoadley and Mathews against the use of the Bible	.50
The Opinion and Decision of the Supreme Court of Ohio in the above case	.25
BRACKETT (ANNA C.) The Education of American Girls
BROOKS' (CHARLES T.) Translations. The Layman's Breviary	2.25
The World-Priest	2.25
The Tall Student	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.) The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion	2.00
CLARKE (Dr. E. H.) Sex in Education	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects.	3.00
Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays	5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age	.20
CONWAY (MONCURE D.) The Earthward Pilgrimage	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE; Its True Aims and Requirements A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies"	1.50
The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor"	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols	4.00
Journal of Researches	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE.) Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA.) Philosophers and Fools. A Study	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each	1.00
Comprising— Adam Bede. Romola. The Mill on the Floss. Felix Holt. Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life.
The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy	1.50
How Lisa Loved the King	.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series	2.00
Essays. Second Series	2.00
Miscellanies	2.00
Representative Men	2.00
English Traits	2.00
Conduct of Life	2.00
Poems. With Portrait	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold	1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols	5.00
Society and Solitude	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanase Coquerel the Younger	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG.) The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.	2.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity	1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers	.20
Child's Book of Religion	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS.) Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol	5.00
Elective Affinities	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments	2.00
Creed of Christendom	3.25
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France	1.50
Thoughts about Art	2.00
The Unknown River	6.00
The Intellectual Life	2.00
Chapters on Animals	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second	1.00
Child World. Part First	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures. 1. Metaphysical Lectures	3.50
2. Logical Lectures	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol	2.00
Twice-Told Tales. Mosses from an Old Manse. The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance. The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image. The Marble Faun. The English Note-Books. The American Note-Books. The French and Italian Note-Books. Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment	1.50
Atlantic Essays	2.00
Oldport Days	2.50
HOWELLS'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey	2.00
Suburban Sketches	2.00
Venetian Life	2.00
Italian Journeys	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "'Ninety-Three"	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses	1.25
Bits of Travel	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature	1.25
On the Origin of Species	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen	1.50
Songs of Seven	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skelligs	1.75
Studies for Stories	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours	1.25
Mopsa the Fairy: A Story	1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect	.60
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall	1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.	1.50
III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aëronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols.	3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed	3.00
LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life.	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D'C). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series	1.50
Among my Books	2.00
My Study Windows	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Posies for Children.	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man	2.00
Pre-historic Times	5.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols	8.00
Elements of Geology	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE.) The Vicar's Daughter	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education.	3.00
Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES.) Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol	2.50
The New Affinities of Faith	.25
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART.) Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte.	1.50
Political Economy. New and revised edition	2.50
The Subjection of Women	1.25
Essay on Liberty	1.25
Representative Government	1.50
Autobiography	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works	1.0
MILLER (JOAQUIN.) Songs of the Sierras.	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN.) Voltaire	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-Time Stories	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series	2.50
The Same. Second Series	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion	2.00
NASBY (PETROLEUM V). Swingin' Round the Cirkle	1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations	2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical	4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism.	.25
Against Hero-Making in Religion	.25
PARKER (THEODORE.) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings	1.50
Historic Americans,—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations,—A.D. I. and MDCCCLV. A Christmas Story	.60
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS.) The Infinite and the Finite	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar	1.50
The Trotty Book	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts	1.50
Hedged In	1.50
The Silent Partner	1.50
What to Wear?	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait, Cabinet Edition	2.00
PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc	5.00
The Expanse of Heaven	2.00
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante	2.50
SCHELLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With illustrations	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL.) Self-Help	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical	1.25
First Principles	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Æsthetic	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols	5.00
Philosophy of Style	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition	2.00
Sociology	2.00
SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus	.25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics	9.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin	.00
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols	12.00
TAINE'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols	7.50
The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.	1.25
Vanity Fair. The Newcomes. Adventures of Philip. Pendennis. The Virginians. Esmond, and Lovel the Widower. Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1. Barry Lyndon, Hoggarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humorists, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unreprinted Pieces.
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.	2.00
The Maine Woods	2.00
Cape Cod	2.0
Letters	2.00
A Yankee in Canada	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimac Rivers	2.00
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People	2.00
Light and Electricity	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion	2.00
On Sound	2.00
Radiant Heat	5.00
Forms of Water	1.50
Lectures on Light	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall	.50
TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each	3.00
Vols III. IV. and VI., each	3.75
The Voysey Appeal	.50
Voysey's Defence at York	.50
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden	1.00
Saunterings	1.50
Back-Log Studies	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life	1.50
Essays and Reviews	3.00
Character and Characteristic Men	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth	1.50
Success and its Conditions	1.50
Washington and the Revolution	.30
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life	1.58
We Girls: A Home Story	1.50
Real Folks	1.50
The Other Girls	2.00
Pansies. A volume of Poems	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols	4.00
Child Life	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place, Boston.

ROWLAND CONNOR,

Having finished his engagement with the Free Congregational Society of Florence, will answer invitations to lecture for liberal societies. Address at

JAMAICA PLAIN, MASS.

THE BOUND INDEX FOR 1873.

The bound volume of THE INDEX for 1873 (Volume 4) will be promptly forwarded to any address on receipt of $3, by express, at the purchaser's expense. A complete file for the year can be furnished in no other form.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A CHEAP OFFER!

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 14 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 75 CENTS.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass

THE INDEX IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

THE FREE SUNDAY ADVOCATE.

A MONTHLY JOURNAL AND REVIEW DEVOTED TO THE INTEREST OF THE NATIONAL SUNDAY LEAGUE.

The objects of the League are to advocate the opening of all Museums, Art Galleries, &c., on Sundays; to maintain during the summer the running of cheap Sunday Excursions; to provide during the winter "Sunday Evenings for the People," and generally to promote everything conducive to rational recreation on Sunday.

The Free Sunday Advocate is published in London, England, and is conducted by an Honorary Editorial Committee, consisting of the following: Mrs. J. H. Simpson, London; Thomas Marshall, London; Fred'k Long, London; Francis W. Souther, London; Mark H. Judge, Hampstead.

The ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION for delivery by post to any part of the United States is one dollar (payable in advance). Address

THE FREE SUNDAY ADVOCATE,
256 High Holborn, London, W.C., England.

CHARLES SUMNER'S GREAT WORK.

PROPHETIC VOICES

CONCERNING AMERICA.

By CHARLES SUMNER.

Fine Edition, Tinted Paper, with Steel Portrait, Crown 8vo., Cloth extra, $2.

Aside from its literary and historical merits, this volume has a special interest, from the fact that it was the last work on which r. Sumner was engaged before his death.

"PROPHETIC VOICES" will be found of great value to all who take an interest in the history of our country, so full is it of passages in which the unexampled prosperity of our land has been foretold by philosophers, poets, statesmen, and orators, of whom the lamented author has also given interesting sketches.

Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A NEW, SEARCHING, TIMELY BOOK, entitled

"THE GENESIS AND ETHICS OF CONJUGAL LOVE."

By Andrew Jackson Davis.

Treatment of all the delicate and important questions involved in Conjugal Love is straightforward, unmistakably emphatic, and perfectly explicit and plain in every vital particular. Mr. Davis has recently examined the whole field of Marriage, Parentage, Disaffection, and Divorce, and this little volume is the result; which now comes into the world because it is now both wanted and needed by all women and men.

· · · Our friend Andrew Jackson Davis has written a book this time that concerns everybody, and on this side of the great river. It certainly touches their bosoms if not their business, and people who do not care a pin what Mr. Davis thinks of the Summer Land will be interested to see what he knows about conjugal love, and the duties of the marriage relation. His book has a table of contents as attractive as a Delmonico bill of fare.—Golden Age.

Price, in paper covers, 50 cents; in handsome cloth, 75 cents; in full gilt and extra binding, $1. Postage free. The trade supplied on the most liberal terms. Published by the "Progressive Publishing House" of A. J. DAVIS & CO., No. 24 East Fourth Street, New York City.

STUDENTS FITTED for any College.

Please address EMILY J. LEONARD,
Meriden, Conn.

CONSTANT EMPLOYMENT.—At home, male or female, $30 a week warranted. No capital required. Particulars and valuable sample sent free. Address, with six-cent return stamp. C. ROSS,
Williamsburg, N. Y.

FREE DISCUSSION is held at HOSPITALLER HALL, 593 Washington Street, Boston, every Sunday, at 10½ A.M., 2½ and 7½ P.M. All that relates to the Religious, Political, and Social interests of mankind constitute the subjects for discussion. THE INDEX and Index Tracts are for sale every Sunday at Hospitaller Hall.

WEST NEWTON ENGLISH AND CLASSICAL SCHOOL.—The twenty-first school year of this Family and Day School, FOR BOTH SEXES, will begin Wednesday, September 16, 1874.

For particulars address NATH'L T. ALLEN, Principal,
West Newton, Mass.

At home Saturdays.

TO NEWSPAPER PUBLISHERS.

Having conveniences for doing the best of newspaper printing at reasonable prices, I should like to contract for composition alone, or for composition, press-work, and mailing, for one or more weekly papers.

Best of references given, and satisfactory work guaranteed. GEO. H. ELLIS,
7 Tremont Place, Boston.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c., of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX.

Bound volumes of THE INDEX for 1871, 1872, and 1873, will be sent by express (at the purchaser's expense) on receipt of $2.50, $2.50, and $3.00 respectively. These volumes are exceedingly valuable singly, irrespective of each other; for the important essays and other articles they contain are of permanent interest, and will furnish as instructive reading twenty years hence as to-day. No more valuable present could be made to a friend struggling out of Orthodoxy than one of these volumes.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

WARREN'S TRUE CIVILIZATION.

Price 50 cents.

PRACTICAL DETAILS,

showing the workings of the

COST PRINCIPLE.

Price 25 cents.

For sale by

S. H. MORSE,

25 Bromfield St., Boston.

PERKINS' ANTHEM BOOK!!

Price $1.50. $13.50 Per Doz.

A new and excellent collection, by W. O. PERKINS. Will be warmly welcomed by Choirs, as the anthems are not difficult, and are just what is needed for "Opening" and "Voluntary" pieces.

SONG MONARCH!

Price 75 Cents. Per Dozen, $7.50.

The best book of the Season for Singing Schools. By H. R. PALMER assisted by L. O EMERSON. Music principally secular, and is of the most interesting character.

THE LEADER!!

Price $1.38. $12.00 Per Doz.

The New Church Music Book, by H. R. PALMER assisted by L. O. EMERSON, gentlemen whose previous books have been more successful than any others. Please examine.

AMERICAN SCHOOL

C READERS.

IN THREE BOOKS.

Price 35 cents, 50 cents, and 50 cents.

Perfectly adapted to graded classes, in Primary and Grammar Schools. By L. O. EMERSON and W. S. TILDEN. Already in successful use in the schools.

Sold by all dealers. Either book sent post-paid for retail price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO.,

BOSTON.

CHAS. H. DITSON & CO.,

711 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE.

Our organization some time since decided to direct its efforts for the present towards securing the

Repeal of the Laws

whereby church and other corporate property is unjustly exempted from its share of the burden of taxation.

As a means to this end, we have published for general circulation several thousand copies of a

TRACT

on Church Exemption, being the article by Mr. Abbot which appeared in THE INDEX of Nov. 27.

We have already issued three editions, the last of which is nearly exhausted.

We desire soon to issue

Another Large Edition

of this and other tracts on the subject, so that we can place a copy in the hands of

EVERY VOTER IN THE STATE,

and generously to supply the calls for them in other States.

To do this, we need funds; for, although we have made arrangements for printing the Tract at very low cost, it is impossible for the Boston League, with its various other expenses, to bear the entire expense alone.

Will not, then,

All Friends of the Movement

come forward and help us with liberal donations?

We frequently receive communications from parties wishing tracts to distribute, asking how much they shall pay. To such we reply that the cost to us is about $2.50 per thousand, and we shall be pleased to furnish them at this price per thousand, or 30 cents per hundred, to all who will circulate them. But all additional donations will be gratefully received for the purpose of circulating them gratuitously throughout the country.

Last winter this subject was brought before the Legislature of the State, and many petitions were presented asking a repeal of these unjust laws.

The matter is still in their hands, and at the next session will undoubtedly be acted upon. Meanwhile the

Voice of the People,

favoring justice and equity, should be distinctly heard.

We shall soon be ready to send out

BLANK PETITIONS AGAIN,

thus giving an opportunity to those who have not already done so, to protest against this continued wrong.

Let us make it

THE LARGEST PETITION

ever presented to our legislative body.

Will those willing to assist in circulating these petitions please

SEND IN THEIR NAMES?

We would say, also that we feel deeply the need of

Other Organizations

in this State, to coöperate with us in securing equality and justice, by pressing the "Demands of Liberalism." If, in any locality, there are those who are inclined to

Form a Liberal League,

we are ready to render such assistance as lies in our power.

LIBERALS!

If all will unite and work, the results sought can be accomplished

Address

BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE,

NO. 1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

Per order of the
EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

NONPAREIL Farm Feed, Bone, Drug, and Hand-grinding MILLS. Ten Sizes. Also Cotton-Seed Hullers. Illustrated pamphlets free. Address

SEDGEBEER, SHEPARD & MILLER,
181 East Front Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

TYNDALL'S ADDRESS.

A very neat copy of Professor Tyndall's remarkable Address before the British Association on August 19, in pamphlet form, with large type and good paper, will be mailed postpaid on receipt of TWENTY-FIVE CENTS.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE AMERICAN EDITION OF

MONCURE D. CONWAY'S

SACRED ANTHOLOGY,

A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES,

has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.

Address THE INDEX,
1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,

BANKERS,

LEROY, MINN.

Branch Office, 137 Broadway, N. Y.

Money Invested in First Mortgages on Improved Farms in Minnesota and Iowa, running three to five years, with Coupon Interest Notes, drawing 9 per cent. annually in advance, or ten per cent. paid semi-annually in advance, or 12 per cent. per annum, annually, free of expense to the Loaner.

☞ 10 per cent. paid on receipt of money at the Bank, or in New York, till invested.

For Full Particulars, send for Circular.

137 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

REAL ESTATE SECURITIES, paying 8 to 10 per cent. interest, or

Investments in Real Estate in Chicago and vicinity,

if judiciously made, are the best and safest modes of employing capital. The old

Real Estate and Loan Agency

OF

ERNST PRUSSING, 143 RANDOLPH STREET,

Chicago (Established 1853),

Guarantees perfect title and ample security in all its Real Estate Loans.

Firstclass securities always on hand. Interest and principal collected without charge. Real Estate Investments made on commission or on shares; taxes paid, &c.

Orders of capitalists and real estate owners respectfully solicited.

REASONS FOR USING THE

EUREKA SPOOL SILK.

It is full length. It is full size. It is smooth and elastic, and is equally adapted to hand or machine use.

Many kinds of spool silk are a perfect fraud, being not only shorter in length, but a much finer size than they are represented to be, and of so poor a quality as to be unfit for use. The ladies will always find the Eureka Silk exactly as represented. Every spool is warranted, and the manufacturer's name indelibly branded on every spool. Call for it.

RADICAL AND LITERARY LECTURES BY

JOHN WEISS,

RADICAL LECTURES.

The Idea of Hereafter.
An Act of Faith.
Intelligence in Religion.
Religion and Science.
Heart in Religion.

SHAKSPEARIAN LECTURES.

FIRST SERIES.

1. Cause of Laughter.
2. Irony and Humor.
3. Dogberry, Malvolio, Bottom, Touchstone.
4. Ajax in Troilus and Cressida: The Porter in Macbeth: The Fool in Lear.
5. Falstaff.
6. Hamlet.

SECOND SERIES.

1. The Women of Shakspeare.
2. Portia.
3. Ophelia.
4. Macbeth and Lady Macbeth.
5. " " " "
6. Contrast in Shakspeare's Characters.

Address JOHN WEISS,
32 E. Brookline St., Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year. LIBERTY AND LIGHT. Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 5. BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, OCTOBER 15, 1874. WHOLE NO. 251.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF ——.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in ——:

Also, as soon as five hundred such Liberal Leagues shall have been formed in different places, to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be hereafter called, in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the needed reforms.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the National Convention of Liberal Leagues when called together.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State; and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

GLIMPSES.

MR. JOHN ANDERSON, the founder of the natural history school at Penikese, has sent a draft worth $1000 in gold to Garibaldi, with a promise to repeat it annually.

WISCONSIN has $4,000,515 of church property, of which Milwaukee county has $1,363,220, and Madison $236,000. The rate of taxation in Madison is two per cent.

THE OLD colored woman by whose side a young Southern miss refused to take a seat in a horse-car was shrewd. "Why," said the good-natured old soul, "if you only owned me, my little dear, you'd sit in my lap!"

BISHOP REINKENS, the head of the Old Catholics, is described as a man of "upright, unaffected, manly character," earnest, able, and uncompromising. He charges the Roman hierarchy with fostering priest-worship, ignorance, and superstition. Yes—we knew that before!

SCIENCE has another name to add to her Roll of Honor. Dr. F. E. Anstie, of England, whose work on Stimulants and Narcotics is an able defence of the value of alcohol as a nutritive agent, has just died from the effects of a dissection-wound, inflicted while investigating the causes of a mysterious disease which had carried off several pupils in a large school at Waudsworth.

THE CATHOLICS of Colchester, Connecticut, having just erected a schoolhouse of their own, appeared in force at the recent town-meeting, and carried through a resolution that the selectmen and Board of Education should appropriate such sums as they deem proper towards defraying the expenses of building it. There is talk of serving an injunction on the selectmen to stop this illegal appropriation. Such things as these are only the first drops of the shower.

COMMENTING ON a misreport of his speech at Saratoga concerning the "sympathy" resolutions, Rev. J. B. Green says wittily in the Liberal Christian: "The harness of organization, which is necessary to do Christian work in, does not gall me in the least, though I am ready to admit it is not the freedom of the wild ass; that I have no ambition to exult in." But is it not better to be a wild ass in freedom than a tame ass in the traces? If we are asses all round, why not prefer free swing for our asininity?

IT IS ASTONISHING how profound is the ignorance of some who ought to know! This original reflection is prompted by the Boston Advertiser's allusion to Voltaire as an atheist, when there is no excuse for not knowing that he was a deist. In the following remark we fancy we recognize the same prejudiced pen that last year so unscrupulously traduced Mr. Bradlaugh: "The capacious and just intellect of Franklin perceived and felt that there was a God and a difference of right and wrong, of good and evil; while Voltaire had not the mental faculties to entertain these conceptions."

THE American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions report an expenditure of $443,568 for the year 1873–4 as the cost of the missions themselves, or ninety-two per cent. of the total receipts; the home expenses being reported as eight per cent. They ask $400,000 from the churches the coming year, or $500,000 from all sources, to carry on their work. If the gospel they preach is true, they ought to ask and receive, not $500,000, but $500,000,000 at the least. They teach that heathen souls are pouring into the bottomless gulf of perdition like the waters of the great Lakes over the Falls of Niagara; and they only ask for a tin dipper to save a gill or two!

SIR JOHN LUBBOCK, in his address at the Belfast meeting, thus states the four fundamental propositions of Darwin's theory: "1. That no two animals or plants in Nature are identical in all respects. 2. That the offspring tend to inherit the peculiarities of their parents. 3. That of those which come into existence only a certain number reach maturity. 4. That those which are, on the whole, best adapted to the circumstances in which they are placed, are most likely to leave descendants." He adds: "No one of these statements is or can be disputed, and they seem fully to justify the conclusions which Mr. Darwin has deduced from them, though not all those which have been attributed to him by his opponents." It is idle any longer to pretend that Mr. Darwin's theory is only an "hypothesis." It is a necessary reading of indisputable facts.

THE Methodist has an editorial on the Unitarian National Conference in which it says: "The Conference appeared well. The members spoke and bore themselves as men of culture, and were earnest, after their manner, which is certainly very unlike the Methodist manner. A religious body with scarce enough of the spirit of propagandism to keep it warm must, necessarily, have a peculiar physiognomy. Having renounced Christian dogma as an instrument of world reformation, there is left to the Unitarians the culture and enforcement of Christian ethics, to which they devote themselves with thoughtfulness. They acknowledge none of that overmastering necessity for action which creates the zeal of evangelical Christians. The Unitarian intends to do something for the world and will do it, but it must be, as one would say, after he has had his dinner."

FURTHER INFORMATION relative to the "Patriotic Sons of America" is kindly furnished us by a Pennsylvania correspondent as follows: "I am not a member of the Order. They claim a membership of 10,000 in Pennsylvania. I think the Order is hostile to Rome, but not friendly to Reason. It opposes sectarianism, yet favors Protestantism—a Christianity without a Pope. It opposes a union of Church and State, yet many favor Christian features in our government. I believe the Christian Statesman equally repudiates the union of Church and State! Ex-Governor Geary was a member of the Order, and at the same time Vice-President of the God-in-the-Constitution movement. I made a number of queries as to their idea of God, the Demands of Liberalism, etc., which the editor of the Camp News informs me will be answered in the November number."

MAYOR WILTZ, of New Orleans, recently reported to the City Council that "responsible parties" have offered to loan $1,000,000 to the city on easy terms. This offer the Council has accepted. A private correspondent gives us further information of an interesting nature on this subject. It seems that the "responsible parties" are the managers of the "Ursuline Convent" in France, which has branches all over the world contributing largely to the mother-house. This institution has now an accumulated fund of $8,000,000, untaxed of course. "I am neither politician nor financier enough to expose the full bearings of this operation," writes our informant, "but is it not self-evident that the bonds given by the city, being taken up by our Catholic citizens, will give the managers of the Convent the control of a large vote and extend the insidious influence of Rome still further? The Catholics defeated the proposed new Constitution in Ohio, and they are everywhere gathering strength to counteract every other effort on behalf of freedom. Greedy, grasping cormorants, they clutch as eagerly the hard-earned dimes of our Irish servant-girls as they do the glittering thousands bequeathed by dying 'saints.' Yours for non-exemption."

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
VINELAND' N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walters; Secretary, E. M. Bridgman.
WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—President, J. B. Bassett; Secretary, Anton Grethen.
NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
BALBEC, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
SAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.
AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Vaux, Secretary.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

Theology in Education.

BY WILLIAM D. LESUEUR.

A recent number of Macmillan's Magazine contains an article from which very different conclusions will be drawn, according to the stand-point and bias of the reader. A gentleman of somewhere about thirty years of age, whose education—a most elaborate and expensive one—was watched over by parents and instructors of the most unimpeachable and rigid Orthodoxy, comes before the public with the confession that, in spite of all the pains taken with him at home, at school, and at the university, he finds that his opinions have not taken the mould that was desired and intended: he was to have been a staunch believer, like his parents before him, in the doctrines of Christianity, and a stout upholder of the conventional Christian morality, whereas the slightest self-examination shows that he has no hold upon any theological doctrine whatever, while his moral perceptions are about as indeterminate and unsatisfactory as they could possibly be. He makes the confession, however, in a very cheery and indeed humorous way; and, from the account he gives of his general manner of life, it is evident that the want of a theology does not stand in the way of his enjoyment, or give him any gloomy apprehensions, so far as his own future is concerned. One thought only appears to give him any uneasiness, and this we shall let him state in his own words:—

"Although not in love, I have some idea of prosecuting a little suit of mine in a certain direction; and have to own that at odd hours and spare seasons, when my thoughts are left to follow their own bent, I find them dwelling on, lingering over, returning to, a face, which, though no artist on beholding would be led to exclaim—

'A face to lose youth for, occupy age
With the dream of, meet death with!'

is yet, in my opinion, a very pleasant and companionable face, one well suited to spend life with, which is, after all, what you want a wife for. That is not the painful problem—that comes on a step later. Supposing I was married and blessed, as, after all, most men are, with children, how on earth shall I educate them to keep them out of Newgate? The thought is bewildering. If I, educated on Watts's Hymns and the New Testament, am yet so hazy on moral points and distinctions which can hardly be described as nice,—such as paying my bills, using profane language, going to church, and the like,—my son, brought up on Walter Scott and George Eliot, and the writers of his own day, will surely never pay his bills at all; his oaths will be atrocious, and he will die incapable of telling the nave from the transept—and how I am to teach him better I really do not see."

Of course, when a man expresses himself in this playful strain, it is difficult to tell how far what he says is to be taken seriously; and, for my part, I am far from supposing that the author of the above passage really questions his ability to bring up children to be ordinarily moral, without referring them to Dr. Watts and the New Testament as infallible standards. Still, as many persons will draw in all seriousness and with great satisfaction the conclusion to which the article referred to appears to point, it may not be amiss to show how the case really stands, if we are to accept this ingenuous confession seriously. The argument really runs thus: If a person brought up upon Watts's Hymns and the New Testament finds, when he has arrived at manhood, that his moral ideas are all at sixes and sevens, it is surely incumbent upon him to seek some different method of training for his children. The "haziness" of which our writer complains would seem to result directly from the discovery that neither Dr. Watts nor the New Testament deals with the problems of to-day in an adequate or satisfactory manner; while on some points both are plainly at war with the intelligence and conscience of the present generation. What has he to fall back upon when these supports give way? Nothing that he has ever been taught to respect, to consult, or to confide in. He was never taught that morality had any independent basis of its own, or that there were any adequate motives to right action apart from a belief in future rewards and punishments. Need we go further for an explanation of any amount of "haziness"? The old Romans were not hazy upon points of duty, nor was Sophocles conscious of any such malady, when he penned those noble lines, that have been so often quoted, upon the unchangeableness and eternity of moral obligations. Yet neither Greeks nor Romans had any shadow of a "revealed" or officially authorized code of morals. The duties they recognized were such as social intercourse, through successive generations, had established and defined; and if theyconceived these duties as divinely sanctioned it was simply in this sense, that they believed the gods to look with approval upon the man who practised virtue, and with anger upon the man whose life was evil. It is surely a hard thing, then, if the men of our day must either have a written code of supernatural origin, or else drift about in hopeless uncertainty as to what is right and what is wrong.

I was struck some time ago by the following passage in a French writer very little known now-a-days, the historian Daunow: "It is asked why there is not more exactness in the conclusions of political and moral science, and we easily persuade ourselves that these branches of knowledge lack the means of becoming exact. It would be nearer the truth, however, to say that the wish to render them so has generally been wanting." This, I think, strikes the nail on the head: if we always wished to know our duty, the cases would be very rare in which we should be wholly at a loss to know how to act. Natural morality has never yet received justice at our hands. Too many interests, unfortunately, are opposed to the growth of strong, well-founded, independent moral convictions. The churches first of all want nothing of the kind, for they have a privileged morality of their own. The political and mercantile classes have an instinctive aversion to everything that is based upon theory, or that comes before them as the result of other men's thinkings; they feel, moreover, that they can get on better with the conventional morality of the Christian world, which, in practice, is found to be entirely compatible with all the absurdities and shams of party politics, and all the "exigencies" of commercial competition.

Talk to the ordinary, shrewd politician or business man, and you will find (generally speaking) two things: first, that he is a great stickler for the fundamental doctrines of Christianity; and, second, that he has a great aversion to discuss his doings on "general principles." Such a haze overhangs the whole region of theological morality that, so long as he can keep on that ground, a comfortable indistinctness attaches to everything he does. What, therefore, these shrewd, practical men dread above everything, and, dreading, resent, is being summoned out into the light of common sense and utilitarian morality, where all actions have sharp outlines and distinct coloring. They infinitely prefer Dr. Watts and the New Testament, though the one does poetically hint something about—

"a dreadful hell
And everlasting pains;"

while the other, confirming the doctor fully upon this point, deals very trenchantly with those "fools" who heap up riches and honors for themselves to the neglect of their souls. Why take these things literally, they say? Who knows what they mean? And so they shuffle off responsibility as they could not do, if brought face to face simply with reason and conscience.

My opinion, then, is that belief in theological doctrines is not necessary to produce robust moral characters. The true basis of morality is to be found in the relations men sustain to one another, and these relations can be studied, and the duties that they give rise to deduced, without the aid of any theological system whatever. Indeed, it seems to me that their true nature ought to be more easily understood and more powerfully felt when the entanglements of theology are kept out of sight. We should aim at making all sentiments and emotions as natural and instinctive as possible. To derive the sentiment of duty to our fellow-men from the consideration that we are all children of one Father can only weaken that sentiment by making it less instinctive, and making it depend upon a truth or a doctrine not always, or perhaps even generally, present to our mind. The true ground to take is that they have feelings like our own, "fed with the same food, hurt with the same weapons, subject to the same diseases, healed by the same means, warmed and cooled by the same summer and winter," and therefore claiming from us, by virtue of a law which engraved itself upon the human conscience thousands of years ago, some measure of the consideration and care we bestow upon ourselves.

I do not deny that children are great teleologists, and that the answers which an undoubting theist can give to their questions satisfy them better sometimes than the confessions of ignorance which an instructor of different opinions must often make. But this disadvantage, I consider, is more than counterbalanced by the advantage of not having to introduce confusing and contradictory ideas into a child's mind. Bernardin de St. Pierre, who wrote more sensible things in his day than most people are aware of, says in one place: "J'ai toujours regardé comme un des plus grands malheurs de la condition humaine que la superstition vient envahir, dès l'enfance, une âme innocente, sans qu'elle puisse s'en preserver." And though Bernardin de St. Pierre would not have considered pure theism as likely to involve superstition, there can be no doubt that in the views which many grown people, and probably nearly all children, so far as they reflect at all, entertain of the Deity, there is as much superstition as could well attach itself to any belief whatever. Every one assents to the proposition that God is infinitely and invariably good and wise, yet people who certainly think themselves free from all taint of superstition will, on particular occasions when their own private interests have been favorably affected, pour forth the most fervent thanksgivings to him, as if his goodness were then peculiarly manifested, or took an altogether higher character. A vessel is lost at sea. The relatives of those who perish are reminded by their religious friends that "He doeth all things well;" yet those very friends, in their secret devotions, are exhausting themselves in thanksgivings to God that he did not do well by them in the same way that he did by those who lost father, mother, husband, or child. "How good of God not to allow our house to be burned!" pious people who have escaped a conflagration will often exclaim; but if some one whose house had been burned, overhearing the remark, should reply: "Yes, I wish he had been as good to me," the pious people would stand aghast, and would hasten to vindicate, with all the resources of a sophistry familiar to them from childhood, the goodness of God in their neighbor's case, and, at the same time, the strict propriety of their own special thankfulness at having escaped their neighbor's blessings. There is a view of God—and one only, so far as I can see—that justifies the trembling gratitude which so many Christians render to him, when they or their friends have escaped imminent danger. Accept it as a fixed fact that he is an arbitrary oppressor of the human race, who orders disasters from time to time, and picks out the lives to be sacrificed and the hearts to be desolated, and then those whom he has not made victims may well prostrate themselves before him, and endeavor by profuse thanksgivings and adulations to secure continued immunity for themselves and their families. Adopt this theory and all is clear. Pious people may ejaculate their praises with the most perfect consistency, though perhaps not with all the sincerity which an omniscient being might require. How some people can help acknowledging to themselves that this is the conception of God really set up in their minds is what I have never been able to understand.

Children, I need hardly remark, are the first to perceive the want of agreement between the theory of God and that image of him in their parents' minds which stamps their conversation and their devotions. The theory is that God is at all times equally good, but the child soon perceives that he gets credit at certain times for being particularly good. The theory is that he is infinitely wise, but the parents never let a day pass that they do not indicate to him what they want him to do, and sometimes struggle desperately in supplication that he will not do something which they think he is going to do. When children call attention to these contradictions, they are hushed with the edifying remark that "We cannot understand;" and they thus learn that, in relation to certain matters at least, it is quite allowable to say one thing and mean another, to profess one thing and act another.

I readily grant that there are earnest believers in God whose language concerning him is not open to the objections I have just urged, and whose views on the subject of prayer are closely akin to those of some of the best abused of modern philosophers. Coleridge, for example, has told us in some very well-known lines how he understood and practised prayer:—

"Ere on my bed my limbs I lay,
It hath not been my use to pray
With moving lips or bended knees;
But silently, by slow degrees,
My spirit I to love compose;
In humble trust mine eyelids close,
With reverential resignation;
No wish conceived, no thought expressed,
Only a sense of supplication:
A sense o'er all my soul imprest
That I am weak, yet not unblest,
Since in me, round me, everywhere,
Eternal strength and wisdom are."

Nor are these sentiments of altogether modern date. In a letter written by M. Ainglin to the community of Port Royal, on the occasion of the death of Jacqueline Pascal, I find the following remarkable expressions:—

"For some days past, I have been struck by a thought: it is as to our impertinence in desiring anything or in fearing anything, in wishing that this should happen or that not happen, that these persons should live or that those should not live, as if Sovereign Wisdom and Justice did not see everything, or as if we had an illumination or any special views of which God stood in need, in order to dispose and govern everything for the best. This thought often causes me to stop short upon occasions when I am inclined to wish that God would either do or refrain from doing a certain thing. All we have to do is to pray that his holy will may be done in all things, and to seek him in order that we may know his will, submitting ourselves to all events, and only concerning ourselves about what devolves upon us to do, lest we should mix with it something of our own, and place our own providence above that of God."

But when one has purified his thoughts of God to this extent, is the residual conception one that is likely to prove of much value in education? I must really be allowed to doubt it. It seems to me that there is very little difference between discoursing to a child about the permanence and beneficence of law, telling about a personal God of whose personal-ou can give him no illustrations whatever, and m you never allow yourself to address or plead as if he were a person. The world at large, in utterly rejects such conceptions, and it is hardly much to say that to some persons M. Ainglin's s would appear little better than atheistic. The e requisite of a popular religion is that it be forting, and the average man can find but little fort in the thought of such complete self-abnega-such absolute submission to a Providence that e is no tracing or understanding, as the Jansenist er would enjoin. When men can raise themes to this level they are ready for philosophy, h, to tell the truth, has no harder lesson to h.

o conclude: the natural source of love, affection, moral life in children is the love, affection, and al life of their parents. It was a wise man who long ago: "If a man love not his brother whom ath seen, how can he love God whom he hath seen?" Human affections first, spiritual aspira-s afterwards. But grant the loving heart and the e of duty which must in larger or smaller meas-accompany it, and what may you not build upon a foundation? Is it any longer a question of ing your children out of Newgate or Sing Sing?
my part, I ask nothing of theology towards the ation of my children, but rather rejoice that the ful task has been spared me of stifling in their ls the repugnance which doctrines like those of Fall of Man and of the Atonement so naturally te. What I shall endeavor to do will be to bring n up with minds open to the truth, so that, if I n my teaching, they may not be life-long victims ıy mistakes, but may shape their opinions acing to their own enlarging knowledge; and that,
g not upon traditions but upon convictions, they be able to quit themselves like men and women ıe generation to which they belong.

PRAYER AND NATURAL LAW.

M PROFESSOR TYNDALL'S "FRAGMENTS OF SCIENCE."

ıe aspects of Nature are more varied and impres-in Alpine regions than elsewhere. The mount-in their setting of deep-blue sky; the glow of ament and peaks at sunrise and sunset; the ation and distribution of clouds; the descent of hail, and snow; the stealthy slide of glaciers the rush of avalanches and rivers; the fury of ns; thunder and lightning, with their occasional mpaniment of blazing woods—all these things to excite the feelings and to bewilder the mind.
ıis entanglement of phenomena it seems hopeless eek for law or orderly connection. And before thought of law dawned upon the human mind naturally referred these inexplicable effects to ɔnal agency. The savage saw in the fall of a ract the leap of a spirit, and the echoed thunder-was to him the hammer-clang of an exasperated Propitiation of these terrible powers was the equence, and sacrifice was offered to the demons rth and air.

ıt observation tends to chasten the emotions and heck those structural efforts of the intellect h have emotion for their base. One by one nat-phenomena have been associated with their imate causes; and the idea of direct personal von mixing itself in the economy of Nature is re-ing more and more. Many of us fear this teny; our faith and feelings are dear to us, and we with suspicion and dislike on any philosophy, ɔpparent tendency of which is to dry up the soul.
ɔably every change from ancient savagery to our ent enlightenment excited, in a greater or less ee, a fear of this kind. But the fact is, that we not yet determined whether the form under h they now appear in the world is necessary to life and warmth of religious feeling. We may n linking the imperishable with the transitory, confound the living plant with the decaying pole hich it clings. My object, however, at present is to argue, but to mark a tendency. We have ed to propitiate the powers of Nature—ceased to pray for things in manifest contradiction to ral laws. In Protestant countries, at least, I k it is conceded that the age of miracles is past.
ıe general question of miracles is at present in and accomplished hands; and were it not so, my nical acquirements are so limited, that I should presume to enter upon a discussion of this sub-on its entire merits. But there is one little out-g point, which attaches itself to this question, on h a student of science, without quitting the nd which strictly belongs to him, may offer a re-k.

the auberge, near the foot of the Rhone glacier, ct, in the summer of 1858, an athletic young st, who, after a solid breakfast, including a bottle ine, informed me that he had come up to "bless nountains." This was the annual custom of the e. Year by year the Highest was entreated, by ial intercessors, to make such meteorological arements as should insure food and shelter for the rs and herds of the Valaisians. A diversion of Rhone, or a deepening of the river's bed, would been of incalculable benefit to the inhabitants ıe valley at the time I now mention. But the st would have shrunk from the idea of asking the ıipotent to open a new channel for the river, or ause a portion of it to flow over the Grimsel
, and down the vale of Oberhasli to Brientz.
he would have deemed a miracle, and he did not e to ask the Creator to perform miracles, but to ɔmething which he manifestly thought lay quite in the bounds of the natural and non-miraculous. A Protestant gentleman, who was present at the time, smiled at this recital. He had no faith in the priest's blessing; still he deemed his prayer different in kind from a request to open a new river-cut, or to cause the water to flow up-hill.

In a similar manner we Protestants smile at the honest Tyrolese priest, who, when he feared the bursting of a glacier-dam, offered the sacrifice of the mass upon the ice as a means of averting the calamity. That poor man did not expect to convert the ice into adamant, or to strengthen its texture so as to enable it to withstand the pressure of the water; nor did he expect that his sacrifice would cause the stream to roll back upon its source and relieve him, by a miracle, of its presence. But beyond the boundaries of his knowledge lay a region where rain was generated, he knew not how. He was not so presumptuous as to expect a miracle, but he firmly believed that in yonder cloud-land matters could be so arranged, without trespass on the miraculous, that the stream which threatened him and his flock should be caused to shrink within its proper bounds.

Both these priests fashioned that which they did not understand to their respective wants and wishes. In their case imagination wrought, unconditioned by a knowledge of laws. A similar state of mind was long prevalent among mechanicians; many of whom, and some of them extremely skilful ones, were occupied a century ago with the question of a perpetual motion. They aimed at constructing a machine which should execute work without the expenditure of power; and many of them went mad in the pursuit of this object. The faith in such a consummation, involving as it did immense personal interest to the inventor, was extremely exciting, and every attempt to destroy this faith was met by bitter resentment on the part of those who held it. Gradually, however, as men became more and more acquainted with the true functions of machinery, the dream dissolved. The hope of getting work out of mere mechanical combinations disappeared; but still there remained for the speculator a cloud-land denser than that which filled the imagination of the Tyrolese priest, and out of which he still hoped to evolve perpetual motion. There was the mystic store of chemic force, which nobody understood; there were heat and light, electricity and magnetism, all competent to produce mechanical motions.* Here, then, is the mine in which we must seek our gem. A modified and more refined form of the ancient faith revived; and, for aught I know, a remnant of sanguine designers may at the present moment be engaged on the problem which like-minded men in former years left unsolved.

And why should a perpetual motion, even under modern conditions, be impossible? The answer to this question is the statement of that great generalization of modern science, which is known under the name of the Conservation of Energy. This principle asserts that no power can make its appearance in Nature without an equivalent expenditure of some other power; that natural agents are so related to each other as to be mutually convertible, but that no new agency is created. Light runs into heat; heat into electricity; electricity into magnetism; magnetism into mechanical force; and mechanical force again into light and heat. The Proteus changes, but he is ever the same; and his changes in Nature, supposing no miracle to supervene, are the expression, not of spontaneity, but of physical necessity. A perpetual motion, then, is deemed impossible, because it demands the creation of force; whereas the principle of Conservation is, no creation but infinite conversion.

It is an old remark that the law which moulds a tear also rounds a planet. In the application of law in Nature the terms great and small are unknown. Thus the principle referred to teaches us that the Italian wind gliding over the crest of the Matterhorn is as firmly ruled as the earth in its orbital revolution round the sun; and that the fall of its vapor into clouds is exactly as much a matter of necessity as the return of the seasons. The dispersion, therefore, of the slightest mist by the special volition of the Eternal, would be as much a miracle as the rolling of the Rhone over the Grimsel precipices and down Haslithal to Brientz.

It seems to me quite beyond the present power of science to demonstrate that the Tyrolese priest, or his colleague of the Rhone valley, asked for an "impossibility" in praying for good weather; but science can demonstrate the incompleteness of the knowledge of Nature which limited their prayers to this narrow ground; and she may lessen the number of instances in which we "ask amiss," by showing that we sometimes pray for the performance of a miracle when we do not intend it. She does assert, for example, that, without a disturbance of natural law, quite as serious as the stoppage of an eclipse, or the rolling of the St. Lawrence up the Falls of Niagara, no act of humiliation, individual or national, could call one shower from heaven, or deflect toward us a single beam of the sun.

Those, therefore, who believe that the miraculous is still active in Nature, may, with perfect consistency, join in our periodic prayers for fair weather and for rain: while those who hold that the age of miracles is past will refuse to join in such petitions. And if these latter wish to fall back upon such a justification, they may fairly urge that the latest conclusions of science are in perfect accordance with the doctrine of the Master himself, which manifestly was that the distribution of natural phenomena is not affected by moral or religious causes. "He maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust." Granting "the power of free-will in man," so strongly claimed by Professor Mansel in his admirable defence of the belief in miracles, and assuming the efficacy of free prayer to produce changes in external Nature, it necessarily follows that natural laws are more or less at the mercy of man's volition, and no conclusion founded on the assumed permanence of those laws would be worthy of confidence.

It is a wholesome sign for England that she numbers among her clergy men wise enough to understand all this, and courageous enough to act up to their knowledge. Such men do service to the public character by encouraging a manly and intelligent conflict with the causes of disease and scarcity, instead of a delusive reliance on supernatural aid. But they have also a value beyond this local and temporary one. They prepare the public mind for changes which, though inevitable, could hardly, without such preparation, be wrought without violence. Iron is strong; still, water in crystallizing will shiver an iron envelope, and the more unyielding the metal is, the worse for its safety. There are men among us who would encompass philosophic speculation by a rigid envelope, hoping thereby to restrain it, but in reality giving it explosive force. If we want an illustration of this we have only to look at modern Rome. In England, thanks to men of the stamp to which I have alluded, scope is gradually given to thought for changes of aggregation, and the envelope slowly alters its form in accordance with the necessities of the time.

*See Helmholtz—Wechselwirkung der Naturkräfte.

"OLD CATHOLICISM."

THE GREAT HISTORIC MOVEMENT IN EUROPE—THE NEW EMPIRE AND THE ANCIENT CHURCH.

BY D. A. WASSON.

BADEN BADEN, Sept. 14, 1874.

Old Catholicism, like John Brown's soul, is really marching on. All Germany is becoming alive to it, all the newspapers reporting, public curiosity eagerly following its proceedings, multitudes flocking to its assemblies, new communities forming here and there all over the country, the big shepherds of ultramontanism getting alarmed, issuing pastoral letters against it, and trying, some would say, to pull the wool over the eyes of their sheep; in short, tokens abound that the movement really moves, and is to be taken into account in all calculations for the future. Bishop Reinkens—the bishop whom the Old Catholics were lucky enough to get at last in the clear line of official succession from the Apostles, when the ultramontanes were congratulating themselves upon a monopoly of the sacred unction, so that the others could never have a bishop without undertaking to make one for themselves in a revolutionary way, thus upsetting their pretensions to be of the old, true Catholic Church—was here the other day, to lecture, preach, and confirm. His lecture, given before a large and enthusiastic audience, was the seventieth one delivered, always by invitation, in the course of a tour through South Germany. At the Old Catholic congress in Freiberg, to which he was then proceeding, lecturing on the way, the first meeting was attended by an audience of more than three thousand, and by one of between four thousand and five thousand at the last.

The movement has had vicissitudes. There was a time when it promised an immediate revolution; the time when several of the higher clergy, the Würtemberg bishop, for example, were half disposed—personally, indeed, a good deal more than half disposed—to break away, refuse the new dogma, and with it the Pope and all his works. Then followed a season when it seemed likely to be only the protest of a few professors and divines, without popular following. The ecclesiastical bell-wethers had got over their hesitation, and jumped Romewards; the flock had followed as a matter of course; it seemed that Döllinger and his few companions must surrender, or turn Protestant, or remain an isolated, ineffectual few, to die, most likely, without spiritual progeny. Scientists, semi-scientists, and leading-article philosophers moralized over the situation somewhat in this way: "It is too late in the day for a religious revolution; the religious susceptibility is no longer sufficient. The ignorant will be superstitious, will believe and obey; their religion, however, is a sleep, not an awakening, and if they ever do awake, it will be to something else quite. The enlightened are at heart, openly or silently, of no church, indifferent to theology, and working out their salvation on a different line altogether." The affair, however, was not to remain thus quietly disposed of. Old Catholicism could not sweep through the land like a prairie fire, and it is not to die out like a lighted match. It will not take the shape of a flying, electric enthusiasm, for mental habits have undoubtedly changed since Luther's day, but out of question there is vitality, impulse, impetus in it, and a future for it. And circumstances may give it, if not a theological, yet a moral and political significance of the first order.

The truth is, that matters here in Europe are ripening for a great historical settlement, not to be effected in a day or a decade, but to come, and near. Let me try, very briefly, to sketch the situation.

1. Catholicism, according to the mediæval conception, was not simply a religion, but also a system of rule, a supernatural government, and, in the most stringent sense of the word, government for this world. It did not merely preach and persuade, but said must, shall, as sovereignly, as imperiously as any civil State, to say the least. On this side it was a political organization, in the proper sense of the term, and as such, not simply as a system of religion, played its great rôle in those days. Now, it is just this notion of the governing church which distinguishes modern ultramontanism. Not by anything theological, not by anything religious, has it a specific character, but solely by the pretension to reign and rule. The editor of an ultramontane journal in Germany undertook last week to reduce the "conceit" of the German liberals in this wise: "You imagine," said he, "that Germany is the first power in Europe. Your vanity deceives itself. It is not the first power, but, at best, the third. The two greater powers are Russia and the papacy." That gives the point of view precisely. The papacy, the Church, is a power in the same sense with Russia, Germany, England — not to be compared with Lutheranism, Calvinism, or with any mere religion, but with sovereign States. That is ultramontanism. But it not only asserts this as the existing fact but as the normal one, the true ideal, and only deplores that that there is not yet half enough of it, only works to make more.

2. There has been going on in the Church a revolution in this direction. It is known what a prodigious reaction set in after the fall of the first Napoleon. There was a European epidemic of conservatism, which raged unchecked until 1830. In the Church that reaction has continued to the present day. To govern as in the middle ages, to govern with the repressive ideas of the middle ages, to make the Church the true fatherland for the people, to raise church allegiance above civil duty and loyalty, has been the tendency, the intent which, from year to year, has prevailed more with the priesthood, and more absorbed the energies of the Catholic religion. The great stream of modern culture ran against it; it but learned to concentrate itself more upon its single purpose. Thought escaped its control; it said, "See, only power can keep thought in its place." Science went on revealing unwelcome facts; it narrowed its scheme of education to produce an intenser dogmatism. Rome was lost; the spirit became but the more passionately Roman. This direction culminated in the dogma of infallibility, which was simply the establishment of pure absolutism in the form of government to render it more effective.

3. All the forms of reactive tendency which still persist in Europe have been, and are, concentrating in unity with these endeavors. Legitimacy in France is intensely ultramontane. The cutthroat squadrons of Don Carlos fight for "king and religion"—king and Rome. Feudalism in Germany, even when nominally Protestant, makes common cause with the Vatican. All the birds of the right have been, and are, and will be, flocking to their congenial centre.

4. There is also the opposite tendency, a mighty one; and thus during the last half century there have been going on in Europe two contrary revolutions — one backward, the other forward. The leading idea on the one side is that of keeping human nature down for its good; on the other, that of helping it up. The one party says Repression, the other Development. The means in the former case is a governing church, which shall tell men what to do, what to say, what to think, and then magisterially make them do, say, think as they are bidden; in the latter case, the means is freedom in the unity of national order, culture, and discipline,—free learning what is best, and disciplined application of the knowledge gained, under the great laws of social integrity and historic continuity.

5. These two great tendencies have come in Germany to a necessary grapple. Necessary: I see not how the conflict could have been longer delayed. The preliminaries on both sides were complete; the establishment of ecclesiastical absolutism on the one hand, the rise of the new German empire on the other, were the ripening of the two contrary revolutions, upon which a trial of strength must follow. Not the will of the German bishops, but the "logic of events," has urged them to a position where the ultramontane spirit, their master, must conquer or break,—break, or break the empire, and with it the strength of orderly and constructive, as opposed to revolutionary, liberalism. But they and their ruling spirit are there; and now the breaking, on one side or the other, must come. I see no intermediate possibility. Either way, the result will signify much.

Some will think that I place the new empire too high in making it represent the modern liberal spirit. Wendell Phillips says it "means cannon balls." Quite true; it does mean that, and with a certain pungency upon occasion. Something of the sort was meant, too, at Gettysburg and at Yorktown. That is the defensive shell of the nut, a little hard to crack. What is inside? Inside is national unity, constitutional order, liberal culture, popular education, individual freedom, limited by the liberty of the nation to be a whole, and to live healthily as a whole; in short, forty millions of people permitted, in their ordered unity, to work out for themselves the best that is in them. It is not a republic, as it would be had it our past rather than its own. But what nation on the continent, with pretensions to leadership, is, as a whole, doing better? France, if any; and France—unhappily, it is no whole, and cannot get to be one. But let this pass. The contest is there, in Germany, for reasons; it is between the spirit of the old and the spirit of the new; it had to come; it is to be in the nature of a great historical settlement, and much in the future of Europe, more than one sees at a glance, will depend upon its issue.

Now, Old Catholicism is simply Catholicism minus the governing church,—Catholic religion and worship without the pretension to reign and rule. Could it displace ultramontanism, how the skies of Germany and of Europe would clear! what a chapter of confusion come to an end! The imperial priest would disappear from the scene with all his ambitions and temptations, his fomenting of jealousies and stirring of strife to win advantage, his collusion with tyrant adventurers, legitimate or illegitimate. Nations would be permitted to work out their own salvation, without the now inevitable interference of foreign cohorts in black robes, sheltered by the immunities of an imputed sanctity. The church would no longer be corrupted by the lust of power. Catholicism—the Catholic religion—would remain intact to live and grow peacefully, or in peace to pass into other forms of faith, as the laws of human thought and the needs of human sentiment should determine. In the councils of States it would have no enemy, as in the conclaves of political conspirators no emissary.—Advertiser.

TAXING CHURCH PROPERTY.

THE MAJORITY OF A COMMITTEE APPOINTED BY THE ILLINOIS METHODIST CONFERENCE DECIDE IN FAVOR OF TAXATION.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE.

The committee to whom was referred the question of the taxation of church property report that in their judgment no distinction should be made between the property of churches and the property of individuals, in regard to the payment of taxes for the support of the government. The following are some of the reasons that have led them to this conclusion:

1. Governments are instituted for the protection of the lives and property of the citizens. It is but just that all thus protected should contribute to the support of the government. But church property is thus protected, and therefore church property ought to pay its share of taxes for the support of the government.

2. An exemption of church property from taxation is a donation by the government to the churches of the amount thus exempted. The State is forbidden by the constitution to aid any religious denomination, and it cannot do indirectly what it is prohibited from doing directly. Yet the exemption of church property from taxation would cause the State to do this. In the United States, according to the last census, the value of church property is $832,000,000. To exempt this amount of property from taxation would be to extend aid to the churches to an amount greater than that produced by the tithe system of England.

3. Inasmuch as the exemption of one species of property from taxation necessarily increases the amount of taxes needed from other sources, to exempt church property would be to levy a coerced contribution from such sources for the benefit of the exempted party.

4. If any class of church property be exempted from taxation because it is wholly devoted to the interests of religion, then in justice must all property be exempted that is wholly devoted to the interests of religion, whether church edifices, parsonages, mission houses, Sunday school rooms, Bible society buildings, monasteries or nunneries. For

5. Inasmuch as under our system of government all denominations are equal in the eye of the law, and the State favors no system of religion, exemption from taxation must not be limited to the property of the Protestant churches, but must embrace also that of the Roman Catholics, Jews, Mormons, Mohammedans, Buddhists, Freethinkers, and all others who claim to have a religion.

6. The argument that church property should be exempt from taxation because it is unproductive is evidently invalid, because the State presumes all property to be productive, and will not allow that presumption to be rebutted. If it be productive, of course it ought to be taxed; if not productive, then for a society to claim exemption from taxation on that ground would be to take advantage of its own wrong.

7. If it be claimed that church property should be exempted because of the benefit the Church renders to the State, it may be replied that the Church is under obligation to render that benefit whether its property is taxed or not. And any other view of the case would place the Church in the attitude of bargaining for the favor of the State, and would thus neutralize that spirit of disinterested benevolence which is at the very foundation of all Christian effort.

8. If it be objected that the taxation of church property is an infidel measure for the injuring of religion, it may be replied that those called infidels have had much to do with many measures right in themselves. It is supposed that those who are regarded as infidels in this day had something to do with drawing up the Declaration of Independence, but that certainly does not prove that document injurious. For a time infidels were the chief, and almost the sole, advocates of the great antislavery movement, but their advocacy of it does not prove that movement a wrong one. We are to judge measures by their own merits, and not by the character of their advocates.

9. If it be argued that church property should be exempted because school property is exempted, it may be replied that the school is the creature of the State, whilst the Church is the institution of God, and there is no analogy between the two.

10. As to the effect of taxing the property of the church upon the interest of religion, it appears to your committee that it can but be beneficial. It will show to the world that the only favor the Church asks of the State is protection in her God-given right. It will show that the separation between the Church and the State, partial only where the Church is exempted from taxation, is complete, and whilst they see the Church rendering unto Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's, they will themselves be the more disposed to render unto God the things which are God's. Respectfully submitted.

JAMES LEATON,
M. D. HAWES.

THERE ARE two reasons why some people don't mind their own business. One is that they haven't any business, and the other is that they haven't any mind.

RELIGION AND REFORM.

There is a passage in the last number of Mr. Abbot's INDEX which surprises me, and seems to me very untrue. It is as follows, one clause being omitted:—

"Here, for instance, is the Woman's Journal; . . . on the one hand it builds up Woman Suffrage by fair argument, and on the other hand pulls it down again by eulogizing the Gospel, which is to-day its strongest enemy. Analyze the opposition to any forward step of progress, and you will find its roots in the Church or the Bible."

The clause here omitted is simply a sneer at the alleged "dullness" of the Woman's Journal; and this seems to me to be in as bad taste as was a similar sneer uttered by the Independent against THE INDEX under conditions almost precisely similar, a few weeks ago. Such personalities between newspapers, like personalities between individuals, only confuse the argument, and are very unprofitable.

But the charge really made against the Woman's Journal is worth noticing, because it leads us to principles which always need reaffirming, and which lie at the basis of every true reform. If the assertion that this paper pulls the Woman Suffrage cause down again by "eulogizing the Gospel which is to-day its strongest enemy" means anything, it means that this paper seeks to build its argument exclusively on that basis, to the exclusion of other lines of argument which have nothing to do with the Gospel. Now if this were so, I, for one, should be very sorry; but I must honestly say that the charge seems to me very unjust. Let us consider the matter.

There never was a moment in the Antislavery movement when there were not Christians who wished it to take a distinctively Christian position—and freethinkers who wished it to take a distinctively antichristian attitude. But the good sense of the Abolitionists always enabled them to see that their agitation must be based simply on grounds of humanity and justice; letting Christians come to it in their way, and freethinkers in theirs. They made no more question as to the creed or anticreed of their opponents than if they were all so many volunteer firemen running to put out a fire—which, indeed, they were. Thus Garrison and Parker could work in good faith with stoutly evangelical Christians like Wendell Phillips and John Brown; and thus the field was won.

Looking back over the file of the Woman's Journal—which I feel able to judge impartially, having no editorial charge of its columns,—it seems to me to have offered, from the beginning, just this liberal platform. If it had aimed to conciliate the current Christianity, or any form of Christianity, or of anti-Christianity, in order to aid its cause, it would have done wrong and weakened its ground. But it has gone straight forward on its course, urging Woman Suffrage for its own sake, and appealing to Christians to support it from their point of view, and non-Christians from theirs. To do anything else would be to fall into the very narrowness that we all should wish to escape. In the service of a practical reform, let us welcome a Christian ally rather than a non-Christian opponent; and vice versa. If the Methodist universities admit women, while the secular Harvard keeps them out, let us be grateful to the Methodists so far; just as the freedmen of the South have reason to bless Bishop Haven, who does them justice, rather than the freethinking Golden Age, which does them persistent injustice.

It is well known, to those who care to know, that my own religious opinions are nearer to Mr. Abbot's than to those of even the liberal churches; but I must utterly dissent when he says: "Analyze the opposition to any forward step of progress, and you will find its roots in the Church or the Bible." I do not see how any just man can deliberately say this. The opposition to any step of progress finds its basis far deeper than Church or Bible, in the ignorance, the timidity, the selfishness of men. Superstition is one, and only one, of the forms of human debasement; and a man, utterly given over to pure science, may trample on human hearts and lives as inexorably as a mediæval inquisitor or a Spanish king.

The Abolitionists were obliged to fight every inch of ground, against a delinquent church on the one side and "Nott & Gliddon" on the other. "Cursed be Canaan" was hardly a more potent weapon against them than was the "facial angle." It is the same with the advocates of Woman Suffrage now. How persistently Paul is quoted against us, we all know; but what has Paul to do with the attitude of Dr. Clarke or Professor Maudsley, of Goldwin Smith or the Popular Science Monthly? Science has its narrowness, like religion, and it is the scientific form of narrowness from which we have most to fear in the immediate future. Christianity is not the quarter from which the Nation predicted "almost revolting frankness" as likely to be visited on women-reformers. Nor was it any form of religious conservatism that dictated the altogether revolting frankness of the North American Review when it said (October, (1872), "A woman without a man to manage her is unsexed and wofully astray. Women like a master; we might even say that they like to be bullied by a masterful man." A reform must hail friends and resist foes wherever it sees them. Scotland is called the home of bigotry; but Miss McLaren tells that the Scotch Presbyterian clergymen are very generally in favor of enfranchising woman; and in our own Woman Suffrage conventions the clergymen outnumber the lawyers and doctors, three to one. Possibly, if Mr. Abbot could annihilate the Church and the Bible to-morrow, Woman Suffrage would lose as much as it would gain, and the position of parties would remain essentially the same as before. Our main foes are not merely the Church, where that is wrong; but, as somebody in Dickens says, "The world, the flesh, and the devil," wherever they are wrong. And on the other hand, we must welcome any one, be he Christian or infidel, who will work heartily with us against these ills. T. W. H.

—Woman's Journal.

THE POPE'S NEW POSITION.

If the decree of infallibilty were to be passed at all, it would have been a wise thing on the part of the Vatican Council to choose a Pope of special prudence and sagacity under whom it should have been first inaugurated. It is quite true that the Roman Catholics themselves attach no new importance at all to the mere opinions of the Pope, whether publicly or privately uttered, so long as they are not formal declarations of doctrine officially uttered by the Pope as teacher of the Church. Still, as a matter of fact, it cannot be doubted that the declaration of the dogma has attracted a quite unusual attention to all the Pope says. Protestants can't help reflecting that what the Pope drops in conversation with Cardinals or deputations, he may, perhaps, also be moved to embody in a formal document which will bind the conscience of the whole Roman Catholic Church. We heretics, at all events while the notion of an infallible individual organ of truth is novel to the world, and full of the piquancy of a new interest, may naturally watch all the Pope's sayings as at least sign-posts which may lead to something that all the great Roman Catholic world will be forced to believe. Admit, if you please, that it is not through any supposed inspiration of the Pope, but solely by the same Providence which is said to watch over the fall of a sparrow, that his official utterances are supposed in the Catholic sense to be preserved from error. That, no doubt, is the Roman Catholic view. But then it will be admitted, probably, that the Pope's own opinions afford in a human sense some criterion of what he is pretty sure never to declare, and a clew at least to the subjects on which,—at all events if invited from without,—he might be likely to desire to "teach" the Church his own convictions. It is impossible that the immediate neighborhood of infallibility—even though it be a purely instrumental and Providential, not a rational or intellectual, infallibility—can be watched without profound interest by those who are sceptical of human infallibility altogether; and it is natural and human, even if in the Roman Catholic sense an unjustifiable sort of conjecture, to draw inferences from what the Pope says out of his own inmost convictions, as to what he may some day be tempted to say as an ex-officio teacher of the Church. Looked at in this light, we cannot help thinking that Roman Catholics must feel annoyed that the strong concentration of attention on the Holy See, which is due to the declaration of the dogma, should have occurred in the lifetime of a Pope who cannot be said to have anything of the statesman in him, and hardly anything even of the wary and acute ecclesiastic who studies "the economies" of divine government no less than the moral and spiritual aspects of divine truth. A few years ago the utterances of the Pope were hardly glanced at by Protestant States on any subjects not particularly affecting the relations of Rome with the local hierarchies of other nations. But now, and all in consequence of this sudden blaze of light necessarily turned on all indications of views which it may become incumbent on a great many millions of men to accept bonâ fide, everything the Pope says is telegraphed all over Europe, and scanned with an eagerness and sometimes with a passion that must make the conversational remarks of his Holiness quite uncomfortably important.—London Spectator.

GUIZOT.

François Pierre Guillaume Guizot was born at Nimes, on the 4th of October, 1787, so that he lacked less than a month of completing his eighty-seventh year. His father was an advocate, a Protestant, and a victim of the revolution in 1794. In consequence of this bereavement, and the disordered state of the country, young Guizot was taken to Geneva, where he was thoroughly educated. At the age of twelve he was not only master of the ancient languages, but completely familiar with German, Italian, and English. In 1805 he returned to Paris after a short stay in Languedoc, and was there introduced into literary society. He became acquainted with Mlle. Pauline de Meulan, and, although she was fourteen years his senior, he married her in 1812. His wife had long been editor of a magazine entitled the Publicist, and her relations with the chief of the royalist party were the means of giving Guizot an entrance into political life.

Before his marriage, in 1809, he had published his first work—a revision of Gerard's French Synonyms. Several other works followed—a Lives of the French Poets, a translation of Gibbon's Decline and Fall, The State of the Fine Arts in France, etc. In 1812 he was appointed Professor of Modern History in the Sorbonne. With the fall of Napoleon he entered political life. He was Secretary-General of the Department of the Interior in 1814, of Justice in 1815, and Counsellor of State in 1817. Under Decazes, father of the present duke and Minister of Foreign Affairs, he held a high position, which he resigned in 1820 on the fall of that cabinet. Meanwhile he had been publishing various works of a very liberal tendency, which cost him his seat in the Council of State; and finally he was commanded in 1822 to discontinue his historical lectures in the Sorbonne, resumed after his resignation of political office, the sentiments he advanced being distasteful to the conservative government. He then devoted himself exclusively to literature, producing historical works with a political bearing in rapid succession. In 1827 he had the misfortune to lose his wife, but the following year he married again, his second wife being a niece of the first Madame Guizot, and like her an author.

The Martignac ministry restored him to his chair at the Sorbonne in 1828, and his lectures gave him great popularity. In January, 1830, he entered the Chamber of Deputies, and was prominent in the contest which brought about the revolution of July and the establishment of the Orleans dynasty. On the accession of King Louis Philippe he was named Minister of the Interior, but held the position but a few months. In 1832 he again became minister, and held the place four years. In 1840 he was appointed Ambassador to Great Britain, but after a very few months he was recalled to take a place in the cabinet of Marshal Soult, of which he was the real head for more than seven years. It is needless to repeat the history of that time, or to detail the successive steps and blunders by which the ministry, and particularly M. Guizot, lost their popularity, and the reign of the citizen king came to an inglorious end. M. Guizot only resigned when the revolution had actually begun. With the act of resignation, followed by Guizot's flight to England, ended forever his political career.

The published works of M. Guizot are very voluminous, and they have established his literary fame on a sure foundation, but it is not necessary to catalogue them here. His latest labor, we believe, was upon a history of France, which is published in both French and English in a manner worthy of itself.—Boston Advertiser.

THE "CHRISTIAN WORLD" AT MILL'S GRAVE.

It behooves all of us, who have not yet done so, to read the Autobiography, by John Stuart Mill; were there no other reason, the gratitude due to so eminent a pioneer of progress should awaken a deep interest in the record of his life.

It is not too much to say that this book, the legacy of the modern Spiridion, has done more in reversing the fortunes of Orthodoxy than anything else for many years. Had it appeared prior to the formation of the Mill Memorial Committee, it would probably have alienated the patronage of many of the dignitaries and quasi-distinguished persons who now sit thereon. As it was, its publication seemed to cast quite a spell of consternation over the ranks of the religious and conservative organs, and other incorrigible admirers of the status quo; and it is only lately they have sufficiently retrieved themselves to raise a discordant chorus of disparagement, which even the tiny yelp of the Leisure Hour does its best to swell, imitating in its way the snarling of Fraser, and the fierce growl of the Maga. But the most mendacious attempt at detraction of all was reserved for that popular exponent of bilious piety, the Christian World, to make. Its "Literary" supplement of January 16, in a notice of its new coadjutor, the Christian Evidence Journal, says: "But why does the writer of a good article on Mill's Autobiography call Gibbon—the author of one of the two or three histories that will ever live in our literature—a vain, heartless sensualist, and exalt Mill in preference? What could be more heartless than Mill's conduct to Mr. Taylor, whose widow he married? He, a calm philosopher, not a vain sensualist or impulsive fool, coolly alienated the wife's affections from the husband with whom she had no fault to find. We can imagine nothing more selfish. At any rate, it should serve as a caution to married men how they open their doors to philosophers in search of the greatest happiness of the greatest number." The vulgar, would-be jocosity of the latter part of the paragraph will gauge us the quality of the writer's own moral sensibility; and to any one at all acquainted with the beautiful character of Mill, this malignant misrepresentation is its own refutation. Mrs. Taylor was a woman large-hearted enough to have a deep and warm friendship for Mill without its "alienating her affections" from her husband, "a most upright, brave, and honorable man," as Mill himself calls him (Autobiography, p. 185). Mill speaks again (ibid, p. 240) of his "marriage in April, 1851, to the lady whose incomparable worth had made her friendship the greatest source to me, both of happiness and of improvement, during many years in which we never expected to be in any closer relation to one another. Ardently as I should have aspired to this complete union of our lives at any time in the course of my existence at which it had been practical, I, as much as my wife, would far rather have foregone that privilege for ever than have owed it to the premature death of one for whom I had the sincerest respect and she the strongest affection."

The Christian World calumniators of Mill, the theologians who have toiled for a century to bury in slanders the memory of Thomas Paine, the monks who would have slain Galileo, are one party,—the party of arrogant Orthodoxy. "They are the same dogs with different collars." The lesson to be learnt from the spectacle of their baseness is the necessity of a true system of education to lay a sure foundation of justice and purity for conduct; superseding the dogmatic commands of a musty theology, which have made the sense of right-doing a mere superstition, where, indeed, they have not obliterated it altogether, as in the case before us.—W. Larner Sugden, in London National Reformer.

AN AFFECTIONATE young husband calls his wife "Birdie," because, he says, she is always associated in his mind with a bill.—National Baptist.

A LITTLE GIRL was one day reading the History of England, with her governess; and coming to the statement that Henry I. never laughed after the death of his son, she looked up and said: "What ever did he do when he was tickled?"

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

A VOCATION.

BY MRS. D. H. CLARK.

It thrills, like a new, strange guest,—
This wide, free outlook on wind-swept scars,—
Where I, by pastures, and meadow-bars
Set black on the gold of the burning west,
Loiter, a bidden guest—

Bidden of beauty—impelled
To set my feet toward the utter rim
Of the Visible, where, far and dim,
In dust of the violet air are held
The tremulous hills, as of eld.

What am I, that I should turn back
To the blazoned windows of the town,
Touched by the sun on his Midas-track?
Better to stay on the breeze-blown down,
Where sweetness shall never lack.

Who waits for, or misses, me?
Not one,—though, a weary alien, I
Should stray, from the dusk till the dawn-flushed sky
Thrilled on my way, like the roses which lie
In the path of a bridal-company.

* * * * * *

An onward seeking, a farther quest,
Where the gold is drossed into crimson stains—
To change on change—till the gray remains,
The only rack of that burning west;
And into my lonely breast

A messenger comes like a dove,
With a song like pearls of an untold price:
"Though never for thee shall be home and love,
For thee, at thy birth, the three Fates wove
The richest of destinies.

"To set thyself in another's place;
To sound the depths of all mortal grief;
To reach the heights of all mortal grace—
And the world's mute life to paraphrase!"
O passionate heart's relief—

O duty bitter-sweet,
To gather up into painful sheaves
The grain which the full-fed reaper leaves!
O precious gold of the scattered wheat,
Deep-trodden by careless feet!

NORTHUMBERLAND, Pa.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING OCTOBER 10.

W. M. Salter, 65 cents; A K. Loring, 56 cents; G. H. Foster, $1.60; E. King, 25 cents; J. K. Wildman, $1; W. Wickersham, 25 cents; Mortimer Evans, 25 cents; David Cony, 25 cents; H. A. Clifford, 25 cents; A. Warren, 90 cents; Edward Kelson, $3.25; F. H. Rous, $2.25; E. F. Butterfield, $7.50; E. C. Hyde, $1; Julius Kirschbaum, 50 cents; W. H. Ellery, $3; Gust. Zschech, $6.75; R. G. Rogers, $3; C. F. Williston, $3; W. C. Rickert, $2; M. Lath, $2.25; W. H. Colcord, $3; H. S. Shurtleff, $3; H. B. Storer, $3; M. A. Osgood, $3; Lizzie Martin, 50 cents; F. L. Comstock, $3; Wm. Wiley, $10; S. L. Allen, $1; Sarah Edgerton, $2; Thos. Lamery, $1.55; W. D. LeSueur, 65 cents; T. H. Evarts, 50 cents; J. D. White, 15 cents; R. H. Ranney, 17 cents; O. P. Shepardson, 25 cents; W. E. Lukens, 35 cents; Theophilus Johnson, 25 cents; A. Van Harlingen, 25 cents; Miss Junet, 25 cents; James Eddy, 25 cents; W. C. Fuller, 25 cents; D. P. Larry, 25 cents; W. P. Shank, 20 cents; C. F. Hogeboom, $5; A. M. Stayman, $2; B. Gillett, $2.25; J. Rimer, $2.25; John G. Shortall, $10; C. E. Parker, $3; C. N. Norris, $3; Fred. Andriessen, $3; W. P. Draper, $4.04; W. A. Kimball, $3; G. W. Smith, $3; Thomas Richardson, $3; Josiah Wilson, $1.50; L. Ruthrauf, $3; A. D.Wilt, $5.25; C. M. Stiles, $5; W. D. Stuart, $5.25; A. Bunert, $7.50; A. Schuppe, $3; C. K. Robinson, $6.75; George Lathrop, $5.50; D. K. Griswold, $3.30; J. W. M'Keeven, $3.75.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—Postage on THE INDEX is five cents per quarter, dating from receipt of the first number, payable in advance at the place of delivery.

N. B.—When writing about a former remittance, always give the date of such remittance as exactly as possible.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

RECEIVED.

Books.

THE LEGENDS OF THE OLD TESTAMENT, Traced to their Apparent Primitive Sources. By Thomas Lumisden Strange, late a Judge of the High Court of Madras. London: Trübner & Co., 57 and 59 Ludgate Hill. 1874.

THE DEVELOPMENT OF CREATION ON THE EARTH. By Thomas Lumisden Strange. London: Trübner & Co. 1874.

THE BUILDING OF A BRAIN. By Edward H. Clarke, M.D., Author of Sex in Education. Boston: J. R. Osgood & Co. 1874.

Pamphlets and Periodicals.

PRIMITIVE CHURCH HISTORY.—WHAT IS THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND? A Question for the Age. By an Ex-Clergyman.—SIGNS OF THE TIMES.—PROFESSOR TYNDALL'S ADDRESS. (From the Inquirer.)—All published by Thomas Scott, Esq., of London. 1874.

DER MATERIALISMUS. Von P. Engelmann. Abwehr und Zurückweisung der auf den Materialismus und dessen Anhänger von einem evgl. Pastor gemachten öffentlichen Angriffe. Milwaukee: Biron & Brucker. 1874.

THE UNITARIAN REVIEW. October, 1874. Boston: L. C. Bowles.

The Index.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY
BY
THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,
AT
NO. 1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.
Toledo Office: No. 35 Monroe Street. Julius T. Frey, Agent and Clerk.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

Francis Ellingwood Abbot, ... Editor.
Abram Walter Stevens, ... Associate Editor.
Octavius Brooks Frothingham, Thomas Wentworth Higginson, William J. Potter, Richard P. Hallowell, William H. Spencer, Mrs. E. D. Cheney, Rev. Charles Voysey (England), Prof. Francis W. Newman (England), Editorial Contributors.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

BOSTON, OCTOBER 15, 1874.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

A Convention of the Free Religious Association is to be held in Providence, at Howard Hall, beginning Wednesday evening, the 28th of October, and holding through Thursday, the 29th. Messrs. Frothingham, Higginson, Weiss, Abbot, Gannett, Mrs. Cheney, and other speakers are expected to be present. Further particulars will be given hereafter in the Providence papers.

Wm. J. Potter, Sec'y F. R. A.

Costume Concerts are to be given for the benefit of the Appleton Temporary Home at Tremont Temple, beginning November 2 and continuing through the week. Tickets, 75 cents: for sale at Oliver Ditson's Music Store, 277 Washington St., Boston.

The Index will be sent to any name not now on our mail-list until January 1, 1876, on receipt of $3.00 in advance. Here is a chance to receive the paper for fifteen months at the price of twelve months. Please tell your friends and neighbors of this liberal offer, and help us to increase our circulation.

An article in Col. Higginson's Woman's Journal, which we reprint elsewhere, rebukes us for referring to that paper as "the rather dull setting of weekly jewels" of his own. This he calls a "sneer;" it was a compliment, and well deserved. That we find his articles by far the most readable part of that journal may be evidence of a defective taste; but we find ourself in a large company of people with the same defect. As to the rest of the article, we would rather leave it unanswered: if the rebukes it administers are just, they are deserved, but if not, our readers will find that out for themselves.

"Natural morality" we take to be the sum total of moral relations as they really ought to be in themselves, and not as they are conceived to be by men. Our knowledge of them, like our knowledge of everything else, is necessarily imperfect, and subject to constant correction by experience and thought. Hence, on the one hand, natural morality never changes, but is "immutable;" while, on the other hand, the knowledge of it is a "progressive science," and changes constantly as men grow wiser. The distinction we point out is analogous to that which might be drawn between mathematical truth and the science of mathematics. Nobody supposes that the square of the hypothenuse of a right-angled triangle was ever other than equal to the sum of the squares of the remaining two sides; yet nobody supposes that this truth was known to man when he was living in the Stone Age. Mathematics as a science have had a history; so has morality as a science. But both have for their subject-matter what is in its essence eternal. Whatever, for instance, men have thought about truth-telling (and lying has been more than once thought virtuous), was it ever anything but a virtue in itself? The moment one comprehends that moral relations are fixed by the nature of things, although the human race is continually learning to understand them better, he must see that no will can be the basis of moral obligation, and must grasp without difficulty the meaning of the phrase "natural morality." It would be impossible to "raise the standard of natural morality;" all that can be raised is the comprehension and the practice of it. Perhaps these brief statements will answer some inquiries recently put to us.

ON BEHALF OF THE INDIANS.

Since our last issue, we have received a call from Mr. John Beeson, more familiarly known as "Father Beeson," who for the past twenty years has devoted nearly his whole time, and a large part of his personal means, to efforts for the protection and elevation of the Indians. The following extract from a letter written to him under date of September 30, 1874, by Mr. D. W. C. Duncan, a Cherokee Indian of mixed blood, will show that he has won the confidence of at least one well-educated member of a much-wronged race: "In the first place let me express to you my sincere gratitude for the interest you have taken in my race. What could have prompted you to do so? Are you the only white man that can see anything in the Indian worth caring for? Perhaps not. Yet it sometimes seems as though all mankind, both saints and sinners, have joined hands against us. It is certainly very gratifying to know that there is even one white man who is willing, only from motives of pure benevolence, to befriend the Indians. God bless us!"

Our first impression was that nothing practical could be done to reach the deep-seated causes of public indifference towards the Indians. There has been abundant talk and but little valuable action on the part of those who would like to see simple justice to them secured. But a favorable opportunity seems now to offer itself for doing something tangible in the way of helping to a just solution of the Indian question, and between us this subscription paper was drawn up for immediate circulation in this vicinity by Mr. Beeson himself:—

Boston, Oct. 8, 1874.

We, the undersigned, desire to hold a public meeting in Boston at an early day, in order to appoint and send one or more delegates to a general council of the various tribes in the Indian Territory, already called to assemble in that Territory in the first week of November, and to raise sufficient funds to defray their necessary expenses. The object in sending these delegates is to obtain from the Indians themselves an authentic statement, from their own point of view, of the reasons why the "peace policy" of the Administration has thus far failed,—of their actual wrongs, grievances, and causes of complaint against the United States government,—and of the special measures of redress which they themselves desire. We hereby pledge ourselves to pay the sums set opposite our respective names whenever the total amount subscribed shall have reached two hundred ($200.00) dollars, for the purpose of paying all the expenses of the meeting above described.

Mr. Beeson undertook the disagreeable task of going about in person to raise as much as possible of the requisite amount, and to secure such speakers as Wendell Phillips, William Lloyd Garrison, Henry Wilson, and other friends of the Indians, for the meeting itself. It would seem that so simple and unpretending, yet really worthy and feasible movement, ought to succeed. There would be great value in a direct statement by the Indians themselves, assembled in general council, of their own wrongs and wants; and the presence of one or more delegates, sent on purpose to express the sympathy and promise the coöperation of white friends of their race, would probably stimulate them to make an earnest appeal to the justice-loving portion of the American people. This would undoubtedly be published by the press all over the country, help to influence legislation at Washington, and strengthen the hands of the Administration in what we believe to be a sincere general purpose (though it has been sometimes, as in the case of the Custer expedition, wofully betrayed) to deal fairly with the Indians. Everything in the line of reform in this country depends on public opinion; and it seems to be a sober and reasonable expectation that real good would result from such a delegation as is proposed. Mr. Beeson himself stands ready to go to the Indian council, as a member of the delegation, and perhaps a companion might be found to accompany him. For these reasons we wish to help the project of this self-sacrificing man as much as possible, and therefore submit the foregoing statement to our readers.

Whoever is interested in the Indian question, and satisfied that the plan now proposed is a practical one, may send his contribution to our personal address; we agree to report in these columns all sums thus received, and to pay them over to the person or persons who may be appointed to receive them at the contemplated public meeting, when held. If the meeting should not be held after all, or if in our judgment any other reason exists why the money ought not to be paid out, we further agree to refund the same to the contributors. Any surplus above the sum required for the actual expenses of the meeting will be available in carrying out the objects for which it is called. How many friends the Indians may have among our readers, we do not know; but we hope that all who are such will improve this opportunity of doing them what promises to be a substantial service.

TYNDALL'S CORRECTION.

Professor Tyndall, in the revision of his Belfast address for the press, has altered the already famous passage in which he spoke of matter as containing "the promise and potency of every form and quality of life." It now reads thus: "By an intellectual necessity I cross the boundary of experimental evidence, and discern in that matter which we, in our ignorance of its latent powers, . . . have hitherto covered with opprobium, the promise and potency of all terrestrial life."

The addition of the phrase "by an intellectual necessity" is a hint at that use of the "scientific imagination" for which Tyndall is a strong advocate, and is probably intended as his defence against the charge of an unscientific procedure in "prolonging the vision backwards across," or (as he now puts it more briefly) "crossing," the "boundary of experimental evidence." We should interpret this new phrase as really a recognition of the absurdity of supposing that facts do not necessitate the logical inferences which they potentially contain. Nobody but an idiot can stop with "experimental evidence," as this is usually conceived; there is an iron connection between premise and conclusion which couples "experimental evidence" with trans-experimental consequences in all minds that are gifted with any degree of reasoning power. In other words, it is useless to treat such results of thought as the law of natural selection, for instance, as if it were a mere "hypothesis" that could be approved or discarded on a balancing of probabilities. Some things are certain, if other things are true; and Tyndall is justified in refusing to be tied down to bare facts, if these facts are pregnant with necessary truth. Whether in this instance he has got in all the facts that must be included before the somewhat vague inference he draws can become a necessity, is another question. His right to "cross the boundary" is indisputable; but he does not make it sufficiently clear where he pitches his tent.

The substitution of "all terrestrial life" for "every form and quality of life" is a seeming concession to the opposition; but we doubt if it is really one. We suspect that in Tyndall's own mind the two phrases are exactly equivalent. At least, we see no reason to think otherwise, and cannot comprehend how, as has been inferred, it "makes a vast difference in the argument." In Tyndall's view, sensation and thought are probably just as much phenomena of terrestrial life as alimentation or respiration; and, if so, the hazy materialism he espouses has lost none of its haze. On the other hand, we suspect that the super-terrestrial, celestial, or Divine life which is too hastily supposed to be conceded by implication in this renovated phraseology, would by no means come under the Professor's purely scientific conception of "life" in any case. If we are correct in these surmises, then the substitution in question is no recognition, direct or indirect, of super-material life either in man or out of man. The phrase he first used was not applicable to anything but "life" in its restricted or organic sense, and hence had nothing to do with "Divine life," unless this is conceived as dependent on organism; while the new phrase is just as inclusive as the old of "every form and quality" of "human life." Matter is still set forth as including the "promise and potency" of all that is in man; while it was not before set forth as including the "promise and potency" of any life that is not in human or inferior organisms. Hence, were it not for Tyndall's frank admission that material or molecular causes will not explain "sensation and thought," we should suppose him to be a consistent and rigorous materialist; but, now as before, that admission, set over against the amended passage, takes all the consistency out of him. Really, do we know to-day whether he is a "materialist" or not? Whoever is sure of either alternative must be so in obvious neglect of evidence that contradicts it. There is such a thing as thorough-going materialism, of which Dr. Büchner is one of the consistent and most illustrious advocates; but it is at the least improbable that Professor Tyndall should be classed with Büchner and his companions. Future expositions of his thought will lose none of their interest; the dénouement of its development has not yet been reached.

THE SINS OF CHRISTIANITY.

Professor Newman wrote thus in an article in Fraser's Magazine for last June: "THE INDEX frequently shows itself unjust to Christianity by imputing to Christian doctrine all the vices, swindlings, and high crimes of Christian professors. Christianity (forsooth) ought to keep its professors moral! Even the baseness of the Tammany ring and official roguery is put down to the discredit of Christianity." We remember nothing whatever in these columns that would justify such a charge as this, which, if unsustained, is exceedingly unjust. Is it impossible to oppose the anti-Christian position except by glaring misrepresentation? Certainly it seems so. What we have really charged upon Christianity is, not all the sins of its professors, but all such sins as are encouraged and fostered by its essential doctrines; for instance, the punishment of heresy as a crime, the denial of intellectual freedom, the circumscription of human brotherhood by sectarian lines, the debasement of reason in order to exalt faith, the deterioration of ethics which follows from making an "inspired book" the test of morality, etc., etc. All these things have resulted in the greatest and gravest wrongs to mankind; let him who can clear the skirts of Christianity from the guilt and stain of them. But such sins or crimes as have no particular relation to Christian ideas (e. g. cheating, swindling, theft, murder) we have never charged to Christianity. That such gross misrepresentation as is contained in the extract we have quoted should be made in a first-class English magazine, edited by the historian Froude,—made, too, by one so universally respected as Professor Newman,—is not a pleasant thought; but we suppose there is no prospect of redress, and turn to the work in hand.

RELIGION IN ART.

The suggestive little paragraph in THE INDEX of October 3 was in my mind as I looked at the very interesting pictures of the Spanish and German school now on exhibition at the Athenæum. They do indeed offer most fruitful studies of the typical character, not only of the two nations, but of the two churches which they represent; but they brought to my thoughts not so much the superiority of the new school over the old, as the dangers that surround the new, and the great import and beauty of some of the characteristics of the old faith which we must beware lest we lose altogether, and so misrepresent human nature and carry on human progress only in crab-wise, sidling fashion.

Kaulbach's representation is well spoken of as "masculine;" the womanly side of human nature is recognized only in Queen Elizabeth. Why should not Isabella of Castile have stood beside Columbus, Vittoria Colonna held high converse with Michael Angelo and Savonarola, and the wife of Luther appeared as his aid in the great work of translating the Bible?

The whole picture, like the Protestant Church, is full of power and admirable drawing, strong individuality, and noble expression; but it is not organic, it has no unity in it, it does not glow with sentiment nor blossom into beauty. The cold, neutral tints of the cartoon seem well adapted to the subject, and, from what we know of the German school of color, we should hardly expect any better effect in the finished painting.

But the Madonna and altar-pieces in the other room attract the eye at once by their rich glow of light and color. Humanity is there not as will and intellect (for herein Kaulbach's work is immensely superior), but as love and human relation. All is limited, narrow in its range, but having a unity and perfection which satisfies us for the moment, if it leaves us to question afterward.

The mysteries of spiritual life are indicated, but with loving, tender sweetness; the angels seem as natural actors in the human drama as the woman or the soldiers. Woman is here the central figure, in one phase only, in one relation,—not the highest nor the broadest, but the tenderest and the most touching. The peasant girl is ennobled by the glory of maternity. In the Annunciation, the attitude and action are very simple, and the figure at first seems inexpressive; but, as you gaze, you catch the listening of her soul to the breathings of hope and faith that come with the promised blessing, and you recognize that the angels, unseen by her, are filling her with the power of life and love which she is to bestow upon her offspring. So Swedenborg has said that the highest angels surround a woman who is bearing her part in the divine work of creation. These unseen forces of spiritual help and life are as shadowy and indefinable as electricity and ozone; but are they not as real and as potent? Will not spiritual science some day learn the laws of their action, and substantiate as fact what poetry and religion have given us as faith and beauty?

The path to this recognition of the union of intellect and faith, of the marriage of masculine individuality and feminine attraction, lies indeed through Free Religion. But the second word is as important as the first. Free to expand, it must also be loyal to the centre. Free to investigate, it must be faithful in preserving the truth. Clear and definite in statement of the ideal, it must also be genial and affectionate in clothing it in form and expression. Protestant in its position towards all oppression, falsehood, and wrong, it must be catholic in its relation to all that is good and human.

If the bright side of the Catholic Church is here presented, its dark and morbid side are not forgotten. The pathetic but painful Pietà and the disgusting Martyrdom remind us of the extravagances and abuses from which the brave men represented on the other canvas have freed us. Better the cold air and barren mountains of Germany, than the lurid glow of the Spanish Inquisition; but do either of these represent to us the church of the future? Do we not see the need of foundations laid broader and deeper in human nature than either of these Churches of the past have built upon? But must they not be laid in the same strength and courage as the one, and the same loving reverence and acceptance of beauty and mystery as the other?

E. D. C.

PROF. TYNDALL'S ADDRESS.

Much has been and is being said and written about this remarkable discourse, both by those who agree with and those who dissent from it. The pretension which I here make to discuss it is a very modest one; but having carefully read the address in its complete published form, and experienced in its perusal the most hearty satisfaction, I feel moved to allude to a few of its points which specially engaged my attention.

And, in the first place, I am struck with the singularly high, pure, and fine spirit in which the whole address seems to have been conceived, as well as with the fair, candid, and gracious style in which it is written. Although every sentence is kindled with a brave and ardent purpose, no undue heat characterizes a single word. From bitterness and denunciation and sarcasm and ridicule and dogmatism it is entirely free. Through the lists of discussion the eminent author rides with a knightly and courteous bearing, and no adversary whom he meets can accuse him of dealing an unfair blow. Surely, for truth much is to be expected as the result of discussion, when her most famous retainers come up to contend for her in this really magnanimous and gallant fashion. Would that all who undertake to speak and write upon the great mooted subjects of the day might do it in the admirable spirit and style of Prof. Tyndall. And I am especially glad that, in the points of controversy between science and religion, three such famous illustrators of the scientific phase of thought, as Darwin, Spencer, and Tyndall, should hold up an example so worthy to be followed by their opponents. The advocates of religion have much to learn from these men of science, not only as to the subject matter in controversy, but as to the spirit and style in which the discussion shall be conducted.

In the second place, I am impressed with the superb moral tone that vibrates through every page of the discourse. I do not use this word moral in the flabby and insipid sense in which it is generally employed by religious writers, nor in the superficial one of ordinary conventional usage. I would borrow a little of that splendid ring which some of the old pagans were wont to impart to the word moral, and which makes it indicate, not mere goodiness of feeling and tame conformity of conduct, but a lofty, inspired, and virile energy in the pursuit of truth, an enthusiastic devotion to its service, a subdued joy in the recognition of it, and a kindling sense of its deep ethical significance. There is a certain "ethic glow" (I borrow the phrase from the author himself) throughout this whole masterly address, which, while it is impossible not to feel, is equally impossible to describe. Not for victory in controversy does Prof. Tyndall write, but for truth,—that he and all men may discover and own it. "An impulse inherent in primeval man turned my thoughts and questionings betimes towards the sources of natural phenomena,"—these are the grand words with which he opens his address, and they give the key-note of his entire effort. The unquenchable love of knowledge, the sublime curiosity to know the cause and the nature of whatsoever exists, which has been the impulse animating the human mind from the beginning, and which impulse has borne on humanity in the path of progress through all ages,—this "ethical requirement" (again I borrow a phrase from Prof. Tyndall) of our common human nature is what our author feels and surrenders himself to, and what gives illumination and tone to his kindling sentences. What Prof. Tyndall so justly and generously says of Mr. Darwin, we may with equal truth say of him, that, "though in handling his mighty theme all passion has been stilled, there is an emotion of the intellect incident to the discernment of new truth, which often colors and warms his pages." This "emotion of the intellect" is a rare but beautiful quality in scientific and philosophical writers; and when we see it combined with real ability and logical clearness, it is a consummation of intellectual and ethical genius which excludes all cause of discontent. "The discernment of new truth" would, indeed, seem to be the inevitable natal hour both of mental and of spiritual joy,—the only new birth, one might think, which any man of good sense could desire to have. We want more recognition of this "ethical requirement" of our human nature, more of this fine "ethic glow," in the writings of our scientific and philosophical men; and when we shall have it, our books of science and philosophy will be as inspiring reading as our poems and scriptures.

In the third place, I fail to find any disguised or undisguised atheism or materialism in this address; and, temperamentally, I think that I am as sensitive to either as well nigh any one can be. It is very easy to discover what sort of a God Prof. Tyndall does not believe in. He does not believe in the deus ex machina. He does not believe in the clock-maker God. He does not believe in the God that creates something out of nothing, and of which something he is not a necessary part. He does not believe in the Creator-God at all, who stands off from the substance which he is not, giving it a primal push, and an occasional tinkering touch, and maintaining a personal independence of it forever. But is he necessarily atheistic because denying such a God? Most Christians would esteem him so, no doubt. Yet let us remember what Epicurus taught: "Not he is godless [atheist] who rejects the gods of the crowds, but rather he who accepts them." In the deepest spirit of reverence of which I am capable, I say all gratitude be to science for dethroning and destroying for us the "gods of the crowds,"—by which I mean not only the heathen deities, but the ordinary God of the Christians; the God of the Old Testament, and, largely, the God of the New. Even Jesus' God is not the God in whom, in many respects, men of reason and of enlightened faith can believe. He, too, is one of "the gods of the crowds," whom we shall have either to make smartly over, or remand among the obsolete deities of an ignorant and superstitious age.

Prof. Tyndall and his compeers in science are only doing for this age what Democritus, Epicurus, and Lucretius did for theirs; namely, ridding it of the belief in a God external to and apart from the universe itself—an arbitrary, capricious, fickle, and anthropomorphic deity. In the place of such a God, they are demonstrating to us a permanent force, an invariable law in Nature, and an unbroken process of evolution from the lower to the higher forms of existence. It is not strange that some should discover only atheism and materialism in this; yet we have but to take a second view, and to wait for a deeper insight, to discover that "permanent force," "invariable law," "unbroken continuity of development," "primal, mechanical shock of atoms," "cosmical life," intrinsic "promise and potency" of matter, are only other and better names of deity, or new definitions of that mystery of the universe before which reverent men of science how no less than the special devotees of religion. "The principle of every change resides in matter," says Gassendi. But what is matter? Prof. Tyndall well says that "everything depends on the answer to be given to this question." Suppose it should be proven that matter is as good as spirit,—nay, that there is no matter without spirit, and no spirit without matter,—who can object? Let God and the soul be dispelled if they can be; in trying to dispel them, we may discover them more clearly and fully than before.

But Prof. Tyndall is not trying to dispel God and the soul; he is only trying to state such facts about the universe as he has come upon. The deep "mystery" that lies at the heart of the cosmos, that underlies the "beginnings of things,"—that he affirms, but does not audaciously expound. The natural sentiment of the human heart, which reverences this "mystery," Prof. Tyndall profoundly respects. He even says that "to yield this sentiment reasonable satisfaction is the problem of problems at the present hour." No warfare between science and religion does he proclaim. Spoiling for a fight between these he is not. He only demands that religion shall not assume any authority over science, but shall gracefully yield to instruction in matters where science is wiser than she. Those who are not willing that religion shall do as much as this had best say good-by to religion altogether. "The lifting of life is the essential point," says the professor; and in this sublime work, if each will agree to mind its own, science and religion may walk hand in hand.

A. W. S.

TEETOTALISM.

"Is it right," asks a correspondent, "for persons in health to drink, as a beverage, anything that will intoxicate? This is not intended as a question of personal freedom; I would like your opinion on the subject, scientifically considered." To this question no answer seems to us possible but this: it is sometimes right and sometimes wrong. The mere act of drinking a glass of wine, for instance, as a beverage, is innocent or guilty according to circumstances, which we cannot reduce to any formula beforehand. Every Christian communicant considers it a sacred duty at the "Lord's table;" it would certainly be wrong for a reformed inebriate to touch a drop of anything that might revive his slumbering passion. That there is any inherent wickedness in drinking a glass of wine with a friend under suitable circumstances, is a proposition too absurd to be maintained; but it would be worse than absurd to forget the great danger of forming a habit which may prove the sure road to ruin. As a rule, the less liquor a man drinks, the better for him and all concerned; but we believe that America has much to learn from Germany and France in the wise use of mild stimulants. Personally we care little for them and seldom use them, although not a teetotaller; but we believe that intemperance would be greatly reduced in the community, if something like the German beer-garden, conducted with strict decorum, should be generally regarded with favor. Such views as these cannot be met wisely by a howl of denunciation; we commend them to temperate consideration.

Communications.

CHRISTIANITY AND MORALITY.

BATTLE CREEK, Mich., Sept. 12, 1874.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

In the course of a conversation some days since, I had occasion to mention the moral character of some representative Free Religionists, as tending to show that the holding of opinions at variance with the doctrine of the Christian theology did not necessitate a decline of moral sensibility; but, on the other hand, as evidenced in the lives referred to, left even the religious emotions active and deep as in those whose inspirations were drawn from Calvary, and the expiation of sin through faith in another's work (the inspiration and incentive in the former case being the boundless goodness of God in so adapting the universe to the faculties of mankind as to confer the highest rewards upon the highest culture and the purest life, thus offering a constant motive to the race to be intelligent and moral). It was objected that this religious activity was something held over from early Christian training and was not to be credited to such an apprehension of God as that taught by men of THE INDEX school; and that no such examples could be taken as showing the kind of character to be produced by this system of denials. In order to make a fair showing for Free Religion, the subject must owe much less to Christian civilization than any person could possibly owe whose early life had been moulded and colored by its energies in the very construction of our society, as well as through its special organizations and doctrines.

The point of interest is just here: How much are we really indebted to Christianity for the moral sense that upholds civilized society? Subtracting Christianity from our civilization, what is left of it, and what is the lineage of the remainder?

I should be glad if you, or some one that you know to be competent, would give in THE INDEX such a statement of this matter as the truth warrants. It would be of great interest and profit to me and, presumably, to many others. AN INQUIRER.

[Go back to the origin of Christianity: whence was derived Christian morality itself? From natural sources. Did Jesus invent the moral principles he taught, or were they even first taught in his day? Research has proved the contrary. The few elementary moral laws from which our present moral code naturally follows are all so simple as to have forced themselves on human notice long before Jesus was born, and in many places where he had never been heard of; and they would be equally well known (and practised, as we believe), if he had never been born at all. No doubt a special coloring has been given to natural morality by the Christian gospel,—not often to its improvement, however. But the point we make is that moral principles are "revealed" in the moral situations of life itself, and are thus contained in all human experience; as society is evolved, they become clearer and better understood, and are taught by word and example more successfully to each new generation. When Christianity has become an unheeded mythology, the morality of the world will not suffer on that account, because morality has really nothing to do with any mythology; and if any change is to be expected, it will probably be a change for the better alone, since the sum of human experience, from which all morality is a deduction, will have been increased. To our correspondent's questions, therefore, we should reply that we are indebted to human experience in general, not specially to Christianity, for "the moral sense that upholds civilized society;" that, when Christianity has faded away as an existent religion, morality will be left wholly untouched and unweakened; and that the "lineage" of morality is the lineage of human nature itself.—ED.]

"Why should the Freethinker be more immoral than the Religionist? He has every inducement to be a moral man, without any of the frantic and enthusiastic incentives of religion to hurry him into immorality. The Freethinker is opposed to delusion, to error, to falsehood, only because they are fatal to the interests, fatal to the happiness of society, and at war with the welfare of mankind. The Freethinker has a code to which he conforms himself, founded upon facts, built upon experience, guided by reason. He walks through the garden of Nature, converting only the wholesome and delicious fruits to his use; experience teaches him to refuse, to cast aside the noxious and poisonous plants. To receive nourishment, to feel pleasure, and to communicate these to others, is the moving principle of the Freethinker. Thus he becomes serviceable to his fellow-creatures; his whole life is taken up in making those around him happy, that he may enjoy happiness himself; that his acquaintance may feel interested in his welfare, may smile upon his prosperity, may share his felicity. He fears no revenging and implacable phantoms of superstition; he worships no unknown powers; he seeks for no laws out of the world which he inhabits; he asks not for a rule of action from the arch-priest, from the insane devotee, or the morose bigot. His whole conduct is squared—not by any fanciful theory—not by any chimerical system—but by the duties of morality; these, unlike the various contradictory chimeras of the religionist, remain the same; founded upon truth, they are eternal."—From "The Correspondent:" New York, September 13, 1828.

THE FREE-LOVE CONVENTION.

EDITOR OF INDEX:—

I can hardly blame Bishop Ferrette for criticising the convention held in Parker Memorial Hall a few weeks since. I think a large proportion of the Spiritualists in this vicinity and elsewhere would do the same thing. I also looked in at that convention, at most of the sessions, taking no interest except curiosity. It could with as much propriety be called a cattle-show as a Spiritualists' convention, and it is this fact that leads me to write this letter. There was but a very slight sprinkling of Boston Spiritualists present, and many of those, like myself, were present from curiosity rather than interest. The subject of Spiritualism was entirely left out; I did not hear it touched upon, and after inquiry I find no one that did. It was freedom, free love, stirpiculture, woman's ownership, Hullism, repertorial shortcomings, and other cognate subjects that were discussed or ventilated at this convention. Many persons came in, attracted by the name, I have no doubt, who may be satisfied with this first attempt to understand Spiritualism. One person I knew of that class, and I had to tell him out of self-respect (he knowing me to be a Spiritualist) that this convention was a ship sailing under false colors.

I do not intend any reflection on the bright or dimmed experts representing the subjects treated there. They have a perfect right to discuss the subjects they did and in the way they did; that is a matter of taste and attraction. But they had no right to call it a Spiritualists' convention. No one will accuse me of being anything but a radical, and I think I can claim to be an outspoken Spiritualist. Having been satisfied of the fundamental truth of Spiritualism, I have not been backward in declaring myself one; I follow where truth leads, and take the consequences.

I am aware the community groans under its hypocrisy, that the evils that the "spouters" of this convention complain of are not much, if any, overstated; but the plans offered for improvement are defective. Their cure seems to some (of whom I am one) to be worse than the disease; and "free love," as understood by most people and as taught by the orators of this convention, is not indorsed by the larger and better portion of Spiritualists. "Better portion" will not probably be understood; it has a tinge of pretension about it; so I will add—I mean those who have become convinced that life "jumps" the grave, and the "departed" are invisibly communicative and interested in the affairs of this life or in us, but who do not wish to be "disturbers of the peace," unless humanity is to gain something by the disturbance. The larger, if not the better, portion of the Spiritualists do not see the "gain" in the revolution of home and social life that these "freedom-shriekers" are hoping for. Certainly, people can have this evidence of a future life, and be happy in that evidence, and believe also that through it logically, as it becomes more universal, these crying and admitted evils will be cured, and yet see no connection between this belief and the outside issues which some are forever mixing it up with. Bishop Ferrette, and others like-minded, will understand by what I have tried to say that, when he was in Parker Memorial Hall on the 17th of September, he was not in a Spiritualist convention, and it was an offence to a good many Spiritualists to call it one.

JOHN WETHERBEE.

REFORM OF THE LAWS.

BALTIMORE, Sept. 5, 1874.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT:

My dear Sir,—Since THE INDEX has come down from the theological and metaphysical clouds, and turned its attention to the great needs of this present world, and begun to lay the corner-stone of the church of the heavenly present, recognizing the beneficent gifts Nature has bestowed upon man, and the very imperfect and incomplete use thus far made of these omnipresent benefits, my heart and soul are with you in the great work of construction which must accompany and keep pace with the necessary and extensive work of destruction for which we radicals are become notorious. Hide-bound and fossilized theologists and legalists accuse us of being iconoclasts simply, and demand of us something better than the creeds and laws which we have found unfit for an advanced society, and upon which we have passed our condemnation. Our work, to be successful, must be constructive as well as destructive. Now the wise are ready to learn even from their enemies. The wise general is ever on the alert to discover and possess himself of armament, discipline, or plan, superior or at least equal to those of the opposing army. Confucius long ago wrote in substance: "It is useless to reform or convert a man over forty years of age;" and the great wisdom of the Romish Church is displayed in the recognition of the opposing fact that the infant mind is like "clay in the hands of the potter," moulded at will, receiving any impression stamped thereon, which with the advance of time becomes an indelible impression. If mothers are the moulders of the race, and the child is the embryo of the man, how important is it that we who believe in development should invent and organize better methods of education and development for the children of radicals than the hoary, gray-headed, and mythical ones which ought to and will pass away with a rapidity proportioned to that with which things better are developed to supplant them. All hail to "Liberty and Light!" Environed as we are by the effete and unexecuted or badly executed enactments of a ruder society—enactments conserved and guarded by a priestcraft of legality—whose end is gain, and whose methods are belligerent as well as dishonest, how ripe is the hour for some sagacious radical reformer of the laws! Should not the question of the hour for him be: "How many and which of these effete enactments and cumbrous methods can modern society dispense with?" When seeing such men as Andrew and Phillips, who were bred to the law, devoting themselves zealously to humanitarian reforms, but doing nothing to re-organize and reform the law itself, I have said to myself, How hopelessly uncandid, sordid, or superstitious is the priesthood of law! Society is justified in enacting and executing laws for the protection of persons and property; but when it oversteps these bounds in the present age, it assumes functions which it has no right to exercise, and curtails the offices and restricts the efficient activity of the individual in the acquirement of education, culture, and self-government, and hinders knowledge by abridging the opportunities of experiment and the attainment of practical truths and correct methods; in other words, it curtails liberty and shuts out light. We radicals must organize a division of labor. Are there not some possessing knowledge of these outgrown laws upon our statute-books (which we are all presumed to know, but of which we the people are in profound ignorance), some who will organize a college or academy of law and equity whose business it shall be to enlighten the people as to what useless, by-gone, and absurd enactments now exist and should be abrogated,—construct and press upon our legislatures an improved and uniform code based upon modern principles and rational methods? We are creed-bound, church-bound, law-bound; help us to destroy the rubbish of antiquity, and enable us with liberty and light to erect better and more commodious accommodations for modern men and women.

Public opinion is not only under but above all legislative enactment. The course of these sequences consumes time, and God's mill grinds slowly but very sure. The honest of us may be crushed between the mill-stones of public opinion; but still the grist of progress will be ground, and the martyrs of the present, though rejected to-day, shall become the canonized saints of the future. The people through habit number their creeds while forgetting their meanings; we leave unexecuted laws, and forget their existence till the statute-books are cumbrous with the rubbish, and we keep avaricious and expensive legal monks to resurrect them when occasion requires. Is there not a Luther or a Calvin ripe and ready to ventilate, and agitate law reforms? BENJ. S. PRICE.

CHRISTIAN CRUELTY.

In the town of B., in northern New Hampshire, J. W., a farmer's child, received injury of the head, causing imbecility. Years increased his intractableness, yet, as harmless, he ran at large, until he developed the impulse to rend his clothing. Thenceforward, not for an instant would he tolerate a shred, and he was confined in a miserable out-house, where his aged father, seeming alone to pity, cared for him as his own dependence allowed, sleeping with the imbecile, and supplying in coldest weather a little fire on an open chimney place. "Farmed out" by the town, when, by death, the father's ministrations ceased, hard was the lot of this unfortunate, left to the tender mercies of brothers and their wives, who, at odd times, threw the wretch potato skins and scant allowance of the garbage of swine.

My brothers, for a time in his vicinity, on a bleak October's day, visited our subject, chained, naked, and shivering in his hovel, through which blew the cold wind of the region. His utterance was like the bleating of a calf. An apple, thrown to the emaciated wretch, he devoured like a famished wolf. Evidently, his were constant pangs of hunger and of cold, except in warm summer days. A little scattered straw the brainless sufferer knew not enough to nestle in, nor use for warmth, sleeping or waking. Imagine the condition of naked humanity in a fireless hovel, in temperature ranging from the nineties in summer to the freezing of mercury in winter! He was unprotected by hair, as if just stripped; wild and restive, moving or jumping the length of his chain; anon, crouching over ashes of a transient wood fire, picking them over and over in vain search for one live bit of coal that might warm his shivering body. Hunting thus was his occupation. Not fabled Prometheus gnawed by vulture, nor Tantalus ever thirsting, is so pathetic as this crouching idiot searching for warmth that flashed only to make the cold keener through nine long months of every year. A foot was lacking. It had frozen and sloughed off, some previous winter. In healing (without human aid) suppuration was long and copious, and report averred that the famished creature used to scrape off and greedily swallow the pus.

Said my informant, "That dreadful sight disturbed my nightly rest." Indeed, his description did the sleep of the writer, whose account is feeble compared to the other. With the cold of autumn came a feeling that even I ought to do something for relief of such suffering. I wrote the acting Orthodox clergyman of B., imploring his aid in so dreadful a case. The reverend clergyman deigned not even a reply. The urgency of soul-saving, doubtless, hindered him from meddling in affairs outside. As I retired the bitter nights of that winter, "my heart's desire" was that the idiot might die. But I heard no more. How many years thereafter he starved, and froze, and thawed, I know not.

Now the remarkable fact is that this abiding horror was in a community highly Christian. Its Orthodoxy was wealthy and influential. The Rev. David S., a Scotchman, had long dispensed "the pure milk of the word" of Scotch Presbyterianism, rich and precious, insomuch that devotees from far climbed forbidding hills to partake. "Sinners" (whatever that might mean) saw but a "bad look," so bad and sulphurous, indeed, that reaction must come, and a Universalist society was instituted; whereupon "there was war" and more brimstone.

The combatants had little time for humanity in general—none for their poor.

Yet this community was hardly worse than others, corrupted, all, by false theology and ideas of this life, contemned in view of the future.

As for the torture by neglect of one demented, is there not Christian authority for that, and more? Jesus deemed them possessed of devils, and are such to be entertained and cherished? If kindness to the insane and idiotic is Christian, then are Christians slow to learn, for Christendom's treatment of these has been revoltingly inhuman. The blessed asylums for the defective classes are a modern outgrowth of enlightened humanity, not of sectarianism.

In any view, a case like this narrated is bewildering, making the head of the philanthropist droop with shame and sadness, misdoubting whether mankind be not allied to the hyena or the ghoul.

CHARLES HAZELTINE.

NEW BEDFORD, Mass.

LIBERAL LEAGUES AND SECRET ORGANIZATIONS.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

In your editorial notes upon the communication on "Secret Organization Proposed" in THE INDEX of Sept. 3, you say: "Further thoughts on it will be carefully heeded." Permit me to give a few thoughts which crowd upon me from this far-off standpoint down South.

And first, a word regarding the Liberal League in this city. I refused to become a member of it because it was a secret organization, and because for that reason its objects were not understood by the masses, although several of the Demands of Liberalism, without regard to their name or source, had been endorsed by the press of this State irrespective of political bias.

It would astonish many who have supposed this secret organization to be opposed to the spirit of a true republic to see the nine Demands nailed in conspicuous places, and thus to learn that there was no partisan character in them. They would very shortly find out that as many of one political party as of the other opposed them. It is safe to say that the Democracy of this State are more opposed to those nine Demands than the Republicans.

In your editorial columns of Aug. 20, you quote from a New Orleans letter, that "the Demands will not be likely to take with the negro population; the word liberal will kill them," etc. The word liberal has been an obstacle, for quite naturally a political application is at once supposed, and a secret organization would at once add fuel to that spark of distrust, when a plain statement from the house-tops and door-posts would scatter all such erroneous ideas, and leave religious liberty to grapple only with its legitimate, its well-known, foes.

I have conversed with intelligent colored men here, men of wealth, culture, and influence, and they are in perfect sympathy with the Demands for Religious Liberty as expressed in THE INDEX. I wish those Demands could always be so identified South. They express regret that those Demands have been erroneously supposed to have a party bias.

These well-informed colored men well know that the present supporters of these Demands are the ones who were foremost in the work of their emancipation. They need no information on this point. Their well-stocked libraries are filled with data, and they could to-day give facts and dates with as much precision as Parker Pillsbury or any other writer on the subject. They well know who constituted the backbone of slavery, namely, the Evangelical Church, and that the so-called infidels and liberal religionists were the first to place the entering wedge in position.

With such allies, it were a pity to throw the obstacles of secrecy in the way, when a clear and intelligent understanding of the Demands of Religious Liberty seems to be so much needed.

My own opinion regarding the Demands as a whole was expressed in Mr. George F. Talbot's article on the subject a year or more ago. I have always felt that the friends of religious liberty were not well enough informed by half. Any concealing of the truth must in a measure retard the spread of knowledge among the masses.

And finally, a secret organization will not accomplish what its own members could wish. There are always leaks, and but a short time would elapse before the real, the true objects of the organization would be known. If the object of secrecy was to avoid hostility, they would meet even more hostility when their covert plans were known. For an open, undisguised act will challenge respect and protection, when a secret one would excite hostility. In the latter case the suspicion would exist that the parties had something more concealed, and thence they would be adjudged worse than they really were. We need ventilation, not closed doors. My own hostility to some of the liberal movements was based upon the belief that we were working faster than the people could see or understand. Secrecy will only make such confusion worse confounded.

I have suffered too much myself for my outspoken views on religious liberty to ask any one else to follow me through such a fire; but let me say to all who think a secret organization a panacea for such ills, that it would not save them. Spend the same time in telling men what the League is not. Show the masses that religious liberty means (as I tell the colored man South) the right of every man to be religiously what he now is, so long as he likes it; if a Baptist, then a Baptist; if a Methodist, then a Methodist; if a Catholic, then a Catholic.

WILLIAM F. PERKINS.

NEW ORLEANS, La., Sept. 11, 1874.

A VOICE FROM THE "UNLETTERED."

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

I wish to call attention to the exaggerated importance which some writers, radical as well as Orthodox, attach to mere scholarship as related to vital religious questions. I hold that any person of good understanding and a fair education is in as good a position to judge correctly concerning all really important religious matters as is the most accomplished scholar; a view which might be illustrated and defended at length, were it not for the editorial admonition to be "short." A single extract from an INDEX writer may be given, however, as showing the confusion of thought that exists on the general subject: "The Bible holds many self-contradictions, and absurdities, and cruelties, but the very fact that they are so plain makes it hardly worth the while to spend one's time in picking them out and arranging them in lists: 'Three hundred contradictions in the Old Testament,' etc. Anybody can write these books; and the criticism which ends with that is almost as shallow—yes, all things considered, is probably shallower than the 'literal inspiration' at which it scoffs. There are men who, because they are scholars, can count up more of these things than we, and who speak out loud about them as frankly as Tom Paine himself, but whose look goes deeper. They sound, and dredge, and compare widely, where we only sail over the top reef-hunting." And so forth, and so forth.

Here—to borrow a figure from Mr. Frothingham—is an "abyss of obfuscation that fairly challenges a beam of light." In the first place, does the writer know that there are thousands of intelligent, fairly-educated men and women all around us who do not know that there are even twenty contradictions in the whole Bible? Is he aware that there are other thousands, of superior education, who will not admit that there is a single real contradiction or absurdity anywhere in the Scriptures? And further, does he know that these last depend on the very thing he has so good an opinion of, namely, scholarship, to prove themselves in the right? The truth seems to be that scholarship, as applied to religion, is remarkably like Protestant Christianity itself in this—that those who follow its methods can "prove" anything or nothing according to the humor. Common sense cuts the Gordian knot at once, and says: "What matters it whether these contradictions are real or apparent? Or, whether real or apparent, what matters it how they came there? The fact that they are there at all, to bother and perplex simple people, is sufficient proof that the book which contains them is not the work of any Deity whom an honest man might care to acknowledge." And then again, how happens it that what the writer calls "shallow" criticism is on the side of reason and truth, whereas the "deeper" kind leads to the "literal inspiration" vagary? Is an error any the better for being deep? The fact is, the writer makes the strange mistake throughout of confounding learning with depth; as though there were not plenty of good scholars who are shallow reasoners, as well as many fine thinkers who are but indifferent scholars. But it is not a question of depth at all.

Is the Bible the inspired word of God? Was Christ in any special sense the son of God? Are the stories told in the Bible concerning miracles true? These questions are of vital interest to every one. And they are questions which require for their solution nothing so much as clear heads, unbiased minds, and strong common sense. Scholarship has primarily nothing to do with them.

If the Bible is not the word of God, what is it? If Christ was not the son of God, who was he? If the stories of miracles contained in the Scriptures are not true, how came they there? These are the questions for scholarship. They belong to a class entirely different from and far less important than the other; and we may discuss them or not according to our taste or pleasure. To assume that a lack of interest in them indicates shallowness is about as reasonable as it would be to say that the man who does not make a specialty of music or astronomy must be a dunce. It is doubtful whether any one but a theologian could have made such a mistake. (It is worthy of remark that the special training which, in matters of science, justly gives weight and authority to opinions is often, for obvious reasons, a hindrance rather than a help to the right understanding of what is important in religion.)

I cannot close this "screed" without calling attention to Hume's famous essay on miracles, as being a fine example of the common-sense method of dealing with religious superstitions. There is not a particle of the "scholarly" element in the whole groundwork of his argument. It is one of those compositions that "anybody can write"—that is, the leading ideas are such as might occur to any thoughtful person; and yet the genius and learning of this great free-thinker enabled him to weave these common thoughts into an argument so clear, and forcible, and convincing, that it will never be forgotten. It is but just to say—and I mean no flattery—that similar commendation is due to the editorial writers for THE INDEX. They are scholars, every one; but they are something more. They are sturdy thinkers, who impress the "unlettered sceptics" not by superfluous displays of learning, or by flings at those whose educational advantages have not been equal to theirs, but by the facility with which they express our own best thoughts much better than we could express them ourselves.

C. E. M.

THE NEWCASTLE Chronicle gives a full report of a fine lecture by Henry Vincent, in which it says: "The lecturer came next to speak of the struggles for the freedom of the press, and the efforts of Thomas Jonathan Wooler and William Carpenter to establish an unstamped paper. Wooler published his Black Dwarf, and Carpenter brought out, in 1829, Carpenter's Political Letter, without the tax, price twopence; but the paper was seized, and Carpenter was put in prison. Then the late Henry Hetherington, the true friend of the working classes, brought out his Poor Man's Guardian, a paper which many would yet remember, and which was conducted by Bronterre O'Brien, a man of great talent in the use of his pen. The price was one penny, without the tax. The Guardian sold immensely, and did a world of good; but the press and types were seized, all connected with it were fined and imprisoned, and the paper was put down. The battle for the unstamped press was waxing warm when the lecturer got into his young manhood. Then it was that Hetherington brought out his Twopenny Dispatch, published in defiance of the law, to test the power of public opinion in favor of a free and untaxed press. He had four or five printing-offices and four or five sets of types and presses; and although the paper was seized in one place, its composition and publication went on in another. Then the lecturer's father-in-law, John Cleave, brought out Cleave's Gazette, price twopence. A crowd of other papers followed. The great difficulty was how to sell them. A squadron of boys was organized for this purpose, and these boys were the precursors of the shoeblack brigades. He had seen them have five hundred men and boys in jail at one and the same time for selling unstamped newspapers. Many were the devices he had seen tried to get the papers out of London. Sometimes they were sent out in clothes baskets, as if they were clothes going to the wash; but the favorite mode was to get up a funeral, with large hearse, mourning coaches, and mutes, and thus smuggle the newspapers out of London. Many such funerals had he attended as a mourner overcome with sorrow and weakness, until they got out of London, and then they flooded the country with unstamped newspapers. . . . People now-a-days seldom thought of the battle which had been fought before a free press was got, seldom thought that five hundred men and boys had been in prison at one time on behalf of the privileges which the present generation enjoyed." We regret that Mr. Vincent did not add the names of Richard Carlile and James Watson to the list of warriors for a free press.—London National Reformer.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12	Insertions, 10c per line.
" 13 " 25	"	8	"	"
" 26 " 51	"	6	"	"
" 52	"	5	"	"

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.

TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,

has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, assisted by ABRAM W. STEVENS, with the following list of ditorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
THOMAS W. HIGGINSON, Newport, R.I.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 4.

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

ASSOCIATE EDITOR:

ABRAM WALTER STEVENS.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
T. W. HIGGINSON, Newport, R.I.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
F. W. NEWMAN, England.
CHARLES VOYSEY, England.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS,

OF THE

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. Abbot, D. A. Wasson, T. W. Higginson, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. Wasson on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. Abbot, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. Wasson on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. Abbot on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age;" an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. Higginson on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potter on "Religion Old and New in India;" also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonneschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Sympathy of Religions, by T. W. Higginson. 25 cents.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 10 cents, singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

Price.

ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets 1.50
Concord Days 1.50
Records of a School. A new edition 1.50

ALCOTT (LOUISA M). Little Women. Two vols 3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories 1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl 1.50
Little Men 1.50
My Boys, &c 1.00
Shawl-Straps 1.00
Work; A Story of Experience 1.75

ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS. 1.50

ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism 2.00
New Poems 2.00
Literature and Dogma 1.50

AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. 1.50
Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine 2.00
Edelweiss 1.00
German Tales 1.00

BACON'S Essays 1.25

BAGEHOT on the English Constitution 2.25
Physics and Politics 1.50

BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy 1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol 1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol 5.00

BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms. 2.50

BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations 3.00

BARTOL (Rev. C. A). Radical Problems 2.00
The Rising Faith 2.00

BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols 5.00

BIBLE in the Public Schools.
Records, Arguments, and Decision in the case of John D. Minor et al. vs. the Board of Education of the city of Cincinnati: et al. in the Supreme Court of the City of Cincinnati 2.00
Arguments of Ramsey, Sage and King in favor of the use of the Bible ..... .50
Arguments of Stallo, Hoadley and Mathews against the use of the Bible ..... .50
The Opinion and Decision of the Supreme Court of Ohio in the above case ..... .25

BRACKETT (ANNA C.) The Education of American Girls ....

BROOKS' (CHARLES T.) Translations. The Layman's Breviary 2.25
The World-Priest 2.25
The Tall Student ..... .75

BUECHNER'S Force and Matter 3.25

BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols 6.00

CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol ..... .90

CARPENTER (DR. W. B.) The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions 3.00

CERVANTES' Don Quixote 1.50

CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing 1.50

CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet Naturalist. With Memorial Verse. 2.00

CHENEY (Mrs. E. D). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside 1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience 1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated 1.50

CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions 3.00
Common-Sense in Religion 2.00

CLARKE (Dr. E. H.) Sex in Education 1.25

CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World ..... .75

COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. 3.00
Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays 5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age ..... .20

CONWAY (MONCURE D.) The Earthward Pilgrimage 1.75

CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol 2.00

CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE; Its True Aims and Requirements A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans 2.00

DALL (Mrs. CAROLINE H). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship 2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies" 1.50
The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor" 1.00

DARWIN'S Origin of Species 2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols 4.00
Journal of Researches 2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals 3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated 6.00

DESCARTES (RENE.) Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences 2.25

DICKENS' Child's History of England 1.50

DUHRING (JULIA.) Philosophers and Fools. A Study 2.00

ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each 1.00
Comprising—
Adam Bede.
Romola.
The Mill on the Floss.
Felix Holt.
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life.
The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols 3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols 3.50
Wit and Wisdom of 1.25
The Spanish Gypsy 1.50
How Lisa Loved the King ..... .50

EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.. 2.00
Essays. Second Series 2.00
Miscellanies 2.00
Representative Men 2.00
English Traits 2.00
Conduct of Life 2.00
Poems. With Portrait 2.00
May-day and Other Pieces 2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold 1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold 1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols 5.00
Society and Solitude 2.00

EVANS (E. P., Ph. D). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanase Coquerel the Younger 1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols 5.00

FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion 2.00

FEUERBACH (LUDWIG.) The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation. 3.00

FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.. 2.00

FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity 1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers ..... .20
Child's Book of Religion 1.00
Life of Theodore Parker 3.00

FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols 9.00

GALTON (FRANCIS.) Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences 2.00

GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol 5.00
Elective Affinities 1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols 3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham 1.00

GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life 2.00
Literary and Social Judgments 2.00
Creed of Christendom 3.25

GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait 5.00

HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter s Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France 1.50
Thoughts about Art 2.00
The Unknown River 6.00
The Intellectual Life 2.00
Chapters on Animals 4.00

HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second 1.00
Child World. Part First 1.50

HAMILTON'S Lectures.
1. Metaphysical Lectures 3.50
2. Logical Lectures 3.50

HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol 2.00
Twice-Told Tales.
Mosses from an Old Manse.
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.
The Marble Faun.
The English Note-Books.
The American Note-Books.
The French and Italian Note-Books.
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.

HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers ... 1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance 1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment 2.50
Atlantic Essays 2.50
Oldport Days 2.50

HOWELLS'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey 2.00
Suburban Sketches 2.00
Venetian Life 2.00
Italian Journeys 2.00
A Chance Acquaintance 1.50

HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "'Ninety-Three".. 1.75

HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits 10.50

HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life 1.75

HUNT'S (Mrs. HELEN). Verses 1.25
Bits of Travel 1.50

HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature 1.25
On the Origin of Species 1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism ..... .50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals 2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews 1.75

INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems 2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen 1.50
Songs of Seven 2.50

INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skelligs 1.75
Studies for Stories 1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series 1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours 1.25
Mopsa the Fairy: A Story 1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect ..... .60

INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures 2.00

INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES.
No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall 1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot. 1.50
III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith 1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain 1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq 1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr 2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine 1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aëronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew. 1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D 1.50

JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers. 1.50

JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India 5.00

JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian 2.50

JOWETT. The Dialognes of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols 12.00

KERR (ORPHEUS C). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous 2.00

LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols 4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols 6.00

LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings 4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics 2.00

LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham 1.50

LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. 3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols 4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed 3.00

LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life. 1.50

LEWIN (Rev. RAPHAEL, D'C). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews 1.00

LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols 4.00
Prose Works. Portrait 4.00

LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols 4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series 1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series 1.50
Among my Books 2.00
My Study Windows 2.00

LOWELL (Mrs. A. C.) Posies for Children. .75

LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man.. 2.00
Pre-historic Times 5.00

LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols 8.00
Elements of Geology 3.50

MACDONALD (GEORGE.) The Vicar's Daughter 1.50

MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife 3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. 3.00
Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848 ..... 3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann 1.25

MARTINEAU (JAMES.) Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol 2.50
The New Affinities of Faith ..... .25

MAURICE (Rev. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind ..... .75

MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire 1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations 1.50

MILL (JOHN STUART.) Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each 2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each 2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. 1.50
Political Economy. New and revised edition 2.50
The Subjection of Women 1.25
Essay on Liberty 1.25
Representative Government 1.50
Autobiography 2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works ... 1.0

MILLER (JOAQUIN.) Songs of the Sierras. 1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands 1.50

MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species 1.75

MORLEY (Prof. JOHN.) Voltaire 2.00
Rousseau. 2 vols 5.00

MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-Time Stories 1.50

MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series 2.50
The Same. Second Series 3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume 2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion 2.00

NASBY (PETROLEUM V). Swingin' Round the Cirkle 1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky 1.50

NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy 4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed 2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations.. 2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy 1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical 4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism. .25
Against Hero-Making in Religion ..... .25

PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion 1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols 4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols 3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings 1.50
Historic Americans,—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham... 1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence... 1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations,—A.D. I. and MDCCCLV. A Christmas Story ..... .60

PARSONS (THEOPHILUS.) The Infinite and the Finite 1.00

PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar 1.50
The Trotty Book 1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts 1.50
Hedged In 1.50
The Silent Partner 1.50
What to Wear? 1.00

PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition 2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates 2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena 1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts 4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc 5.00
The Expanse of Heaven 2.00

ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante 2.50

SCHELLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies 6.00

SCIENCE PRIMERS:
1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S... .50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe ..... .50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With illustrations ..... .50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth ..... .50

SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols 31.25

SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition 2.00

SMILES'S (SAMUEL.) Self-Help 1.50

SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical 1.25
First Principles 2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Æsthetic 2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers 2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed 2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols 5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols 5.00
Philosophy of Style ..... .50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.. 2.00
Sociology 2.00

SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus ..... .25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics 9.00

STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny 1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin ..... .00

STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New 2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols 12.00

TAINE'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols 7.50
The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske 2.50

TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems 1.75

THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.. 1.25
Vanity Fair.
The Newcomes.
Adventures of Philip.
Pendennis.
The Virginians.
Esmond, and Lovel the Widower.
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol. 1.25

This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.

1. Barry Lyndon, Hoggarty Diamond, &c.
2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.
3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c.
4. Four Georges, Humorists, &c.
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unreprinted Pieces.

THAXTER'S (Mrs. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals 1.50

THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods 2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.. 2.00
The Maine Woods 2.00
Cape Cod 2.0
Letters 2.00
A Yankee in Canada 2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimac Rivers 2.00

TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind 2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols 5.00

TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer 1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People 2.00
Light and Electricity 1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps 2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion 2.00
On Sound 2.00
Radiant Heat 5.00
Forms of Water 1.50
Lectures on Light 1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall ..... .50

TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures 1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings 1.50

VOYSEY (Rev. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each 3.00
Vols III. IV. and VI., each 3.75
The Voysey Appeal ..... .50
Voysey's Defence at York ..... .50

WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden 1.00
Saunterings 1.50
Back-Log Studies 2.00

WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion 1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols 6.00

WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life 1.50
Essays and Reviews 3.00
Character and Characteristic Men 1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.... 1.50
Success and its Conditions 1.50
Washington and the Revolution ..... .30

WHITNEY'S (Mrs. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life 1.50
We Girls: A Home Story 1.50
Real Folks 1.50
The Other Girls 2.00
Pansies. A volume of Poems 1.50

WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols 4.00
Child Life 3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place, Boston.

ROWLAND CONNOR,

Having finished his engagement with the Free Congregational Society of Florence, will answer invitations to lecture for liberal societies. Address at

JAMAICA PLAIN, MASS.

THE BOUND INDEX FOR 1873.

The bound volume of THE INDEX for 1873 (Volume 4) will be promptly forwarded to any address on receipt of $3, by express, at the purchaser's expense. A complete file for the year can be furnished in no other form.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A CHEAP OFFER!

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 14 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 75 CENTS.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass

THE INDEX
IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

THE FREE
SUNDAY ADVOCATE.

A MONTHLY JOURNAL AND REVIEW DEVOTED TO THE INTEREST OF THE NATIONAL SUNDAY LEAGUE.

The objects of the League are to advocate the opening of all Museums, Art Galleries, &c., on Sundays; to maintain during the summer the running of cheap Sunday Excursions; to provide during the winter "Sunday Evenings for the People," and generally to promote everything conducive to rational recreation on Sunday.

The Free Sunday Advocate is published in London, England, and is conducted by an Honorary Editorial Committee, consisting of the following: Mrs. J. H. Simpson, London; Thomas Marshall, London; Fred'k Long, London; Francis W. Souther, London; Mark H. Judge, Hampstead.

The ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION for delivery by post to any part of the United States is one dollar (payable in advance). Address

THE FREE SUNDAY ADVOCATE,
256 High Holborn, London, W.C., England.

CHARLES SUMNER'S
GREAT WORK.
PROPHETIC VOICES
CONCERNING AMERICA.
By CHARLES SUMNER.

Fine Edition, Tinted Paper, with Steel Portrait, Crown 8vo., Cloth extra, $2.

Aside from its literary and historical merits, this volume has a special interest, from the fact that it was the last work on which r. Sumner was engaged before his death.

"PROPHETIC VOICES" will be found of great value to all who take an interest in the history of our country, so full is it of passages in which the unexampled prosperity of our land has been foretold by philosophers, poets, statesmen, and orators, of whom the lamented author has also given interesting sketches.

Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A NEW, SEARCHING, TIMELY BOOK, entitled
"THE GENESIS AND ETHICS OF CONJUGAL LOVE."
By Andrew Jackson Davis.

Treatment of all the delicate and important questions involved in Conjugal Love is straightforward, unmistakably emphatic, and perfectly explicit and plain in every vital particular. Mr. Davis has recently examined the whole field of Marriage, Parentage, Disaffection, and Divorce, and this little volume is the result; which now comes into the world because it is now both wanted and needed by all women and men.

 Our friend Andrew Jackson Davis has written a book this time that concerns everybody, and on this side of the great river. It certainly touches their bosoms if not their business, and people who do not care a pin what Mr. Davis thinks of the Summer Land will be interested to see what he knows about conjugal love, and the duties of the marriage relation. His book has a table of contents as attractive as a Delmonico bill of fare.—Golden Age.

Price, in paper covers, 50 cents; in handsome cloth, 75 cents; in full gilt and extra binding, $1. Postage free. The trade supplied on the most liberal terms. Published by the "Progressive Publishing House" of A. J. DAVIS & CO., No. 24 East Fourth Street, New York City

STUDENTS FITTED for any College.
Please address
EMILY J. LEONARD,
Meriden, Conn.

CONSTANT EMPLOYMENT.—At home, male or female, $30 a week warranted. No capital required. Particulars and valuable sample sent free. Address, with six-cent return stamp. C. ROSS,
Williamsburg, N. Y.

FREE DISCUSSION is held at HOSPITALLER HALL, 593 Washington Street, Boston, every Sunday, at 10½ A.M., 2½ and 7½ P.M. All that relates to the Religious, Political, and Social interests of mankind constitute the subjects for discussion. THE INDEX and Index Tracts are for sale every Sunday at Hospitaller Hall.

CHARLES SUMNER.

A fine likeness of Massachusetts' great Senator, tae copy of a recent Photograph by Black, is for sale at THE INDEX office, and will be sent by mail to any address on receipt of the price—fifty cents.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

TO NEWSPAPER PUBLISHERS.

Having conveniences for doing the best of newspaper printing at reasonable prices, I should like to contract for composition alone, or for composition, press-work, and mailing, for one or more weekly papers.

Best of references given, and satisfactory work guaranteed. GEO. H. ELLIS,
7 Tremont Place, Boston.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c., of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing

THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX.

Bound volumes of THE INDEX for 1871, 1872, and 1873, will be sent by express (at the purchaser's expense) on receipt of $2.50, $2.50, and $3.00 respectively. These volumes are exceedingly valuable singly, irrespective of each other; for the important essays and other articles they contain are of permanent interest, and will furnish as instructive reading twenty years hence as to-day. No more valuable present could be made to a friend struggling out of Orthodoxy than one of these volumes.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

WARREN'S
TRUE CIVILIZATION.
Price 50 cents.

PRACTICAL DETAILS,
showing the workings of the
COST PRINCIPLE.
Price 25 cents.

For sale by
S. H. MORSE,
25 Bromfield St., Boston.

MUSIC BOOKS FOR SCHOOLS.

AMERICAN SCHOOL MUSIC READERS.
IN THREE BOOKS.
By L. O. Emerson and W. S. Tilden.

In Book I., which is for Primary Schools, we have a three years' course of study very plainly laid out, with abundant directions to teachers, and a large number of sweet songs for the little ones to sing by rote and by note. Price 35 cents.

In Book II. the course above indicated is continued, and becomes a little more theoretic. The book is fitted for the use of the younger scholars in Grammar Schools. Price 50 cents.

In Book III. part singing is introduced, and the ear is trained to harmonic singing. For higher classes in Grammar Schools. Price 50 cents.

The music in these charming and useful books was selected and arranged by the practiced hand of Mr. L. O. Emerson, and the theoretic part has been well tested by Mr. Tilden before placing in the Readers.

For High Schools nothing succeeds the above Readers better than "THE HOUR OF SINGING" [$1.00], already in extensive use. If that has been used, try "CHOICE TRIOS" [$1.00], a collection of the best three-part music.

The new Singing School Book, "THE SONG MONARCH" [75 cents], is attracting general attention as one of the Best Books ever made for Singing Schools.

The above books sent post-paid, on receipt of retail price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO.,
BOSTON.
CHAS. H. DITSON & CO.,
711 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE.

Our organization some time since decided to direct its efforts for the present towards securing the

Repeal of the Laws

whereby church and other corporate property is unjustly exempted from its share of the burden of taxation.

As a means to this end, we have published for general circulation several thousand copies of a

TRACT

on Church Exemption, being the article by Mr. Abbot which appeared in THE INDEX of Nov. 27.

We have already issued three editions, the last of which is nearly exhausted.

We desire soon to issue

Another Large Edition

of this and other tracts on the subject, so that we can place a copy in the hands of

EVERY VOTER IN THE STATE,

and generously to supply the calls for them in other States.

To do this, we need funds; for, although we have made arrangements for printing the Tract at very low cost, it is impossible for the Boston League, with its various other expenses, to bear the entire expense alone.

Will not, then,

All Friends of the Movement

come forward and help us with liberal donations?

We frequently receive communications from parties wishing tracts to distribute, asking how much they shall pay. To such we reply that the cost to us is about $2.50 per thousand, and we shall be pleased to furnish them at this price per thousand, or 30 cents per hundred, to all who will circulate them. But all additional donations will be gratefully received for the purpose of circulating them gratuitously throughout the country.

Last winter this subject was brought before the Legislature of the State, and many petitions were presented asking a repeal of these unjust laws.

The matter is still in their hands, and at the next session will undoubtedly be acted upon. Meanwhile the

Voice of the People,

favoring justice and equity, should be distinctly heard.

We shall soon be ready to send out

BLANK PETITIONS AGAIN,

thus giving an opportunity to those who have not already done so, to protest against this continued wrong.

Let us make it

THE LARGEST PETITION

ever presented to our legislative body.

Will those willing to assist in circulating these petitions please

SEND IN THEIR NAMES?

We would say, also that we feel deeply the need of

Other Organizations

in this State, to coöperate with us in securing equality and justice, by pressing the "Demands of Liberalism." If, in any locality, there are those who are inclined to

Form a Liberal League,

we are ready to render such assistance as lies in our power.

LIBERALS!

If all will unite and work, the results sought can be accomplished

Address

BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE,
NO. 1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

Per order of the
EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

NONPAREIL Farm Feed, Bone, Drug, and Hand-grinding MILLS. Ten Sizes. Also Cotton-Seed Hullers. Illustrated pamphlets free. Address
SEDGEBEER, SHEPARD & MILLER,
181 East Front Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

TYNDALL'S ADDRESS.

A very neat copy of Professor Tyndall's remarkable Address before the British Association on August 19, in pamphlet form, with large type and good paper, will be mailed postpaid on receipt of TWENTY-FIVE CENTS.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE AMERICAN EDITION
OF
MONCURE D. CONWAY'S
SACRED ANTHOLOGY,
A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES,

has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.

Address THE INDEX,
1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,
BANKERS,
LEROY, MINN.
Branch Office, 137 Broadway, N. Y.

Money Invested in First Mortgages on Improved Farms in Minnesota and Iowa, running three to five years, with Coupon Interest Notes, drawing 9 per cent. annually in advance, or ten per cent. paid semi-annually in advance, or 12 per cent. per annum, annually, free of expense to the Loaner.

☞ 10 per cent. paid on receipt of money at the Bank, or in New York, till invested.

For Full Particulars, send for Circular.

137 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

REAL ESTATE SECURITIES, paying 8 to 10 per cent. interest, or

Investments in Real Estate in Chicago and vicinity,

if judiciously made, are the best and safest modes of employing capital. The old

Real Estate and Loan Agency
OF
ERNST PRUSSING, 143 RANDOLPH STREET,
Chicago (Established 1853),

Guarantees perfect title and ample security in all its Real Estate Loans.

Firstclass securities always on hand. Interest and principal collected without charge. Real Estate Investments made on commission or on shares; taxes paid, &c.

Orders of capitalists and real estate owners respectfully solicited.

REASONS FOR USING THE
EUREKA SPOOL SILK.

It is full length. It is full size. It is smooth and elastic, and is equally adapted to hand or machine use.

Many kinds of spool silk are a perfect fraud, being not only shorter in length, but a much finer size than they are represented to be, and of so poor a quality as to be unfit for use. The ladies will always find the Eureka Silk exactly as represented. Every spool is warranted, and the manufacturer's name indelibly branded on every spool. Call for it.

RADICAL AND LITERARY LECTURES
BY JOHN WEISS,

RADICAL LECTURES.
The Idea of Hereafter.
An Act of Faith.
Intelligence in Religion.
Religion and Science.
Heart in Religion.

SHAKSPEARIAN LECTURES.
FIRST SERIES.
1. Cause of Laughter.
2. Irony and Humor.
3. Dogberry, Malvolio, Bottom, Touchstone.
4. Ajax in Troilus and Cressida: The Porter in Macbeth: The Fool in Lear.
5. Falstaff.
6. Hamlet.

SECOND SERIES.
1. The Women of Shakspeare.
2. Portia.
3. Ophelia.
4. Macbeth and Lady Macbeth.
5. " " " "
6. Contrast in Shakspeare's Characters.

Address JOHN WEISS,
32 E. Brookline St., Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year. LIBERTY AND LIGHT. Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 5. BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, OCTOBER 22, 1874. WHOLE NO. 252.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF ——.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in ——:

Also, as soon as five hundred such Liberal Leagues shall have been formed in different places, to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be hereafter called, in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the needed reforms.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the National Convention of Liberal Leagues when called together.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State; and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

GLIMPSES.

MR. UNDERWOOD lectured very acceptably to "an audience of fully eight hundred or a thousand," on October 11, at Indianapolis. He was introduced by Col. J. O. Martin, one of the most prominent liberals of the West.

THE TRIENNIAL EPISCOPAL CONVENTION at New York have requested the House of Bishops to prescribe a proper posture for communicants at the "Lord's Supper." There seems to be more religion in posture-making than we had supposed. Would it not be well to institute stated rehearsals and regular drill-masters for the occasion?

THE SECOND Radical Club discussed Tyndall's Address last Monday. Mr. Stevens led the conversation. The rooms were crowded, and all enjoyed themselves; but we were unable to be present till the talk was nearly over, and only arrived in season to hear Mr. Morse announce that "every mind is infinite," which made us "feel big."

THE BOSTON Radical Club, whose obituary has just been written in the New York Tribune, had an unusually brilliant re-union last Monday at Mrs. Sargent's. Professor Everett read a fine paper on "The Tragic Element in Literature and Life," and Messrs. Bartol, Higginson, Weiss, Longfellow, Miss Peabody, Mrs. Cheney, Dr. Miner, and others joined in one of the best discussions we ever listened to at a Club meeting.

DR. WILLIAM A. HAMMOND, of New York, who is pronounced to be "undoubtedly the highest authority in the country on the brain and nervous system," said in an address delivered last May to the New York Neurological Society: "Experience has shown that total prohibition, while failing to a great extent in practice, drives men and women to opium and Indian hemp, substances still more destructive to mind and body than alcohol."

"OFFICIAL ORTHODOXY"—what an outrage is such a thing in this country! Yet the Secretary of the Washington Liberal League writes as follows: "There is no organized radicalism here of any consequence, as the class from which the elements of such organization would be drawn would be almost exclusively those in Government employ, over whose heads the sceptre of official Orthodoxy hangs threateningly." Yet we boast of our religious liberty!

THE CONFERENCE of Old Catholics, Greeks, and Anglicans, at Bonn, has resulted in the adoption of a platform of doctrinal agreement which is to be the basis of future coöperation—perhaps. It remains to be seen how much this attempt at fusion is practically worth. But the tendency to re-unite the fragments of the original Church is one of the marked signs of the times, which sooner or later may necessitate a similar movement on part of those who are devoted to pure humanitarianism.

WHOEVER wants to know all about the Devil will find the records of all authentic "interviews" with that eminent politician by consulting the Bibliotheca Diabolica, a full list of works on the subject just prepared with great industry by Mr. Henry Kernot, and for sale by Scribner, Welford & Armstrong, of New York. The author catalogues over five hundred books, in many languages, with excellent notes of his own. Altogether, this is one of the most curious exhibitions of scholarship in existence.

THE A. B. C. F. M. reports 1,021 new converts during the past year. Estimating the population of the globe at thirteen hundred millions and the Protestant population at ninety millions, and supposing that these numbers remain stationary, the world will be finally "converted to Christ" about A. D. 1,186,986. The receipts for the past year were $443,925, with a debt of $30,441. By the date aforesaid, the A. B. C. F. M. will have spent on this useful enterprise (not reckoning its past outlays) about $562,176,838,992. The foregoing may be considered as giving a tolerably accurate idea of the job undertaken by the heroic A. B. C. F. M.

PROFESSOR TYNDALL seems to be a victim of moods to some extent. In the preface to an authorized edition of his late address, he says: "In connection with the charge of atheism, I would make one remark. Christian men are proved by their writings to have their hours of weakness and of doubt, as well as their hours of strength and of conviction; and men like myself share, in their own way, these variations of mood and tense. Were the religious views of many of my assailants the only alternative ones, I do not know how strong the claims of the doctrine of 'material atheism' upon my allegiance might be. Probably they would be very strong. But, as it is, I have noticed, during years of self-observation, that it is not in hours of clearness and vigor that this doctrine commends itself to my mind; that in the presence of stronger and healthier thought it ever dissolves and disappears, as offering no solution of the mystery in which we dwell, and of which we form a part."

THE Christian Statesman admits that "faith in Christ as the Savior is necessary to salvation," in reply to a question put in THE INDEX of August 27, and adds: " 'There is no other name under heaven whereby men can be saved,' because there is no other teacher who has ever been able to win men from sin; and the examination of the private lives of the renowned moralists, Socrates and Seneca, was, in this point of view, exactly pertinent to the question." We must respectfully differ from the Statesman. No examination of the private life of any one who is devoid of faith in Christ is necessary to decide whether he can be saved; the abstract principle, without any such examination, decides that he cannot be saved, whether he is moral or immoral. Had Socrates and Seneca been absolutely sinless, they could not have been saved on the Statesman's principle. Why not bravely admit this? Besides, "salvation" is salvation, not from sin (which the saved and the damned, on evangelical principles, must be alike guilty of), but from the punishment of sin,—which is hell. Are we to understand the Statesman to say that Socrates and Seneca would have been saved, provided their lives had been sinless? If not, the inquiry into their characters was not at all "pertinent to the question."

